BOB HOPKINS Russell's cousin and assistant coach for three seasons, was named last May to succeed Russell. Hopkins lasted only 22 games before Schulman fired him Nov. 30 with the club firmly entrenched in the Pacific Division cellar.

Lenny Wilkens, the team's director of player personnel, replaced Hopkins, and the Sonics haven't been the same since.

"He was a product of circumstances," Brown said of Hopkins. In other words, Brown said, Hopkins represented only a new face, not a new coach.

Wilkens immediately ordered a running game in place of the patterned offense under Hopkins. In the Wilkens' regime, Seattle has won 22 of 27 games and appears headed for the playoffs.

BROWN is the only current Sonic who played under Wilkens when the latter was player-coach with Seattle for three years through the 1972 season.

"When Lenny was here before I was a rookie, I had stars in my eyes," Brown said. "It was a great accomplishment to be in the NBA. I couldn't evaluate the man then. His performance now has been super."

No reserve in the NBA is scoring more points than Brown, who's averaging 17.4 a game.

Lincoln Wednesday night, sport a 7-13 overall mark and a 1-7 conference record.

In earlier meetings this year the 'Cats have come away victorious both times. K-State defeated the Buffaloes in the Big Eight pre-season tourney, 82-72, behind 30 points from Curtis Redding and 22 from Mike Evans. Two weeks later Evans pumped in 22 points and Redding 20 in leading the 'Cats to a 68-52 win in Ahearn Field House.

K-STATE LEADS the overall series with Colorado 53-19, with the 'Cats winning the last three encounters and 17 of the last 18. However, the Buffs prevailed last year in Boulder, 78-75.

Emmett Lewis, who led the Big Eight in scoring last year, quit the team last week but was reinstated by coach Bill Blair prior to Wednesday night's game in which he scored 18 points against the Cornhuskers.

The Buffs also feature a deadly outside shooter in 6-6 sophomore Bob Rutledge, who led Colorado's attack against the 'Cats in the Big Eight pre-season tournament with 25 points.

Outside of senior Larry Vaculik, who is leading the Buffs with an 11 point scoring average, Colorado is a young team, with a junior, two sophomores and a freshman making up the starting line-up.

"It's always tough to play at Colorado," 'Cat coach Jack Hartman said. "They scare me as much as any game we have. They have size and their young people are getting better."

The 'Cats are led in the scoring department by Redding with an average of 20.3 points per game and Evans with a 19.7 average.

Dickey names two coaches

K-State Head Football Coach Jim Dickey has added two Kansas high school football coaches to his staff this week.

Jim Davie of Wichita Southeast will coach defensive ends, and Dennis Franchione of Peabody High School will coach the Wildcats' receivers.

Davie, three-time Kansas high school coach of the year, guided Southeast to state 5-A titles in 1976 and 1977, and four consecutive state playoff berths (1974-5-6-7).

A native of Bridgeville, Pa., the 36-year-old Davie was an assistant head coach at Mulvane High School and head coach and athletic director at Derby prior to his stint at Southeast.

Franchione, a Pittsburg State graduate, guided Peabody to a 21-2 record the last two seasons including a 12-1 campaign in 1977 which ended with a loss in the state finals to perennial 2-A power Beloit.

"We are interested in outstanding Kansas high school coaches and Dennis fits our description," Dickey said.

Busy weekend ahead for 'Cat roundballers

The K-State women's basketball team, 12-12 on the year, has a busy schedule this weekend. They will be at Nebraska Friday, and hosting Missouri Saturday night in Ahearn.

K-State has never lost to Nebraska in seven previous outings, beating them three times last year.

The Wildcats probable starters for both games include 5-6 freshman Gayla Williams and 5-7 senior Kristi Short at guards. The forwards will be Sara Hackerott, 5-6 freshman, and 5-10 sophomore Eileen Feeney. Beth Boggs, 6-1 junior center, will get the start at center.

Feeney continues to be the 'Cats leading scorer with a 13.5 average, while Boggs is averaging 11 points and seven rebounds.

THE LADY HUSKERS underwent a coaching change two weeks ago as assistant coach George Stryker replaced former head coach Marsha Walker.

The Lady Huskers have not won in their four games since the change.

Probable starters or Nebraska include 6-3 sophomore Jeanne Boller at center, 5-9 junior Darcy Williamson and 5-11 Jan Crouch as forwards.

Crouch is the clubs leading scorer with an 11.5 average. She is second in rebounding, grabbing seven a game. Boller is just ahead of Crouch with a 7.3 rebounding average.

Rounding out the starting line-up for Nebraska at guards are 5-8 sophomore Renee Cheney and either Linda Janssen or Laura Tietjen, 5-8 sophomores.

MISSOURI has lost only three games this year, one of those being to the 'Cats at Columbia. K-State has fallen to Missouri once this year in the Plainview Queens Classic, leaving the 'Cats with a 3-1 edge in the three year series.

Sharon Farrah, 5-8 junior, is Missouri's leading scorer averaging 17.6 points a game.

'Cats tangle with Buffs

After knocking off former league leader Iowa State Wednesday night, 74-63, the K-State Wildcats hope to continue on the winning track when they travel to Boulder to take on the Colorado Buffaloes Saturday night.

With the victory over the Cyclones the 'Cats moved their overall record to 13-7 and evened their conference mark at 4-4 while remaining tied for fourth place in the Big Eight with Oklahoma.

The Buffaloes, who are coming off an 86-75 loss to Nebraska in Women set for Missouri

The K-State women's track squad will be back in action today running in the Missouri Invitational at Columbia after a week layoff.

The 'Cats will find themselves competing against North Texas State, Oklahoma, Missouri and national powerhouse, Iowa State.

"We're not ready for a meet of this caliber," said head coach Barry Anderson. "We're going to do some experimenting. We're not going to run people in as many events, but try different events to try to determine their versatility."

K-State's best bids for individual honors appear to be Diane Moeller and Patty Bundy in the high jump, veteran Jan Smith and first-year performer Freda Hancock in the sprints, and Wanda Trent and Lorraine Davidson in the quarter-mile.

The 'Cats also could fare well in the mile relay with the foursome of Hancock, Trent, Davidson and Carla Nealy.

Past and present

There probably isn't a guy more deserving of individual honors than Mike Evans. After all, the perky little guard has been the catalyst for the team honors that K-State has gathered in the past three seasons.

Wednesday night Evans finally reached the summit of the Big Eight's all-time scoring mountain. With his sixth point of the evening — a twisting bank shot off the right side — Evans surpassed Colorado's

No cheers from the pressbox

Cliff Meely, who had established the old standard of 1,940 points. Counting the rest of his 16 tallies that night, Evans now has scored 1,951 points in his career.

But maybe it's a misnomer to just say that Evans is the all-time leading scorer in conference history. Although there is little doubt that he's the best shooting guard ever in the Big Eight, he is more than just a scorer. As a point guard, he's led K-State to a 76-33 won-loss mark since he stepped into a Wildcat uniform.

HOWEVER, in all fairness to Evans and especially Meely, maybe the new record (and future ones) should include an asterisk next to it similar to the one that presides next to Roger Maris' name in baseball's archives.

Meely was eligible for varsity competition only three years while Evans arrived on the scene a year after the freshman eligibility rule was instituted, allowing him to play four years.

To say that Evans is a better scorer than Meely or vice versa is ridiculous. Meely was a 6-8 center-forward for the Buffs and was called upon to play a role totally different than the one played by Evans, a 6-1 guard.

A BREAKDOWN of the two stars and their statistics does however, provide a superficial basis for comparison.

Meely played for CU in 80 games during the 1969-70-71 seasons. He averaged 23.8, 20.9 and 28.0 points per game. He ended his career with a 24.3 per game average.

Evans thus far, has played in 108 games as a Wildcat. His freshman year, Evans averaged 17.0 points a contest, while scoring 492 points. He scored at a 17.9 clip his sophomore year (502 points) and last season the Goldsboro, N.C. product upped his average to 18.3 points per game and his season output to 566 points.

He is averaging 19.6 this season and, with eight or nine games left this year, Evans is averaging 18.1 points a game for his career.

EVEN THOUGH Evans jacks up most of his shots from beyond 18 feet, he still has shot for a higher percentage than Meely, who made his living around the basket.

In accounting for his 1,940 points, Meely sank 750 field goals and 440 free throws. But to make those 750 baskets, Meely attempted 1,638 shots for a completion percentage of 46 percent. His free throw percentage wasn't glossy either, as he attempted 669 charity tosses only to sink 66 percent of those.

Evans has made 821 career baskets on 1,669 attempts. That's a 49 percent average. He is hitting 79 percent of his free throws having downed 303-of-384 from the line.

FIVE TIMES in his career, Meely broke the 40-point mark. Four of those came his senior year, when the Buffs were a second division club. His high was 47 points against Oklahoma.

Evans has only scored 40 points or more once. He tallied 40 points on Jan. 15, 1977, ironically against Colorado. The outburst didn't help much though, as the 'Cats lost, 78-75.

Maybe that best describes why Evans never tried to become a big scoring machine for the 'Cats. Instead you could almost always find Evans in the 18-20 point range every game.

The Wildcats have been a title contender every year Evans has played. And it's possible, that while establishing his scoring record, Evans may lead the 'Cats in scoring only once in four years.

AS A freshman and sophomore, Evans took a back seat to Chuckie Williams. With Williams averaging 22.1 and 20.9 points a game those two seasons, the 'Cats had one of the most productive backcourts in the nation.

THIS SEASON Evans is once again second in scoring average. Curtis Redding is the 'Cats leading scorer with a 20.4 average.

And it is Redding who will, in all probability, erase Evans' name at the top of the K-State and Big Eight scoring lists.

Wildcat track squad to host Oklahoma

The K-State track team hosts Oklahoma University in a dual meet this afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

The meet begins at 3 p.m. with the pole vault and will end at 6:30 with the mile relay. No admission will be charged.

K-State finished second behind Kansas in the Sooner Relays three weeks ago, with Oklahoma third. But assistant coach Jerome Howe said OU and K-State are evenly matched.

"The depth of the squad is much more important in a dual meet," Howe said.

ONE OF the better match-ups THE PIVOTAL mile relay could be K-Staters Willie Major and Vince Parrette versus OU's Colin Williams in the 60-yard low and high hurdles.

Parrette and Mack Green will challenge OU's Mike Kelly in the 60-yard dash.

Battling for supremacy in the 300-yard run will be OU's William Snoddy, considered to be one of the best sprinters in the country, and Wildcats Issac Marks and Major.

The quarter-mile features Ray Hanf and Bill Tanner of K-State against Bobby Arnaud of Oklahoma.

features Hanf, Tannner, Major and Darnell Washington for K-State, and Snoddy, Arnaud, Greg Bryam and Randy Wilson for the Sooners.

"I think both K-State and Oklahoma are among the 20 best dual teams in the country," Howe said. "This should be one of the best, and tightest meets of the whole year."

Brad Henson, agriculture senator, injects his observations into the discussion during the Student Senate meeting Thursday night in which the fieldhouse referendum issue was kicked around...and kicked around...and kicked around...

Violent crime victims would get state compensation of bill passes

TOPEKA (AP)—Victims of violent crimes would receive some compensation from the state under a bill approved Thursday by a committee of the Kansas House.

The measure now goes to the full membership for debate, possible amendment and action.

Under terms of the bill, compensation would be available to victims of crimes against persons. It makes no provision for compensating persons whose only loss is that of property.

The compensation would come from a fund created by collecting a 25 cent per case fee on each lawsuit filed in the district courts of the state. It has been estimated that fee could raise about $100,000 a year.

Action by the House Federal and State Affairs Committee came only a day after it heard a representative of Gov. Robert Bennett urge favorable consideration.

Bradley Smoot, Bennett's pardon attorney, told the committee that in the past the state has focused its attention and relief on the criminal rather than on the victim.

"Clearly, expenditures have been directed toward the criminal and not the victim," Smoot said.

Billboards, bumper stickers bring 'I Found It' message

By BONNIE KIMPLE
Collegian Reporter

Bumper stickers, billboards, and buttons are covered with the words "I Found It".

"I Found It" is a take-off on "Here's Life America," an evangelical campaign developed by Campus Crusade for Christ, according to assistant Pastor Ken Ediger, of Grace Baptist Church.

The main objective of the campaign is to bring Christians from participating churches together with individuals desiring a personal relationship with Jesus Christ, Ediger said.

The campaign is exercised in Manhattan with the help of churches including the Free Methodist, Nazarene, Wesleyan Methodist, College Heights Baptist and Grace Baptist churches.

DURING the first week of the campaign, workers distribute bumper stickers and buttons with the phrase "I Found It."

The second week of the campaign includes television specials featuring people such as Dean Jones, Carol Lawrence and Charles Colson.

Also during the second week, volunteer church members receive twelve hours of training to teach them how to present the gospel of Jesus Christ clearly over the telephone.

THE NEXT action taken by the volunteers is to place the telephone calls. The workers call and ask the individual if he is willing to participate in a religious survey. That individual may refuse or choose to participate, Cook said.

If the person telephoned chooses to participate, they begin with a question and answer session and end with the presentation of the "four spiritual laws," a gospel message.

One of the questions asked is "Have you heard of the 'I Found It' campaign?"

THE INDIVIDUALS called have reacted to the campaign in both a positive and negative way.

"I was just really turned off by it. I just didn't like their approach," said one source, who wished to remain anonymous. "I'm already a Christian. It was too aggressive for me also."

"I received a phone call and I found that somewhat offensive," said Pastor John Graham, of the First United Presbyterian Church.

Graham said he does not care for the slogan "I Found It."

The volunteers participate in the telephone campaign for various reasons.

"I see a need for spreading the gospel. I see Jesus as the solution to the problems human being face," Tom Morgan, one volunteer, said.

"People are desperate in wanting to have something to base their life on," Jeff Cook, another volunteer, said.

Andrew Young, Jane Fonda on spring convocation slate

Actress Jane Fonda and Andrew Young, the first black ambassador to the United Nations, are included on the list of spring semester convocation speakers.

Fonda will speak April 11, but no date has been set yet for Young's lecture. Both lectures will be at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium. Open forums will follow each lecture at 1:30 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall for students and faculty.

"I don't know exactly what Fonda will talk about. Her current viewpoint is social problems in the United States. She takes the populist viewpoint. She's urging everyone to get involved in social, political and economic reform," said John Lilley, chairman of the University's Convocations Committee and assistant dean in the College of Arts and Science.

"She's having a terrific response nationwide. She's very giving of her time and I heard she's a very marvelous speaker," Lilley said.

Plans for Young to come to K-State this spring are well underway, but he's unable to give his date due to his active U.N. role in the various trouble spots in Africa in behalf of President Carter," Lilley said. Young will give the honorarium fee he will be paid for his lecture to the Martin Luther fund in memory of Martin Luther King, Jr., Lilley said.

"He's very busy and we had hoped we could have him last fall, but the general assembly was last fall and he couldn't come," Lilley said.

Police charge salesman with bribing operator

WICHITA (AP)—A magazine salesman and his brother have been charged with bribing a telephone operator by paying her $400 each month for all new directory listings in Kansas.

First appearances for Lawrence E. Williams, 24, and Douglas W. Williams, 18, both of Kansas City, Mo., were scheduled Thursday after their arrest in Wichita Wednesday.

Lawrence Williams, the salesman, was charged in a warrant drawn by the Sedgwick County district attorney's office with three counts of commercial bribery, two counts of felony theft and three counts of conspiracy.

The warrant charges Douglas Williams with one count of commercial bribery, one count of felony theft and one count of conspiracy.

Vice detective Bev Artman said the operator, an employee of the Wichita offices of Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., was not prosecuted because of her cooperation in the case.

ARTMAN said that Lawrence Williams is manager for the Kansas area of a firm selling magazine subscriptions and that he had been bribing an operator for Southwestern Bell since March 1977.

Artman said the operator had access to 13 strips of microfilm that contain all directory listing changes in Kansas.

Sadat tours for support of Egypt peace proposal

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—President Anwar Sadat began a world tour Thursday to rally support for his Mideast peace initiatives and seek President Carter's help in pressuring Israel for concessions on issues that have deadlocked negotiations.

"I hope this trip will add momentum to the peace process," Sadat said before flying to Rabat, Morocco, where he planned to confer with King Hassan, a supporter of his peace campaign.

Sadat is scheduled to arrive in Washington today for talks Saturday and Sunday with Carter at Camp David, Md. He will stay in Washington until Wednesday, and on his way home will talk with government leaders in Britain, France, West Germany, Austria, Italy and Romania.

Western diplomats here said no dramatic breakthrough should be expected from the Camp David meeting and that Carter invited Sadat to Washington to get a better idea of what the Egyptian leader wants—and what he expects to happen next.

SADAT insists that the Israelis withdraw from all Arab territory occupied since the Six-Day War of 1967 and self-determination for the Palestinians—proposals Israel has refused to consider.

A Cairo source said Sadat was on the verge of asking the United States to formulate a "set of principles" along the lines suggested by Carter on Jan. 4, when he conferred with the Egyptian president at the Aswan airport.

Carter said then that a settlement should be based on establishment of normal relations between Israel and the Arab states, Israel's withdrawal from occupied territory, recognition of the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians and their participation in the determination of their future. But Western diplomats note that Carter omitted the word "total" when he suggested Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands and they say Egyptians view this as significant.

Egyptian sources say Sadat's concept of self-determination for the Palestinians means he envisions a quasi-independent Palestinian entity on the West Bank of the Jordan River closely linked with Jordan.

ISRAELI Prime Minister Menachem Begin has offered limited self-rule for the 1.1 million Palestinians living in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and contends an independent Palestinian state would threaten Israel's security.

After Sadat broke off political talks with Israeli in Jerusalem on Jan. 18, sources said the United States drafted a peace formula based on Carter's Jan. 4 proposals, but that both Israel and Egypt rejected it.

Western diplomats here said they have no idea what, if anything, Carter could offer that both Sadat and Begin would accept. But an Egyptian source said it "is time for the United States to do something" and that Carter "can't sit on the fence any longer."

Before Sadat's departure, negotiations here between Egyptian and Israeli defense ministers on proposals for Israel's withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula were suspended and the Israeli negotiators returned to Tel Aviv.

A communique issued Wednesday night said the two sides would consult on the date of their next meeting.

Over the creek on a narrow beam, townspeople wait for a new bridge

YOCUM CREEK, Ky. (AP)—Louise Steele says she's fed up with having to get her daughter to school by escorting her 60 feet across an 18-inch steel beam over Yocum Creek. But that's been the only way across since the bridge washed out last October.

Despite repeated promises of prompt action from state and local officials, Steele and other residents of this southeastern Kentucky mountain town have been unable to use their cars and trucks for three months. To get groceries, they have had to walk to the town of Evarts about a mile away and carry bags back home across the beam.

Now many of the townspeople say they are going to the county courthouse today to demand a new bridge be built immediately.

State and county officials say they are trying to get a new span over Yocum Creek but the weather has been holding them up.

SINCE last April, bridges over the creek have been washed away twice by flooding, the latest coming in October. Since then, Steele said, she has been leading her 6-year-old daughter, Michelle, over the steel beam across the stream to a school bus.

And Steele's son-in-law, James Albin, said a group of about 30 to 40 residents of the area will meet at the Harlan County Courthouse today if construction on the bridge isn't begun by then.

"We're just going to stay there until we get our bridge," he said. "If it takes us a week or two, we'll stay."

Walking the beam, about 1½ feet above the swift-moving, swollen creek, "is the only way we can get out of here besides over the mountain tops," said Steele, whose family is among the dozen or so here. "If she was to fall off there would be no way to get to her," Steele said.

IN THE state capital of Frankfort, meanwhile, state Deputy Highway Commissioner Otto Ingram said he signed an order authorizing about $5,000 for the county to build a bridge over the creek.

"As soon as we get a break in the weather they're going to put some I-beams across this stream and put a wooden deck on it," Ingram said. "It'll be temporary, but it's the best we can do." He said it has been too cold lately to pour concrete for a permanent bridge.

Back in Harlan County, chief county administrative officer Tip Baker said: "The lumber is frozen and they've had a problem getting it because of the ice. The I-beams are in Whitley County and they're having problems moving them" because of bad roads.

He added, "The extra three or four inches of snow we got last night (Wednesday) just didn't help us any."

Baker said county employees were told Wednesday to deliver fuel and food to the community, but residents said Thursday they haven't seen it.

Baker said Thursday that he didn't know what the holdup was in delivering the supplies.

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or a senior majoring in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll receive an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost you thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have qualified for an elite engineering training program. With unequaled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs in private industry should you decide to leave the Navy later. (But we don't think you'll want to.)

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on February 6-10, or contact your Navy representative at 816-374-2376 (collect). If you prefer, send your résumé to the Navy Nuclear Officer Program, Code 312-B468, 4015 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va. 22203, and a Navy representative will contact you directly. The NUPOC-Collegiate Program. It can do more than help you finish college: it can lead to an exciting career opportunity.

Delays, errors, retrials result

Poor research facilities hurt judges

WASHINGTON (AP)—The typical federal judge has poorer research facilities available to him than a beginning law student—a predicament that can cause delays, errors, retrials and additional expense, an unreleased government study shows.

The study, conducted for the Federal Judicial Center, concludes that if the information deficiency could be cleared up there probably would be no need for many of the 100 or more new federal judgeships about to be created by Congress to relieve overworked courts. The center is an administrative arm of the federal court system.

"If they were operating efficiently, there might be no necessity for any new judges, and certainly not on the appellate level," Raymond Taylor, author of the report, said in an interview.

TAYLOR'S study, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, was submitted to the center last September but was not considered by the center's board until Friday. There was no indication whether the center would forward the report to its parent Judicial Conference of the United States or whether its recommendations would be sent to Congress.

The House will vote Tuesday on a bill that would add 110 district judges and 35 appeals judges to the federal judiciary system. The Senate already has authorized the creation of 113 new judgeships.

Taylor, a Raleigh, N.C. lawyer and former librarian at the North Carolina Supreme Court, said that because of the research problem, many judges are "... like the doctor doing everything from temperatures to insurance forms with no time for treating the patient."

WITHOUT speedy access to the information they need, he said, judges are forced to delay trials until the data is found, or to "shoot from the hip," which can cause errors, reversals, time-consuming retrials and added costs.

"It's going to take $75,000 to $85,000 to set up the simplest library for each one of those new judges," he said. "Add to that a secretary, a couple of law clerks, and if he's a trial judge, he'll require an assignment clerk, a probation officer."

"You don't just create 125 new judgeships. You're creating 500 or 700 or perhaps more new jobs to help a person to continue to operate in an archaic, inefficient, wasteful manner."

The essential problem, Taylor's study suggests, is that law research is still done today essentially the way it was in Abraham Lincoln's time—by the judge or his clerk looking up cases and statutes in bound volumes, which very likely won't be readily available.

FOR A law school to be accredited by the American Association of Law Schools, it is expected to have at least 60,000 volumes. Yet, the collections of the U.S. appeals courts range from 20,803 to 40,549, the report says.

Below the Supreme Court, which has its own library, the federal courts have 2.8 million lawbooks in their collection, which is the largest inventory in a single system anywhere. However, the study shows, there is wholesale duplication and uneven distribution.

Carter, Sadat finish talks; U.S. reaffirms neutrality

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter wound up a weekend of talks with Anwar Sadat on Sunday, saying he has a better understanding of Sadat's concerns, but reaffirming the U.S. role as that of "a friend of both sides" in the stalled Egyptian-Israeli peace talks.

Carter and Sadat returned to the White House from Camp David, Md., at 4:38 p.m., as dusk settled on Washington. Initially, the two were scheduled to return at 3:30. But Rex Granum, White House deputy press secretary, said they decided to delay their departure "because of a desire to have additional time to talk."

After escorting the Egyptian leader onto the South Lawn, Carter announced that there was complete agreement between himself and Sadat about a mutual determination to work toward a peace settlement in the Middle East. He placed a friendly hand on Sadat's shoulders, then guided his guest into the White House.

SADAT, wearing a dark overcoat, stood silently at Carter's side and offered no remarks, either on the South Lawn or later at Blair House, the official residence for visiting government leaders.

At the White House, a statement distributed to reporters said that Carter and Sadat, over two days of extensive talks at the presidential retreat in the snow-bound Camp David, had carefully considered the further steps necessary to achieve a settlement.

No details were given, however, as the administration maintained a virtual news blackout on the summit that had been surrounded by an aura of mystery and tight security.

The statement, issued in the U.S. name alone, reaffirmed the impression given by American officials that there is no basic change in U.S. policy nor any inclination by this country to force peace terms on Israel.

THE TALKS produced at least one concrete result. It was announced that Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, will return to the Middle East in the near future to continue working on a declaration of principles between Egypt and Israel. The peace talks broke down January 18, in a dispute over the Palestinian issue.

The U.S. statement spoke of the "slow pace" of the Egyptian-Israeli peace talks and said Carter and Sadat "will further refine their views" before the Egyptian leader departs Wednesday night.

As a result of their weekend talks, some of which were held without the presence of advisers, "President Carter feels that he has a better understanding of President Sadat's concerns about the need for the peace process to move forward without delay," the statement said.

At the same time, it said, Carter gave Sadat a detailed explanation of "how the U.S. envisages its role and responsibilities in the peace process as a friend of both sides ..."

Survey reveals Senate opposition to Panama Canal treaty ratification

WASHINGTON (AP)—A new survey shows that 31 U.S. senators are either opposed to the Panama Canal treaty or are leaning against it, only three votes shy of the 34 needed to block ratification.

A questionnaire sent to all senators by The Associated Press also shows that 41 favor the pact and eight are leaning toward ratification. Twenty-four senators indicated they are opposed to the treaty, while seven others said they were leaning against it.

That means the fate of the pact—a major Carter administration foreign policy objective—may rest with 20 senators who are not ready to take a public position.

AMONG them are some of the Senate's most influential and senior members. Most of them are Democrats, some of whom chair key committees and key subcommittees and often decide the fate of legislation.

They include Henry Jackson and Warren Magnuson, both Washington Democrats; Howard Cannon, (D-Nev.); William Proxmire, (D-Wis.); Thomas Eagleton, (D-Mo.); Thomas McIntyre, (D-N.H.); Jennings Randolph, (D-W.Va.), and Herman Talmadge, (D-Ga.).

A two-thirds majority of the Senate—67 members, if all are present—is needed for ratification.

Most treaty foes are believed to have declared themselves already, and Senate observers suggest that most uncommitted members are potential backers of the treaty who are not willing to promise Carter their votes without getting something in return.

Sen. Russell Long, (D-La.), the Senate Finance Committee chairman who has fought the administration on energy tax legislation, told the AP he was "leaning against" the treaty.

The pact would gradually turn the international waterway over to Panama until that country is given full control in the year 2000.

THE TREATY debate is expected to begin after the Lincoln Day recess, Feb. 13-20, and last from two to five weeks. Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, (D-W. Va.), said Saturday the pact faces an uphill fight but, "I believe it's winnable."

Byrd and Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker are asking senators to support two "essential and fundamental" amendments to enhance passage of the treaty.

The changes would guarantee a U.S. right of priority access to the canal and the right to defend the waterway militarily after the turn of the century.

whether they would support the treaty with or without the amendments, whether they opposed any treaty or particularly the one before the Senate, and whether they were undecided or simply not ready to declare themselves.

Only 14 senators said they could support the pact without the guarantees of priority passage and defense rights. Seven said they saw no need for any new treaty with Panama, and 15 said they thought there should be a treaty but not the one at issue. Most objections to the pact appeared based on fear that even with the amendments, security guarantees are inadequate.

The only senator who did not respond to the questionnaire was Sen. Charles Mathias, (R-Md.) He is regarded as pro-treaty, but was listed by the AP as undeclared.

Financial issues are generating new problems for ratification.

AT LEAST three senators and perhaps more, according to Senate sources asking not to be identified, are expressing misgivings after hearings by the Senate Armed Services Committee. In those hearings Canal Zone Gov. Harold Parfitt and U.S. Comptroller Gen. Elmer Staats declared that the treaty, despite administration claims to the contrary, would cost U.S. taxpayers millions of dollars.

The panel was told that "direct" costs to the United States arising from ratification of the pact could amount to more than $700 million.

Magazine commends town for first encounter of the strange kind

CHESTER, Ill. (AP)—Nobody could remember just when the alien creatures in 10 to 20 flying saucers strafed Chester and left it in a pile of rubble, but just the same townsfolk accepted an award from Official UFO, the magazine that swears it really happened.

About 75 of Chester's 5,300 citizens turned out Saturday at City Hall to receive the magazine's "Letter of Appreciation" for their cooperation in the investigation of the village's "destruction" last year.

The crowd was somewhat below Official UFO's projection. It had promised "an immense crowd, numbering 20,000 to 30,000 people" to greet "famed war hero Ed Ferrar and his team of UFO investigators."

FERRAR said he was a World War II flying ace in Europe and now is a tennis professional in New York. After his speech, Ferrar collapsed, having succumbed, he said, to forces from outer space.

"I have an idea they (the forces) didn't want any more said," he explained.

A helicopter also arrived for the festivities, much to the delight of the crowd that consisted mainly of children. "I came to see the helicopter," said Thomas Welge, 7.

Police Chief Harold Howie was on hand to receive a sealed envelope that the magazine, based in

New York, said contained the names of 50 people who witnessed the attack on Aug. 2, 1977.

"I'll give it to the mayor," Howie said.

MAYOR Stanley Macieski did not attend but was said to have grave doubts about the incident.

One resident conjectured the mayor was probably upset that the aliens rebuilt Chester exactly as it had been, passing by a good opportunity for urban renewal.

On that bleak day in August, the magazine said in its January issue, saucers swooped down on the town on the banks of the Mississippi river, about 75 miles southeast of St. Louis, "and burned it to the ground, disrupting normal communications and causing mass panic."

However, a statue of "Popeye the Sailor Man," erected in honor of Elzie Segar, the cartoon strip's creator and a native son of Chester, either escaped the destruction or was restructured in a park.

A KEY ingredient in Official UFO's case is a series of pictures in the magazine purporting to show the saucer attack. Unfortunately, those showing evidence of the extraterrestrial phenomena were blurred.

Other photos were clear. One, of a modern globular water tower, was captioned: "This weird object near the entrance of the Chester Mental Health Center has been giving off a weird glow" since August.

No one thumbing through the magazine distributed free to townspeople could recall the incident. But, said Official UFO, that was because after the disaster Chester was "mysteriously, frighteningly ... somehow resurrected and the memory of the event was erased from all but a select group of minds."

Public criticizes media, businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans don't think very highly of the business community, the news media and the federal bureaucracy, but many feel the need for government protection, a survey sponsored by U.S. News & World Report shows.

All 25 areas of the public sector identified in the magazine poll, including professionals, labor and education, scored less than 50 percent when respondents were asked about their ability and integrity.

While most persons surveyed opposed excessive government regulation of business and tinkering with the profit motive, 68 percent said government regulation is needed to guarantee safe working conditions.

Watergate's 'Deep Throat'

NEW YORK—Former Nixon aide H.R. Haldeman says in his forthcoming book he believes Fred Fielding, former deputy counsel to Richard Nixon, was the Watergate scandal's mysterious "Deep Throat," New York Magazine says.

In a brief entry in its "New York Intelligencer" section, the magazine said in this week's issue that it learned details in the yet-to-be-published book "The Ends of Power" from Haldeman family sources.

The magazine said the book will name the 38-year-old Fielding, who worked under White House counsel John Dean, as the source used by the Washington Post reporting team of Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein to break the Watergate scandal that led to Nixon's resignation.

"I have not had the opportunity to read Mr. Haldeman's book," Fielding, now a Washington lawyer, said. "But I can state that at least any part of his novel that names me as Deep Throat is sheer fantasy and nonsense. I emphatically deny the story and the accusation," he said.

Judge problem before oath

WASHINGTON—The Carter administration's current difficulties over the appointment of federal prosecutors, typified by the Marston affair, began even before Jimmy Carter took the oath of office.

In the hectic days after the November 1976 election, but before the new administration took over in January 1977, Carter's campaign promise to take politics out of the selection of U.S. attorneys was challenged by Sen. James Eastland, (D-Miss.)

A year later, the issue of patronage appointments has embroiled the administration in an embarrassing controversy surrounding the ouster of David Marston as the U.S. attorney in Philadelphia. Marston, a Republican with a record of winning corruption cases against Democratic politicians, has assailed the administration for replacing him, and has won a host of congressional allies along the way.

Yearly income rises

NEW YORK—One American family in five now has a yearly income of $25,000 or more, and those 11.1 million families account for more than 40 percent of the nation's buying power, the Conference Board said Sunday.

In 1965 only 9.6 million families were in the top 20 percent of income, and in 1955 there were 8.4 million families in what the Conference Board described as the nation's income elite.

Measured in present-day dollars, it took $19,800 in 1965 to be in the top 20 percent in family income, and $14,900 a decade earlier, the board said.

The Conference Board, a private economic research organization, published the findings in its monthly magazine.

Honeymoon ends in tragedy

LOS ANGELES—The brief marriage of Miguel and Cathy Garcia was ended by a 50-foot tumble in an amusement park gondola that killed the groom and left the bride in critical condition Sunday, officials said.

Garcia, 23, of suburban Rosemead, died of internal injuries and multiple fractures Saturday, just three hours after the skybucket at Magic Mountain amusement park dropped from its cable 100 yards from the tower where the newlyweds had entered alone.

The couple had driven from their wedding to the park 25 miles northwest of Los Angeles to begin their honeymoon, spokesmen said.

Mrs. Garcia, 24, of Chicago, underwent surgery for internal injuries Saturday night.

Carter and Bell should now explain

There's an old saying that grew popular during the Nixon years (during his campaigns and time as President) that goes something like, "It's the really big lie that the public will swallow, so if you're going to put one over on the people, make it a big one."

(An example of the "Big Lie" principle was the poker-faced announcement by White House officials that the erasing of the Nixon tapes was "accidental.")

It seems that the Big Lie principle is still in use in Washington.

Attorney General Griffen Bell announced Saturday that he had "let President Carter down" by not knowing who was under investigation by U.S. Attorney David Marston (of Philadelphia) at the time Bell dismissed Marston.

Bell said he has considered resigning because of the controversy concerning the Marston affair.

IT IS INCREDIBLE that the Attorney General of the United States could think of no better alibi for the hatchet-job he performed on Marston than "I didn't know who he had under investigation at the time."

President Carter knew.

President Carter recently confirmed at a press conference that he had received a phone call from U.S. Rep. Joshua Eilberg (D-Pa.) on Nov. 4 urging the President to hurry the removal of Marston.

Eilberg was under investigation by Marston at that time.

President Carter then called Bell and told him to "expedite" Marston's removal.

Perhaps the most incredible thing of all is that if Bell is telling the truth, and did not know of the Eilberg investigation, then the fact would have to be faced that President Carter withheld the information from him.

SO NOW Bell sorrowfully talks of resignation, anticipating the wave of pity and forgiveness that floods in during times such as these.

Carter will scramble for the nearest microphone and speak lovingly and glowingly of Bell, pointing out gravely that he may be one of the finest men that the country has ever seen.

But something is wrong here. Either Bell or President Carter (or both) have some explaining to do, because their actions reek of the unethical and possibly of the illegal.

Attorney General Bell should, indeed, consider resigning.

But before he does, he should give the American people what they deserve to have—a full disclosure of the "behind the scenes" discussions of the Marston affair.

Letters, labels and sheep misquoted me. If it has been an oral dissertation I can see how a lowly reporter might get a phrase wrong but my observations were in black on white! I understand that unsigned editorials reflect the opinion of the entire editorial staff. How come you don't have a picture of the gang (mouths opened, typewriters inserted). And another thing, quoting from a pamphlet that is ancient and written by some East coast zonie who has never set foot in...

O, um, is it that time again? That's right, today is Monday. You will have to excuse me, I was in the midst of composing a letter to some fans of mine. Anyway it's time to get to work.

Letter to the editor

Heed reserved parking

Editor,

In the past two weeks I have become aware of a problem the handicapped student at Kansas State encounters.

It concerns the parking stalls which they purchase if they desire the convenience of parking near their class buildings.

These stalls are marked with a number but give no indication that they are for the handicapped.

If the handicapped person arrives at school and someone is in their stall, they can ask the patrol to have the vehicle ticketed or towed.

This does nothing to solve their immediate problem—where to park their car.

I feel if more students knew these places were purchased at a cost of thirty dollars for people with legitimate needs, maybe we would be a little more considerate and not use the spaces.

If, however, students read this letter and still wish to ignore the facts, they should be aware of the consequences.

It was only the good heart of one blind lady that kept two cars from being towed last week.

In the future, though, she will use her option to request the removal of the vehicle.

She is going to rebel! Cars will be towed! Be thoughtful of others, it costs nothing.

Hazel Swarts
Elementary Education Student

There was a bit of controversy printed in this hallowed tabloid during the previous five days of publication. For those of you who were looking for a parking space last week and could not make it to class I will attempt to explain the latest Wildcat war.

During the K-State-Iowa State basketball game a gang of eighth graders disguised as members of a men's (and I use the term loosely) living group unknowingly disrupted the event.

It seems the real fraternity men were conducting a walkout to Scott's Bluff. In order to finance this example of wanton wandering, the entire block of reserved seats were sold to the eighth grade football team of Ness City.

Now you must remember that a covey of inexperience males upon sighting and being in the presence of college women go into an advanced stage of heat (a condition similar to snorting popcorn and licking kegs). Hence these fake frats freaked out.

On Monday, two letters appeared on this page written by two upperclassmen (who obviously forgot what it was like to be young and retarded). These candidates for Geritol saw the real culprits weren't normal human beings but were boisterous eighth graders who had the urge to toss cups.

On Tuesday a member of a rival frat house misinterpreted the headline thinking this publication was labeling all the geeks. Then his message switched tracks and proclaimed fraternities to be the building block of the cereal malt industry and democracy.

And then it happened. As the days passed the absurdity of the letters on this subject grew to the height of Devil's Tower and the very people who were throwing around stereotypes became prime examples.

From the caliber of the letters it seemed a contest was in progress. The person who could be the most creative would receive the key to the ice cream machine and a Massey Ferguson baseball cap.

The most original and prominent themes (197 people won first place) was the idea that all frat men wear rugby shirts and worship the almighty Cutlass on Wednesday nights. One dormie even compared the frats with third graders (the offenders were eighth graders).

Such originality can only result in the labeling of dormies as a group of crybabies who know nothing of fashion (the best dressed frat is into down) and as a collection of nocturnal elevator jockeys.

I take no sides. Hopefully, I have explained the real truth behind all of these preposterous letters (which began on Tuesday). Now if one more of these inane letters is printed I will begin an all-out war on facial hair.

By the way, this Saturday Manhattan will be flooded by thrill seekers from down river. After KSU downs Cosmo U., tours will be conducted of the sheep pens. Tickets still available. This is the perfect gift for that out-of-town friend who has everything.

A tool for democracy

WASHINGTON — Imagine this: a group of K-State students, upset with the placement of the planned recreation complex and anxious for a new fieldhouse to be constructed, draws up a petition to build a fieldhouse in place of the rec complex.

The petition is signed by a percentage of students and goes before the student body at the next Student Senate election. The measure passes, bypassing any deliberation by Student Senators during their weekly sessions in the Big Eight room, and goes directly to upper University authorities with the same weight as a bill passed by Student Senate.

Sound half-cocked? It's not. In fact, such a direct legislative process, known as the initiative, is already working in 23 states, and movement is underway on Capitol Hill in the form of House and Senate Joint Resolutions for a national amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Even Kansas won't be immune from the initiative fever, according to lobbyists for Initiative America, who claim a state initiative will be a major issue in upcoming Kansas gubernatorial campaign.

THE PROPOSED Constitutional amendment calls for certain criteria to be met. Three percent of the voting population from the last presidential election, from at least 10 states, would have to sign validated petitions within an 18-month period before a proposal could be placed on the ballot. It would go before the people at the next general election. Using 1976 as a base year, this would require 2.45 million signatures on the petition.

The national initiative creates nightmares of two and a half million overzealous citizens outlawing anything from abortion to welfare. It's frightening to imagine what could have happened during the McCarthy 'Red Scare' period or during the birth of the civil rights movement, when emotionalism ran rampant. But one has to keep in mind that the United States is a democracy where the people supposedly govern. The concept of a national initiative is as American as apple pie, and its sponsors claim it is entrenched in the First Amendment right to 'petition the government for a redress of grievances.'

Sen. James Abourezk (D-SD) hails the national initiative as a process which would give the public a 'tool for the more direct control of their government.' Abourezk, sponsor of the amendment in the Senate, says that "without voter initiative only a few hundred people on Capitol Hill are involved in making laws which affect the lives of 200 million Americans."

THE SENATOR has a valid point, and the rumblings of he and others crusading for the national initiative in the House and Senate will become thunderous in the next year as support mounts among the citizens and legislators.

The nightmares mentioned earlier are just that—nightmares.

The initiative process is not without safeguards. For instance, the tremendous number of signatures required on a petition makes it difficult for special interest groups or radical minorities to get issues on the ballot. If by chance faulty legislation does make it through the process to become law, the Supreme Court is still there to exercise the same power it exercises over unconstitutional legislation passed by Congress.

The initiative has endured a 60-year test on the state level, producing a diversity of liberal and conservative legislation, and has passed with good marks. Rooted in the belief that those who elect lawmakers also have the intelligence to make laws, the initiative has become a means for direct access to government.

In this post-Watergate era of disillusionment and dissatisfaction, what could be better on the national level than making democracy a reality?

Car parking lunacy

Editor,

Now that winter is here, it appears we need more than the annual tips on safe driving on ice and snow. Here at the University there should be some instruction on how to park a car correctly.

Good grief! I have never seen such a mess as the West Stadium parking lot has been lately, and I've spent winters in New York, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts.

This morning (Wed.) it was impossible to drive down at least three different lanes because of cars with their rear-ends hanging out.

This is not only an inconvenience, but tends to be a bit dangerous when cars have to back out of these blocked lanes.

Then there are the dullards who figure, "Well, the lot's already screwed up, so I might as well screw it up some more."

These people reason that if two cars can park in one row, front end to front end, then there is probably room for one more car, even if it does hang over a little bit. Brilliant.

The Collegian invites and encourages all readers to write letters to the editor and respond to Collegian editorial comments.

All letters must be signed and proper identification must be included. This would include title or classification, major and telephone number.

All letters must be received by noon the day before publication.

Readers may mail letters to Kedzie 103 or present them at the editorial desk in the newsroom in Kedzie Hall.

The Collegian reserves the right to select and to edit letters for length and in accordance with Collegian style.

Yes, the lines are partially obscured, because obviously no one wants to bother plowing the parking lots.

But a little common sense should alleviate the problem: just park parallel to the car next to yours.

Very simple, and we end up with orderly parking spaces that everyone can get to.

Okay, it's a minor problem, but I resent being irritated so early in the morning by a few inconsiderate drones who can't park their blasted car properly.

Maybe the University should offer a course in "Remedial Parking I."

And make it required!

Movement picking up speed to shatter the macho image

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

Everyone knows that healthy American males drink their whiskey straight, have robust sex six nights a week, drive screaming muscle machines, and beat up anyone that looks at them cross-eyed.

Or do they?

Ron Wright, 29-year-old assistant professor of mathematics at K-State, is part of a movement to help men shed their stereotyped role.

Society has defined a set of "appropriate" guidelines for acceptable male behavior, Wright said.

This stereotype has been reinforced by the media through advertisements depicting the male in his appropriate roles, he said.

Wright discussed a magazine advertisement for a camera company entitled "Double the fun," that showed a man with a woman on each arm.

"This ad...really offends me. 'Double the fun.' How do you double the fun? Well, you get two girls instead of one."

The ad suggests that the man is better off that way, Wright said.

ADS LIKE these, he said, make men believe that the more women they can line up, the more of a man they are and the happier they will be.

Wright said it is often difficult for men to break out of their stereotyped role.

Men should not be ashamed to be soft, sensitive, warm and shouldn't be afraid to cry, he said.

Wright also said he believes a lot of men are getting tied of being "macho."

The 'ideal' for a man is to have your sex drive just barely in control.

"I think sex is a wonderful drive and it is something we all need, but I don't feel that's the only thing," he said.

WRIGHT said most men have been programmed to believe they want sex often because that's what they have been told they want.

Wright was a graduate student on the staff of the Southwest Men's Center at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst last year before coming to K-State.

The center provided a place for men who wanted to challenge the sexism they found in themselves and society, and a place where men and women could learn more about the male sex role and its limitations, Wright said.

The mens center had a drop-in center with books and articles on men's issues, discussion groups, men's support and consciousness-raising groups, and sponsored workshops and colloquia related to men and masculinity, he said.

WRIGHT said the men's movement at K-State is just beginning.

The Women's Resource Center in the K-State Union began a men's awareness group last fall which was run by Dennis Angle, graduate in education, Randy Hicks, graduate in education, and Alan MacRunnels, graduate in sociology.

Last semester the group showed a film entitled, "Men's Lives," a documentary describing the social conditioning males go through from boyhood to old age.

Forty-nine people showed up for the film and 10 signed up for the group, according to Angle.

The group is still meeting this semester with about six or eight members, Angle said.

THE PURPOSE of a group like this is to provide a place where men who are trying to make changes in their lives can receive support from other men in the same situation, Wright said.

Wright said he was in a men's group in Amherst where all the group members were able to cry at some point.

"It's not very often you see a man cry in front of other people. I think that's important," he said.

When a person cries they are "cleansing out the wound," Wright said.

STOP DRIVING DRUNK.

"You feel better when you've got some of that gook out of you. If you leave all that gook in, it just sits there and festers," he said.

Wright will be teaching a men's awareness course through the University for Man (UFM) beginning February 26.

"This course is for men who have begun to question whether society's criteria for what it takes to be a man are valid within the contents of their own lives, and for women who want a better understanding of what it means to be a male in our society," he said.

"Momentously beautiful... It's a simple, comic, heart-breaking and above all universal story."
—Newsweek

Mandabi, a story of classic simplicity about a man who receives a money order, tells how this dubious windfall threatens to destroy the traditional fabric of his life. Sembene's film is unique not only because it marks the arrival of the first truly African filmmaker of international standing; it is also a deeply moving, witty, masterful portrayal of an ancient civilization in the throes of change, a warm, subtle comedy with a series of visual revelations about a world unknown to us.

Commoner says the sun will solve nation's energy crisis

By CARLA-SPEHART
Collegian Reporter

Investment of public funds in the development of solar energy is the key to solving the energy crisis in the United States, according to Barry Commoner, ecologist and author.

In a convocation lecture Friday in McCain Auditorium, Commoner objected to President Carter's energy plan, labeling it as "an exercise in political deceit."

"Carter has staked his political future on solving the energy crisis and lost," Commoner said. "The energy plan is in shambles."

"There is a difference between his crisis and ours," he said. "We have a crisis which relates to unemployment, inflation and economic unrest."

The public understands the energy crisis better than President

Carter, Commoner said, and is faced with it every time they pay their utility bills.

COMMONER SAID he advocated the use of solar power as a cheaper alternative for energy which could be utilized now.

"We must shift to renewable sources of energy and the only way to go is solar," he said.

The use of nuclear power was criticized by Commoner because of its danger and expense. Waste products are a factor also, he said.

"Nuclear energy is in the state of economic collapse. It is not an appropriate way to do the job," he said.

"Solar energy is inevitably cheaper," Commoner said, "and we could use public funds to bring the price of solar energy down."

Commoner explained the conversion of garbage to methane through solar power, which could then be used for energy.

"Garbage is solar energy; a renewable source which we will never run out of," he said.

RAISING THE price of energy (coal and oil), is the strangest part of Carter's plan, Commoner said.

"If you have to pay more you'll use less—this is idiotic. Why try to cure it by making the disease worse," he said. "It (energy) is not something just to be had, but something we can afford to pay for," he said.

At a press conference earlier Friday morning, Commoner labeled Carter as a "failure," particularly because the American people do not understand his energy plans.

"Carter's problem comes about because of an unwillingness to intrude upon the rights of the private enterprise system," he said.

International Student Center sets up meeting limitations

The International Student Center, completed last September is open to all K-State students for study purposes, but limits group meeting to those groups with specific international interests.

John Brettell, foreign student advisor, said the reason for this was due to the limited space in the center.

The center consists of one large meeting room, a small dining room and kitchen.

"Think how many clubs there are on campus," Brettell said. "It probably ranges in the hundreds. If we allowed them to use the center for general meetings then where would the international focus be?"

The International Student Center was never intended for classroom space, according to Brettell.

"We feel it is up to the University to provide that," he said.

"This is the only place on campus that has been designated for use by foreign students," said Joe Cousins, graduate assistant to the foreign student advisor.

It is not, however, to be considered as a foreign student union, Brettell said. It can be used by anyone as long as their meeting has some international focus.

"Foreign students do not have priority over American students," Brettell said.

The initial decision of how the center was to be used was made by the International Coordinating Council (ICC), which consists of representatives from different foreign student organizations, Cousins said.

"To make reservations a person simply has to call the office," Brettell said.

"The goal of the International Student Center is to establish a feeling of international friendship," Brettell said.

Elkhart woman's death may be ruled homicide

ELKHART (AP)—The death last week of an elderly Elkhart woman was originally thought to have been from natural causes—but now authorities aren't so sure.

"I'd hate to call it a homicide now, because I could be way off," Darrell Pflughoft, Kansas Bureau of Investigation Agent, said. "But there are some curious things about it."

The body of Mary Hazlett, 81, was discovered in her Elkhart home last Wednesday by a friend.

Morton County authorities could find no signs of a robbery, break-in or other foul play, and assumed

Mrs. Hazlett, who had lived alone, died of natural causes.

That, however, was before an autopsy produced findings that resulted in Pflughoft being called into the case.

The KBI agent declined to divulge the autopsy results, pending a second examination by Kansas Board of Health officials in Topeka, but he admitted they raised some questions.

"There are indications how she died, but it's not official," Pflughoft said. "And there's a possibility she might not have died as we think. We just want to be on the safe side."

they most often want to categorize me with having long hair and wearing a blanket. But my essence has nothing to do with those things.

"Since I was nineteen, I've been seeking the most optimum way of life. My goal is to come into harmony with myself and all things outside of me. My lifestyle, including yoga and meditation, is only one way to reach that goal. As you look at my life, you should realize that this is only one man's opinion.

"There was a time when I thought I knew it all and everyone must think the way I do. But this was not harmonious. You cannot be free when you try to place your power trips on others. It's only when you allow others to be themselves that you too can be free.

"In the middle of my college education I realized that I had the opportunity to learn many things that might be useful later in life. But my most important priority is not to be rich or famous, but to be happy with myself. All the fame and money would go bitter without that inner happiness."

'It turns me on to live in a tepee. It really feels like home.'

The glowing Manhattan lights illuminate Hough's home and lifestyle.

'Living in this tepee is an exercise in controlling how I feel, instead of letting that depend on the situation around me.'

'I am exercising my freedom to choose the way I live.'

'Before I came here I always had to be doing something. Now, I sometimes just sit and listen.'

By SCOTT STUCKEY

Meditating in a plastic pyramid, wearing an Indian blanket and sleeping on a dirt floor, Loren Hough is living the way he wants.

"I am exercising my freedom to choose the way I live. People are so hung up on having their cars and apartments that they give up their freedom and happiness for things that they've been told will make them happy.

"Were our ancestors any less happy than us just because of the things we have today? We really need to question what happiness is. Does it depend on things outside of us, or can we choose to be happy no matter what the situation?"

Hough said ever since he was a Boy Scout, he has loved the outdoors and dreamed of living in a tepee. Now he is putting his dreams into practice.

"I find living in the tepee very gratifying. I am learning to appreciate the world that our ancestors lived in for millions of years.

"The changes I see in nature are all very beautiful. There's a lot of power in being close to the earth. Mother Nature takes care of us. I haven't been sick since I moved in," Hough said.

Wildcats tame Buffs, 86-80, in potent shooting display

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The state of Colorado experienced a heat wave Saturday afternoon with temperatures soaring into the mid 50s, but the Colorado Buffalo basketball team experienced a different heat wave Saturday night, complements of the "Kansas State Wildcats."

The 'Cats, shooting an awesome 62 percent from the field for the game, fought off numerous Colorado rallies to defeat the Buffs in Boulder 86-80 and claim sole possession of fourth place in the Big Eight.

Mike Evans, who scored a career high 40 points here last year, once again paced the 'Cats with 31 points hitting on 11 of 15 shots from the field. Most of Evans' points came on jumpers from the top of the key with Colorado guard Clayton Bullard's hand in his face.

The only other 'Cats to score in double figures were Curtis Redding with 21 points and Steve Soldner with 18.

THE 'CATS performed like a track relay team. Where one player left off another player would pick up.

Curtis Redding got things going in the first half as he went on a scoring rampage, with the 'Cats up

Sports

6-4, and netted 12 of the next 16 points for K-State, putting them up 22-12.

When the Buffs finally found a defense to contain Redding, Evans stepped in and took control.

Evans hit six straight shots from the field and tacked on three free throws to score 15 straight points for the 'Cats late in the first half to give K-State a 44-37 halftime lead.

Evans scored 19 points and Redding had 16 in the first half.

In the second half the Buffalos keyed their defense to shutting off

Redding and Evans. That was when the baton was passed to Soldner.

SOLDNER tallied 14 of his 18 points during the second half with most of his scoring coming from underneath the basket.

"They were looking to help on Mike and that sprung Steve open underneath," said Wildcat coach Jack Hartman.

Despite an unbelievable shooting night, the 'Cats were not able to shake the Buffs easily.

Colorado shot a respectable 56 per cent from the field and outrebounded K-State 29-25.

Leading scorers for the Buffs were Larry Vaculik with 20 points and Emmett Lewis with 19.

"Colorado kept coming back, but we were able to get the shots down when we had to," Hartman said.

The win moved the 'Cats record to 5-4 in Big Eight play and 14-7 overall, heading into Wednesday night's game against Nebraska in Lincoln.

Fourth quarter surge keys East's comeback, 133-125

ATLANTA (AP) — Randy Smith, the lightning-quick guard of the Buffalo Braves, scored 14 of his 27 points in the fourth quarter to lead the East to a come-from-behind 133-125 victory over the West in the 28th annual National Basketball Association All-Star game Sunday.

The East trailed by as many as 17 points in the first half and was behind 108-96 early in the fourth quarter before Smith took command, with help from teammates Julius Erving and Dave Cowens.

Smith scored six straight baskets and helped his team reel off 15 consecutive points midway through the fourth quarter to take a 119-113 lead, the first time the East was in front since the opening basket of the game.

Erving, limited to just five points in the first three periods, had a basket and nine free throws in the last five minutes of the game and teamed with Cowens to dominate the rebounding down the stretch.

SMITH, who was not a starter, was voted the game's most valuable player for which he received a trophy and a car.

It was the East's third victory in the last four all-star games. The East has won 18 of the 28 midwinter competitions.

Erving, last year's MVP, and Larry Kenon added 16 points each for the East while Cowens, Doug Collins and Bob McAdoo scored 24 apiece.

David Thompson topped the West with 22 points and Paul Westphal scored 20.

John Havlicek, who has announced that he will be retiring this summer after 17 seasons with the Boston Celtics, received a standing ovation from the sellout crowd of 15,491 at the Omni when he was introduced before the game.

Havlicek, who tied an NBA record shared by Bob Cousy and Wilt Chamberlain by making his 13th All-Star appearance, responded by scoring the first basket of the game. He had six of the East's first eight points.

BUT THE West, with Bill Walton and Maurice Lucas dominating the boards and Westphal, Thompson and Rick Barry sharing the scoring load, jumped out to a 26-14 lead in the first eight minutes.

Evans is fourth in balloting

A pair of Missouri Valley Conference stars are waging a close battle for the top spot in the early voting for the East squad and Kansas State's Mike Evans is fourth in the balloting for the West in the Seventh Annual Pizza Hut Classic scheduled to unfold April 1 in the Las Vegas Convention Center.

Harry Morgan, a 19 point per game forward for Indiana State, has received 30,135 votes. He is being pushed by Bradley's Roger Phegley, the nation's number four scorer, who has received 27,827 votes.

While Morgan and Phegley lead the East candidates, Nick Papageorge of St. Mary's (Calif.) has assumed leadership among all seniors on the ballot. The 6-2 guard has received 36,269 votes. Second among candidates for the West squad is Cameron (Okla.) standout John Derrick with 18,481.

Minnesota's All-America center Mike Thompson is third in the West with 15,029 votes. After Thompson comes Kansas State's Mike Evans (13,061), San Francisco's Chubby Cox (12,863), Colorado State's Alan Cunningham (12,508), Nevada Las-Vegas' Jackie Robinson (11,476),

K-State track squad captures dual meet against Oklahoma

The K-State track team ran past the Oklahoma Sooners 75-65 in a dual track meet Friday in Ahearn Field House.

The 'Cats were paced by middle distance runner Ed DeLashmutter and Vince Parrette.

DeLashmutter won the mile in 4:07.3 and the 1,000 in 2:12.4.

Parrette won the triple jump with a record jump of 52-3 and also took third in the long jump with a leap of 23-6. Parrette placed third in the 60 yard high hurdles in 9.7 and second in the 60 yard low hurdles with a time of 6.9.

Parrette's triple jump broke the fieldhouse record of 51-11 set by Missouri's Larry Gray in 1973 and also qualified him for the NCAA indoor track meet.

But in the long run it wasn't the performances of DeLashmutter and Parrette that turned the tide for the 'Cats.

One of the big surprises for the 'Cats was a win in the two mile by Doug Weber. Coming off a groin injury, Weber was clocked in 9:10.8.

Another surprise came in the half-mile where K-State wrapped the meet up with a 1-2 sweep by Greg Glass and Greg Schlatter. Glass, coming off an achilles tendon injury, was clocked in 1:56.4, as was Schlatter.

Next up for the 'Cats will be the Oklahoma City Invitational next week.

'Cats place second at MU

The K-State women's track team nabbed second place behind national powerhouse Iowa State in the Missouri Invitational Track meet Friday.

Iowa State won the meet with 69 points followed by the 'Cats with 60, Missouri with 31, Oklahoma with 26 and North Texas State with 11.

The Wildcats brought home three individual wins and one relay title.

Diane Moeller won the high jump for the 'Cats with the fewest misses at five feet, four inches. Wanda Trent posted a 58.6 for the best time in the 440 yard dash, and veteran distance runner Cindy Worcester took the 1,000 yard run with a time of 2:35.7.

The foursome of Carla Nealy, Jan Smith, Freda Hancock and Trent claimed the mile relay crown in 3:58.7.

Hancock's second place time of 35.6 in the 300 yard dash was a school record. The old mark of 36.5 was set by Smith last year.

Dannon hired

K-State Head Football Coach Jim Dickey has named Jim Dannon as the eighth and final assistant coach on his football staff.

Dannon, 33, was the backfield coach and chief recruiter at North Carolina where Dickey, before he accepted the K-State job, was the defensive coordinator.

Dannon, a quarterback at North Carolina State during his playing days, had two stints on the staff at UNC, his latest starting in 1974. He had other college coaching experience at both N.C. State and Florida State.

Women enjoy successful weekend; knock off Nebraska and Missouri

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

The K-State women's basketball team moved its season record to 14-12 by picking up two victories this weekend.

They knocked off Nebraska in Lincoln, Friday night, 63-57, and then dumped Missouri, 71-61, Saturday night in Ahearn Field House.

Leading 48-44 midway through the second half of the Missouri game, K-State clinched the game by reeling off a string of 15 points for a 63-46 lead with 7:44 remaining.

Wildcat guards Gayla Williams and Kristi Short scored seven and four points, respectively, during the string as K-State started fast breaking out of its zone defense.

"I thought we could get some steals," K-State Coach Judy Akers said of the zone the Wildcats used against the Tigers who are 14-5 for the year and ranked in the nation's top twenty.

"I thought Brenda (Mauck) made some good outlet passes,"

Akers said of the Wildcats' running streak.

IN ADDITION to making outlet passes, Mauck, a 6-1 sophomore, made 9-of-12 free throws on her way to a career high 13 points.

"I guess it just had to come sometime," Mauck said of her best game in two years as a Wildcat. She said her best game last year was also against the Tigers.

Although she was the shortest player on the court at 5-6, K-State's Sara Hackerott scored six points and grabbed four rebounds in the opening minutes of the game to get K-State off to a flying start. Hackerott's five rebounds led the K-State effort in the first half.

Williams, who scored 21 points against Missouri, also led the Wildcat scorers at Nebraska with 16 points and nine rebounds. Beth Boggs and Eileen Feeney scored 13 points apiece and grabbed 10 and eight rebounds, respectively, against the Lady Huskers.

K-State will play Northwest Missouri State in Ahearn Field House Wednesday night.

one member of the U.S. squad, butterflyer Steve Tallman of Tucson, Ariz. "We have more depth and more of a quality team than last year," he said. "This trip has been very rigid for us and the coach has really kept us in line. He has worked us hard but apparently it is paying off in the pool."

U.S. swimmers display depth; women lead show in Europe

AMERSFOORT, Netherlands (AP) — American swimmers grabbed nine of the 24 finals in a top international meet that ended Sunday and Coach Frank Keefe called it the best showing by a U.S. team in Europe in 10 years.

"We performed better here this weekend than anyone could have imagined," Keefe said. "I am very excited by the performances of our young women swimmers."

Cynthia Woodhead, a 13-year-old from Riverside, Calif., and the youngest competitor in the 22-nation, three-day clash, led the way by taking three finals.

She won the 200-, 400- and 800-meter freestyle events, outlasting East Germany's world record holder, Petra Thumer, each time in what is only her first year of international competition.

FOLLOWING the Americans, Dutch swimmers took five finals, East and West Germany three each, Czechoslovakia two, and Canada and England one each.

"The number one goal of the American team is to retain our swimming supremacy," said Keefe, coach of the Fox Catcher Swim Club in Philadelphia, and currently handling the national squad. "Along with this, we must regain strength in our women's program which has recently been overtaken by East Germany."

Former British Olympic Coach Hamilton Bland pointed out that the Americans had their knuckles rapped in the Dutch tournament last year "but they learned not to send an underprepared team and this year they proved to be quite dominant."

Delts, Gamma Phis win superstars meet

The Clydesdales, a team composed of men from Delta Tau Delta and women from Gamma Phi Beta and West Hall won the Budweiser Superstars competition held Saturday at Ahearn Field House and the Manhattan Junior High gym.

The competition consists of six team events and is open only to fulltime students who do not compete in a varsity sport. This was the first year the competition was held at K-State after the event's inception a year ago at Florida State.

The Clydesdales will meet a team from Pittsburg State for the state championship, Feb. 25 in Ahearn Field House.

Members of the winning

Clydesdales are captain Jane Dembski and Laura Barrett from Gamma Phi Beta, Anna Barton from West Hall, and Hunt Barrett, John Lavender, Bob Riordan, Jeff Lair and Mike Littell from Delta Tau Delta.

The Clydesdales won the 880 relay and the obstacle course on their way to victory.

The Clydesdales scored 72 points for first with second going to the Other Team with 57 points, the Bud-e's were third with 54, The Phi Tau's had 45 for fourth and BWB-ATM was fifth with 24 points.

The Other Team won the frisbee throw and the six-pack-pitch. The Bud-e's won the volleyball competition. BWB-ATM won the tug-of-war.

Royals caravan stops here Tuesday

The American League Western Division Champion Kansas City Royals Caravan, featuring pitchers Steve Mingori and Jim Colborn plus the Voice of the Royals, Denny Matthews, will appear in Manhattan Tuesday.

The trio will greet baseball fans and sign autographs from 4-5:30 p.m. in the First National Bank.

Mingori was a key to Kansas City's relief performance last season.

Colborn, a starting pitcher, posted an 18-14 record and a 3.62 earned run average.

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or a senior majoring in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll receive an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost you thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have qualified for an elite engineering training program. With unequaled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs in private industry should you decide to leave the Navy later. (But we don't think you'll want to.)

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on February 6-10, or contact your Navy representative at 816-374-2376 (collect). If you prefer, send your résumé to the Navy Nuclear Officer Program, Code 312-B468, 4015 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va. 22203, and a Navy representative will contact you directly. The NUPOC-Collegiate Program. It can do more than help you finish college: it can lead to an exciting career opportunity.

University For Man seeks donations from community in its tenth year

By SCOTT STUCKEY
Collegian Reporter

As University for Man (UFM) announces its 10th anniversary, it is seeking donations from the Manhattan community for the first time in its history.

Financial help is needed to pay the renovation costs of the former Straube Scholarship house, UFM's home since August, Sue Maes, UFM director, said.

"Our classes have always been free and will always stay that way, but we would like people to give whatever they can to help out," Maes said. "We have a fund-raising goal of $20,000 to meet the building costs."

About 240 classes are being offered this semester. They are listed in the spring course brochure now available on campus and at area businesses, Lisa Barnes, UFM student coordinator, said.

Registration for spring classes will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., February 13, 14 and 15 in the Union, and at the Manhattan Public Library, Douglass Community Center and the UFM house on February 13, Barnes said.

UFM OFFERED only seven courses when it was started in 1968 by Leonard Epstein, K-State English professor.

The purpose of the new university was to give people the chance to try different classes without the pressure of grades or the structure of the classroom, Maes said.

"This was long before pass-fail when you had to stick to your curriculum and you didn't have the chance to experiment," she said.

"It was a challenge to the typical way classes are taught with lectures and tests. The idea was that maybe we could learn just because we wanted to learn," Maes said.

THE FIRST funding for UFM was a work-study position paid by the Student Governing Association

(SGA) in 1969. Now UFM receives funds from several sources, including SGA, the Division of Continuing Education and the United Way.

In addition to the course offerings, UFM has programs for low-income people such as a community garden project and business-skills training, Maes said. UFM is also helping interested Kansas communities establish their own free universities.

"We'd like to see that every community in Kansas that wanted a free university could have one," Maes said.

UFM, which has become a blueprint for free universities, houses the National Free University Network which coordinates 200 free universities across the nation.

"We are probably one of the better models in the United States," Maes said.

New twist to keeping cool—dry-ice suit beats the heat

By RICK DICKENS
Collegian Reporter

Through the use of a dry ice suit he perfected, K-State engineering professor, Steven Cons, may have found a way for people working in a hot environment to keep their cool.

The suit consists of pants and a vest, and according to Cons anyone wanting to stay cool under hot conditions may have use for it.

"Pockets are sewn into the jacket and filled with dry ice," Cons said. "The dry ice is very cold. The insulation protects the skin from burn, but at the same time the insulation can't be so thick as to prevent the ice from cooling the person."

Professor Cons became involved with the idea of a cool suit several years ago while working for Air Force Science Research Corporation (AFSRC). The project involved trying to keep astronauts cool in their suits while working in space.

"I started working in 1967 using tubes of cool water sewn right into the astronaut's suit," Cons said. "This was in order to cool the astronauts as they perform their tasks in space."

In 1969 the Air Force dropped this technique in favor of cooled air blown into the suits.

"The secret was to keep the air cool enough in the lining as to cool the men, but not to get them too cold," Cons said.

AFTER leaving the AFSR in 1972 Cons went to South Africa on his sabbatical, to the gold mines where he studied heat stress of miners.

"The gold mines got extremely hot during the daytime, I was trying to find a way to cope with this problem," he said. "Some of the men were using an experimental Japanese model of a dry ice suit. This was strictly experimental and was far from perfect."

On his return to Kansas State, Cons started working to improve the Japanese model.

He worked with the National Science Foundation in developing the pants and vest project.

"Once back here I started working on the idea of a dry ice-cooled suit," Cons said. "It got the suit functional and proceeded to patent the suit in 1976."

Although the suits are not available in mass production as of yet, they can be purchased individually.

"The suits can be purchased from Flint Hills Incorporated in Leon, Ks. for approximately $50," Cons said.

"The suit is designed for anyone, not just one profession, desiring more comfort while they work under a hot environment," Cons said.

Greek women fight tradition barring church council duty

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Feminist leaders will go before parliament this week to fight a Greek Orthodox Church order that continues a 150-year-old tradition forbidding women from serving on local church councils.

The Center Party Women's Group has denounced the ruling as an example of "the worst and most outdated male chauvinist mentality" since women are tapped only for menial jobs and not administrative posts.

The issue arose last week when Bishop Eleftherios ruled that in his diocese there would be one woman on the five-member council of each church. He said this was logical since 75 percent of those who attend worship services in Greece are women.

Gateway to a great way of life.

A MAN'S REACH SHOULD EXCEED HIS GRASP...

When you think about it— isn't the point of life reaching out? Only when people are secure, brave and open enough to reach out to others does life begin to yield the joy, the fulfillment, we expect from it.

Most of us think we are reaching out: for the job, the future, others in need, the ones we love. But, if we're honest, we aren't reaching out at all. We're simply grabbing for security: a life that's safe, predictable, and only goes so far—limited, and perhaps, limiting.

THE PAULISTS believe in reaching out: to people who need to hear The Gospel, people who are lonely and confused, people searching for truth, for something to believe in—in college dorms, on city streets, in slums, in suburbs, or wherever they may be.

We reach out because we're missionaries of the Catholic Church, a group of priests dedicated to proclaiming The Gospel in our times because we believe God is reaching out to every one of us.

If you think you can reach out as we do, if you think God may be calling you to a life of service as an inventive, modern, dedicated priest, write THE PAULISTS—a group of men who share a holy vision and live that vision in a free and friendly way.

Survey points out city problems

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

Expansion and declining business downtown are the number one problems facing Manhattan according to a community rating survey sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

The telephone survey, conducted by Robert Bontrager's "Formation of Public Opinion" class in November, selected 600 persons in the Manhattan area and asked what they believed were the good and bad points of the city.

Of the 600 chosen, 450 were contacted, which Bontrager said was a good percentage.

He said most of the big polling firms (Harris, Gallop and Roper) have lower percentages of respondents than those his public opinion class obtained.

Sixty-nine of the 450 persons questioned said expansion was the city's first problem.

Bontrager said when most individuals answered the question they qualified it in some way.

Eighteen persons were concerned with the industrial expansion in Manhattan and nine with the direction of expansion.

Ten just said expansion was the number one problem and didn't elaborate, Bontrager said. Most respondents who said downtown was Manhattan's biggest problem were concerned with maintaining, saving and developing the area.

OTHER problems given by respondents were parking: residential, downtown and campus; shopping areas: too few and a mall needed; housing: high rent, availability of housing for off-campus students; and jobs: not enough, not enough industries, and students hurting the job market in Manhattan.

Bontrager said many of the answers were related to more than one subject in that the answers were concerned with more than one problem.

Some individuals, for example, feared the direction the city took in expanding would harm downtown.

City planner Gary Stith brought up a problem that the survey didn't specify what people meant when they gave their opinion on Manhattan's number one problem.

Referring to the problem of zoning, Stith said he didn't now what aspect of zoning people thought was a problem.

"I don't know whether they think there are too many regulations or too few" or bad regulations, Stith said.

Bontrager said the survey, as publicized, didn't show the individual opinions but they were available if someone wanted to obtain the specific answers.

Bill Edison, executive vice-chairman of Manhattan's Chamber of Commerce, said the answers given in the survey may have been affected by media coverage of certain issues.

WHEN the survey was conducted city commissioners were wrestling with the city's growth resolution and the effect expansion would have on the condition of downtown.

"When we (the chamber) took the survey, expansion and downtown were highly visible at the time," Edison said.

Bontrager, however, doesn't believe the media influence persons on how to decide on issues.

"Mass media doesn't have a direct effect on how people will decide on a given issue," he said. "The media put before people the issues on which they will decide."

The media reflect the major issues in an area, Bontrager said.

Respondents also were asked to rate certain aspects of the community as good, fair or poor.

Eighty-five percent—or 329 persons—rated Manhattan's adult educational opportunities as good and only one percent rated them as poor. The number who responded to the question was 387.

Bontrager said persons who rated different aspects as fair usually "were on the fence" and these responses were not as significant as the extreme responses.

He said also that not all the 450 persons asked responded to questions.

"Many people don't have enough of an opinion on the subject to respond," he said.

This point is evident in the number of people who responded to the question on welfare services. One hundred seventy-seven answered the question, Bontrager said.

"Either they don't know about welfare services or they want to avoid" the issue, he said.

OTHER qualities rated by area residents include; emergency medical care (rated good by 68.7 percent and poor by 8.6 percent), fire protection (68.1 and 4.9 percent), day care services (52.5 and 11.5 percent), public school building facilities (41.2 and 8.1 percent), housing to rent (27.2 and 31.4 percent) and job opportunities (21.1 and 32.9 percent).

Downtown parking had the highest number of respondents with 436 of the 450 total. This is possibly due to the high amount of exposure parking and other city facilities receives from persons responding to the question.

Others that had a high response rate were street maintenance (426), downtown shopping (433) and recreation opportunities (419).

The survey showed the direction of responses—whether they thought the aspect under question was good or bad—but not the intensity of how good of bad a respondent believed an aspect to be, Bontrager said.

According to the statistics of the survey 54 percent of the respondents were women and 46 percent were men.

Persons between the ages of 18 and 34 totaled 70 percent.

Twenty-five percent were between 35 and 64 and five percent were over 65 years old. Fifty-five percent rented their home and 44 percent owned their own home.

Not all the persons used in the survey are Manhattan residents. Eighty-five percent live in Manhattan; 15 percent live outside the city limits.

Forty-seven percent of the respondents have lived in Manhattan between one and five years, 22.5 percent more than 15 years, 15.6 percent less than one year and 14.9 percent between five and fifteen years.

The TI-57. The super slide-rule that'll get you into programming... fast and easy.
Even if you've never programmed before.

For the student who requires slide-rule functions, the TI-57 delivers an exceptional combination of advanced mathematical and statistical capabilities. From functions such as trig, logs, powers, roots and reciprocals... to mean, variance, standard deviation and much more.

And as long as you're in the market for a super slide-rule calculator, why not buy one that can also put the power, speed and convenience of programming at your disposal?

Programming a calculator

simply means giving it a logical set of instructions for accomplishing what you want it to do. Programming enables you to solve lengthy and repetitive problems quickly by substituting new variables into the set of instructions which you have already entered into the machine.

The end result is more efficient use of your time in problem-solving.

All this and more is explained in our unique, illustrated, easy-to-follow guidebook, "Making Tracks Into Programming." This 200-page book comes with the TI-57. It contains simple, step-by-step instructions and examples to help you quickly learn to use programming functions to make your problem-solving faster, more accurate and fun.

Child abuse leaves emotional scars

By KAREN HOUSTON
Collegian Reporter
Carrie raised her hand to dispute something her sociology instructor had just said. When he walked toward her, her arms flew over her head in self-defense.

When John and his girl friend, Suzi, went to Aggieville one evening, he was unaware that he would end up slapping her face after she accidentally knocked over her drink.

Carrie and John, students at K-State, were abused as children. Child abuse does go beyond childhood and the possible outcomes unexpectedly show up many times in everyday instances, according to Dr. Ray Gerrard, a Kansas City mental health physician.

Other students at K-State have been the victims of child abuse which has had effects on them while in school. Dr. Robert Sinnett, assistant director of the mental health center, said several child abuse related incidents have been brought to them.

"The main thing is depression, a feeling of worthlessness," Sinnett said. "It can affect the way they do in school and can hamper relationships. It all goes back to being abused as a child."

OFTEN THE abused students are surprised by their reactions to an incident and later regret their instinctive actions, said Dr. Gerrard.

Carrie said she had never reacted in fright before except when her father hit her.

"When my instructor came toward me, it was because I speak quietly and he wanted to hear me," she said. "I don't remember anything except I suddenly felt very scared because in the back of my mind I thought of my father coming toward me before he would hit me."

Carrie said she is still abused when she goes against anything her parents say, so she seldom goes home. When she is home, she doesn't say much to keep from making her parents mad.

Thinking back on her classroom experience, Carrie said her reaction was a feeling of insecurity, since she knew she was going to take an opposite stand on what her instructor had said.

"The next thing I remember was shrinking down in the chair with my hands over my head and looking like a scared animal. My teacher told me I could leave, I guess it was really obvious. It's embarrassing when a whole class know you've been beaten all your life."

David Imig, assistant professor of family and child development, said each type of child abuse can have a different effect on the person later on in life.

Sexual abuse can cause a person to shy away from interpersonal relationships and can alter or make impossible a normal sex life, he said.

SINNETT SAID one type of abuse that college students find difficult to handle is punishment for failure. The student may be overly tense and nervous in class and while taking exams, fearing that if he fails, he will be abused.

The formerly abused student may have low self-esteem, lack of trust in forming relationships, and negative senses, Imig said.

Negative senses, Imig said, mean a person will take anything having to do with one or more senses and recall a bad experience, Imig said. For example, he may smell something which he associates with an odor present when he was abused. This may be the same odor, a related odor or his imagination but it brings the incident to mind, he said.

In John's case, violence was the outcome of his past abuse. He said he quit receiving physical abuse when he became big enough to hit back but still receives mental abuse. When he reacted to Suzi spilling her drink, he was using his father's techniques.

"Once when I was young, I knocked over my milk at dinner and in no time flat was hit in the face with the back of a hand and thrown against the wall," he said.

"When Suzi spilled her beer, I reacted the way my dad did. I didn't even have time to think. It happened like instinct," he said.

WITH ALL the statistics gathered and articles written about child abuse now, it would seem to be easy to compare the findings with those of the 1950s and 1960s when today's college students were of the common abuse age (under 5). Imig said this is not true.

"There were no records kept until the later '50s and early '60s and those are inconsistent," Imig said.

"It was hushed and never really thought of as 'child abuse.' It was 'keeping a child in line,'" he said.

It is known now in every state, one to one and a half percent of the children are physically abused in some way, according to Imig's records. The amount of mental abuse is unknown as it is nearly impossible to prove, Imig said.

Imig said people who are inclined to be child abusers can be detected early. Of the 19 infants killed by child abusers last year in Kansas, 17 were "red flag" cases. A red flag case is one in which the family environment is known to be potentially harmful before the child is taken home from the hospital at birth. The signs are: either one or both parents telling hospital personnel that the child is hated or unwanted, not wanting to see or never asking about the baby, and leaving the child unattended in situations where it could be in danger, such as leaving it lying on a bed where he could roll off.

Flynt finds God; porno days gone

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Larry Flynt, the porno purveyor, says he's always thought of himself as Christ-like, but now he has a new set of morals and intends to expose the "hypocrisies and inconsistencies in modern-day religion."

A year ago this week, Flynt was pleading his First Amendment rights before a Cincinnati jury that convicted him on obscenity charges. Now his pitch sounds more evangelistic as he tells of a new-found religious faith.

"Even without God, I was right on the principles that I stood for," said Flynt, 34, during a recent interview at his 27-room mansion in a Columbus suburb. "Now with God, it's so much fun being saved."

NOTHING CAN be done to alleviate the problem unless family members and friends get involved, Imig said. If a person who feels he is a potential abuser gets help before he has children, he has a chance of overcoming his problem.

John, for example, has found he has a fear of marriage because he fears having children.

"I'm afraid of what I might do to them," he said. "Who knows, I could also be a wife beater."

Even though there are now many agencies to help the abuse victim, Imig said helping the abuser is the best thing that can be done for both the child and parent.

"Sitting back and pretending it isn't happening or feeling it's 'none of your business' could lead to serious physical or mental problems or even death."

In that respect, Imig said Carrie and John were lucky. They are not one of the statistics of children who die each day of child abuse.

But as Carrie put it, "there will always be emotional scars there."

Airlines cut flight costs by abandoning life rafts

MIAMI (AP)—Three airlines have cut costs by removing life rafts from passenger jets flying routes over stretches of water. And the Federal Aviation Administration says at least four other carriers have been told they can do the same.

Braniff and National confirmed Monday that life rafts have been removed from their aircraft flying the Atlantic coastal corridor linking Miami and the Northeast and Gulf routes between South Florida and the West. And Alaska Airlines flies over water on its Seattle-Anchorage route without life rafts on its 727s.

Warren Metzger, senior pilot and vice president of operations for Alaska Airlines, said the FAA gave approval two weeks ago for the overwater route without life rafts on the jetliners. He said the airline continues to fly an overland Seattle-Anchorage route as well as the overwater route, depending on flight conditions.

TRANSOCEANIC routes are not affected by the FAA's approval of the removal of life rafts from airliners flying over stretches of water.

The airlines had asked for the exemptions of the life raft requirements on certain overwater routes on grounds that they could save fuel without the extra weight of the life rafts and that the requirement was not necessary for modern aircraft.

Eastern, United, Delta and Western all have FAA approval to remove rafts from their airliners, but the FAA says it does not know whether they have done so or not. Spokesmen for all four airlines said their planes still carry life rafts.

Sadat says settlement possible; urges U.S. to pressure Israelis

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said Monday that there could be peace in the Middle East "in less than a week" if Israel agreed to return to its old borders and make Jerusalem an open city.

But he foresaw little prospect of that unless the United States exerted pressure on Israel.

"You can insist," Sadat said in a speech to the National Press Club,

"that disputes should be settled through compliance with the rule of law, not by submission to the dictates of force."

So far, there has been no indication that Sadat has persuaded President Carter to lean harder on Israel. A White House statement issued at the conclusion of Carter's weekend talks with Sadat at Camp David, Md., said the U.S. role was that of a "friend of both sides."

AT THE SAME time, though, the administration appeared to be nearing a decision to sell a squadron of F-5E jets to Egypt. Carter invited a small group of influential members of Congress to the White House Sunday night, and vice President Walter Mondale met with others Monday on Capitol Hill.

"It is my belief he is close to a decision," Sen. Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) said, "and I would like to see him delay it."

Once Congress is formally notified, it has 30 days to veto a weapons sale. Javits wants Congress to have the chance to consider the proposal without a deadline.

Sadat, answering questions after his speech, his first major exposure to the American public on his 5½-day visit, promised not to use U.S. weapons against Israel.

Presidential hopefuls differ on senate re-apportionment

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a four-part series dealing with candidates for student body president and their positions on the issues of reapportionment, minorities, parking and the effectiveness of Student Senate.

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

Candidates for the office of student body president disagree over a proposal to reapportion Student Senate according to living groups as well as colleges.

Student Body President candidates Sam Brownback, Ted Knopp, Bernard Shaw, Cindy Thomas and Stan Watt disagreed that there is a need for reapportionment and that it is an adequate way to make senate more effective.

Brownback said studies into the theory of reapportionment haven't shown it to be an adequate solution to the problem of student representation.

"I'm not ruling it out, but right now it hasn't been proven as an adequate solution," Brownback said.

BROWNBACK said studies of colleges with student senates apportioned by living group and by college have had many problems with administration and representation.

"There is a problem here and a concern," Brownback said. "We really want to put in a lot more quality time on it."

Knopp said students need representation by both college and living groups because senate funds are allocated to college groups as well as groups in which all students participate.

"Senators would be much more accountable and responsible to their constituents," he said.

"Reapportionment would make it easier for people in different areas to become involved in student government," Knopp said.

SHAW SAID senate should be freely elected so senators aren't associated with any particular college or living group.

"I would like to see a senate where people could be individuals and represent their own minds instead of forming coalitions and partnerships," Shaw said.

"I don't think elections are as effective as they could be because dorms and houses push their man," Shaw said. "I don't think it matters what section a candidate is coming from."

"Students should be allowed to vote for anyone they choose," he said.

Thomas said the theory of reapportionment is good because it would increase communication between senators and the students they represent.

"It's easier to represent the people you live with because they are the people you are in touch with," Thomas said.

THOMAS SAID reapportionment shouldn't be an issue used to lower the number of senators belonging to greek housing.

"We don't vote on greek issues or dorm issues," Thomas said. "We vote on what affects average students."

Students should be able to decide the issue of reapportionment through a referendum, she said.

Watt said reapportionment isn't an issue high on his priority list but said he would work with anyone who would have a reapportionment plan which would be beneficial.

"I think the idea is sound, but it has some implementation problems," Watt said. "I haven't seen a plan where the benefits outweigh the costs."

Watt said reapportionment wouldn't necessarily improve the effectiveness of senate.

"I don't think we will get a higher quality of people through it," he said.

Commission will consider child care center funding

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan City Commission again will consider at tonight's meeting a request from the University for Man for an Evening Child Care Center, as contained in the 1976-77 Community Development Budget.

The request was turned down twice last year by the commissioners because they weren't satisfied with the program's guidelines for eligibility.

"What the Commission will do tonight, I do not know," acting City Manager Les Rieger said.

A resolution adopting new guidelines for the Community Development (CD) department's community rehabilitation program also will be discussed.

THESE guidelines will determine who will qualify for a grant or loan to rehabilitate their property, and those who can take advantage of other Housing and Urban Development (HUD) programs.

The Commission will set the date to receive bids for a new bus for the Area Transportation Agency (ATA). The new bus will replace the existing one which is rented.

Commissioners will set the date to receive bids on the removal of diseased Dutch Elm trees from private property.

"It is an annual thing," Rieger said.

Notices are sent to the owners of the diseased trees. These trees had been marked and put on a bid list sheet. The owners of the trees pay one of the bidding companies to have the tree removed. If the owner cannot pay for the removal, the city will pay for it and place it on the owner's taxes.

AMENDMENTS to the 1978 Pay Ordinance will also be on the agenda. The amendments will deal with raising the pay for some firefighters, who weren't included in the earlier ordinance, Rieger said.

According to Rieger, an error also was made on the prosecuting attorney's salary. He wasn't receiving the full amount that he was entitled to, he said.

The second reading of an ordinance to annex 36.93 acres of a plot north of Kimball and east of Browning to the city is slated for consideration.

With this ordinance will be another to re-zone 32.69 acres of that plot from A-2 (county residential) to R-1 (single family) dwellings and 4.24 acres from A-2 to R-2 (double family dwellings).

All-volunteer military force exceeds cost expectations

WASHINGTON (AP)—Six years of the all-volunteer military force have cost $18.4 billion more than the military draft system, far in excess of the Pentagon's own estimates, the General Accounting Office said Monday.

The congressional auditing agency said in a new study that there is unlikely to be any reduction in the current $3.6 billion higher cost of the volunteer force annually.

The study was released by Comptroller General Elmer Staats at a hearing of a Senate armed services subcommittee chaired by Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.).

NUNN SAID the 2.1 million-member volunteer military is costing so much that it is taking away from other major defense programs and will inevitably mean a "steady erosion" of U.S. defense capabilities.

The GAO found that $14.2 billion of the additional cost since the draft ended in 1971 has gone to pay substantially higher salaries to new enlistees and junior officers in all the services.

Assistant Defense Secretary John White acknowledged that the $14.2 billion should be attributed to the volunteer force, but said military pay would probably have risen anyway far above the low salaries paid low-ranking soldiers in the 1960s.

In the 1980s, White said, there will be 15 percent fewer young Americans in the age group from which military enlistees are drawn. The result, he said, will be even higher enlistment costs attributable to the voluntary force.

ANOTHER additional cost uncovered by the GAO was $276 million paid because of the high flunkout rate among Army inductees over the past six years.

Contrary to the predictions of early voluntary Army supporters, about 40 percent of new inductees fail to qualify and are eased out within the first 90 days.

For those would-be soldiers the cost is $86 million in training, $75 million in separation benefits and $115 million in civilian unemployment benefits, the GAO said.

The GAO conceded that $289 million had been saved taxpayers through phasing out the selective service system.

Coal strike may be over

WASHINGTON—Negotiators reached tentative agreement Monday on contract terms that could end a record 63-day nationwide coal strike that has shrunk winter coal stockpiles and forced cutbacks in electrical power.

The tentative pact was announced at a news conference by United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller and chief federal mediator Wayne Horvitz.

"I think this is a good tentative agreement," said Miller, emphasizing that it would restore pension and health benefits that have been cut off to some UMW members.

The proposed settlement would mean an increase of almost 37 percent in wages and fringe benefits for miners over a three year period.

Pearson favors canal treaty

TOPEKA—Sen. James Pearson declared Monday his support for the Panama Canal treaties, saying they should be ratified regardless of this nation's feelings toward the government of Panamanian President Omar Torrijos.

"Although we may not approve of the Torrijos regime in Panama, we cannot pick and choose the heads of government in other countries," Pearson said in a statement he placed in the Congressional Record in support of the treaties.

"We cannot restructure the government of Panama in our own image. And, it must be remembered that we also have been committed to a new treaty since 1964—four years before Torrijos came into power," Pearson added in his statement, which his office made public here.

The Kansas Republican said Senate ratification of the treaties following debate scheduled to begin Wednesday is essential to insure the longterm security, efficiency and neutrality of the canal.

Snow quiets New York

NEW YORK—The second blizzard within three weeks pummeled the metropolitan New York area with savage force Monday, bringing most of the city to a standstill.

There had been predictions of up to 18 inches of snow, but as Monday wore on, it appeared the snowfall wouldn't amount to that. By nightfall, just over half a foot of snow had accumulated in Manhattan and less than a foot in Queens.

Mayor Edward Koch declared a snow emergency, a prelude to massive mobilization of men and equipment to battle the storm. National Guard ambulances were called in to ease the load on the city's ambulances which had difficulty in the snow because of low ground clearance.

Subways were the most reliable means of transport. City buses continued to operate on some routes before drifting snow blocked streets.

The great pyramid erection

CAIRO—Egyptian workers in flowing robes laid the cornerstone Monday of what will be a Japanese-built, 36-foot-high pyramid, the first in the land of the pharaohs in nearly 4,500 years.

Chanting "pray to the Prophet" as sand whipped their faces, 20 workers strained at the ropes and moved a one-ton limestone block into place. Nearly 3,000 blocks, some weighing 2.5 tons, will be needed.

Japanese archeologists from Waseda University near Tokyo are testing various theories on how the pyramids were built, including one by the Greek historian Herodotus suggesting wooden cranes and ramps were used.

"We have just begun but already we are one week behind schedule," said director Takayoshi Satoh, who was wearing a blue baseball cap with "Pyramid" written on the bill. "We must finish in 60 days."

Consider options for Houston Street

After 40 years of trying, Manhattan's school board may get Houston Street between Ninth and Tenth Streets closed.

Hallelujah!

Citizens in the Unified School District 383 voted to pass a $7.4 million school bond issue in November for remodeling Manhattan's junior and senior high schools.

The bond money will finance the adding of about 8,000 square feet to existing buildings and a courtyard to the campus.

That's a lot of building for a small amount of space. Closing off Houston in that block not only would add more space for students to move around in but provide safe passage for those who use the gym after school hours.

IF THAT BLOCK is closed during the schools hours when traffic on Houston is heaviest, why not also close it off in the evening when traffic is much lighter?

With the closing of Houston there naturally follows the question of where to send the traffic.

The city engineer's office has several options as to where to send the detoured traffic.

One would be to leave the streets surrounding the junior high as they are and let the drivers get around as best they can.

But this would be ignoring the problem instead of solving it.

ANOTHER ALTERNATIVE would be to make Houston two-way, where it is now onv, between Juliette and Ninth but let Pierre St. remain one-way.

That's close but motorists not wanting to re-route to Poyntz will have to travel two blocks out of their way to bypass the school.

The final option would be to make both Pierre and Houston two-way.

This would mean the school could be passed in either direction with little inconvenience to the motorist.

And the best thing about it: all you have to do is change the signs.

What's the score KU?

It comes as no surprise that our little sister institution down the Kaw responded to Bill Nadon's column (Jan.25) about Cosmo U.

What is surprising is that it only took them a week to compose a response.

Having searched in vain to find someone on the University Daily Kansan staff witty (or even half-witty) enough to respond intelligently, the staff resorted to using a book about American colleges that was written by an embittered Yale graduate who spent 17 fruitless years trying to gain admission to the K-State veterinary school.

WE, AT THE Collegian, realize how frustrating it must be to be number two and by no means do we snub our inferiors.

If members of the Daily Kansan staff would like to learn the finer arts of wit, charm, journalistic excellence and above all, modesty, please feel free to stop by our newsroom when you visit the campus.

Perhaps you would like to stop by after Saturday's basketball game because you'll probably be in no mood to party.

What's the score, KU, what's the score?

Beccy Tanner

Beccy come home...

Dear kid,

No. You can not have any more money. Farming is hell. Your father and I are broke. That's it. No more. Final.

You should be thankful you are in college. Starving children in Asia don't get to go to K-State. We worked hard for you.

On the farm, not much has happened. We just got in a shipment of cattle, Wednesday. They all got shipping fever and died, except for one. He smothered to death when the haystack fell on him.

Your father is now out of the hospital. We were going to tell you—but didn't want to upset your studies.

He fainted in the middle of the night. The doctors think he burped one to many Tupperware containers.

Speaking of hospitals. The last time you were here, you probably noticed your brother, John, wearing sunglasses. His gun misfired. The powder was wet and the blast went up in his face.

There is a new doctor in town. He is a dermatologist, might be able to do something about your affliction.

Oh. When can you come home again? We need you to help fence cattle. Your collies caused 90 head of cattle to run through the Snyder's fences. Your father is afraid they will sue.

The Ray's got another irrigation circle. They had it a week, and left their new farm truck out in the middle of the field overnight. The circle ran over it. Made spaghetti of the system. Serves them right.

They struck oil on the same quarter to pay for the circle. Our land isn't worth anything. Why your grandfather settled here, I will never know.

Are you on drugs? Your Christian brothers and sisters are worried about the type of articles you have been working on. They say you are either possessed, crazed, or a fallen woman.

We agree. You are peculiar. You weren't raised that way.

You come from a nice, respectable home. Stick to dogs and children. Why don't you ever write about us? Are you ashamed? I don't know, God knows we've tried.

The neighbors keep asking about you. We lie. We tell them you are doing fine in school. When are you going to buckle down and get off of probation? None of your brothers and sisters ever did this poorly. I can tell you are the adopted one. Your father would die if I told him this.

By the way, why aren't you married yet? Other girls your age already have children. Axel Hornquist just died and left money to Bobby—the one with buckteeth. Why don't you marry him? All of your children could sip Cokes through picket fences.

We saw the banker this morning. He also said you weren't getting any younger. How do you plan on living when you are old and nobody loves you?

I suppose it could be worse. Guess who just had their sixth baby? One hint. They aren't married, and they live in sin.

Why don't you ever come home anymore? It breaks your father's heart. You spend too much money at college. You can't do that in the real world. Just remember after college, we forget who you are.

And listen, next time you call home, don't belch over the phone. Aunt Mary and 12 others were listening on the party line...if only your grandfather were alive...

Don't call collect. And, please don't use your name or talk about school. You know we love you. Let's just keep it between ourselves.

Don't mention the type of parties the Collegian throws. You know we don't approve. What kind of an organization are you working at anyway?

We think we still love you. Have you "found it" yet?

Be careful on ice

Editor,

Re: Alan Montgomery's Jan. 25 column "Less ice on the steps, please!"

It goes without saying no one likes to see a person have an accident in a car or on foot because of winter ice conditions.

And your accident, Mr. Montgomery, was an unfortunate incident for which every effort and precaution should be made to avoid.

This is an old campus, most of whose buildings have entrance steps.

In many cases these steps have been worn smooth and need to be resurfaced.

But until this is done they present a real danger during winter conditions.

Last Tuesday, the campus walks and steps were covered with a slick coat of ice. I work for the Physical Plant in the Grounds Department and upon coming to work that morning the whole crew was sent out to apply shells, sand and clear walks and steps of ice.

There are many buildings and steps and, just like clearing buildings and roads, all can't be cleared at once.

The workers of Physical Plant did work hard under lousy, cold, conditions to remedy the situation as best as possible.

My fellow workers and myself find little thanks in your criticism.

I would suggest to you that as precautions are taken during winter storm conditions for driving, similar precautions be taken for your pedestrian travel.

If you slow down your driving for bad road conditions—why not slow down your "brisk" walking for icy walks and steps.

K-Staters gain experience by pulling teeth for credit

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

Pre-dentistry students at K-State can gain practical experience and familiarity with the dentistry field through an observation program in Fort Riley. Students in the program receive one hour of credit for 40 hours of observing a Fort Riley dentist during a semester.

"Most pre-dental students don't have any familiarity with the profession other than their family dentist," Dr. John Farne, Fort Riley dentist and program coordinator, said.

"Any familiarity they get is a bonus," Farne said, saying that the students often benefit from learning the names and uses of instruments and equipment. Another advantage for students, Farne said, is seeing how a dentist works with a patient.

BESIDES coordinating the program, Farne is a K-State adjunct professor and teaches a seminar on campus once a week.

"There are few other schools in the country where this (observation program) is possible," said Bettie Dale, pre-dental adviser.

"The experience shows them what the practice of dentistry is really like," Dale said. "Occasionally one will decide that it's not his cup of tea after observing over there. Others will become really enthusiastic."

The idea for the program began "somewhat by accident," Dale said, by an ex-dental hygienist who had been stationed at Fort Riley.

The idea was picked up by other Fort Riley dentists and specialists and has now blossomed into an opportunity for pre-dental students to observe most of the dental specialties, Dale said.

THE PROGRAM has been successful for many K-Staters in pre-dentistry.

"The ones (dental students) we've talked to have had quite a jump on the others who haven't had any observation," Farne said. "I've never heard anyone say anything bad about it."

"It's definitely an advantage for us," Craig Krizek, a 1977 graduate in pre-dentistry, said. "It's the only observation we get, and any practical experience is going to help."

Krizek said he found it beneficial to see different areas of dentistry. Farne, he said, has "done everything he can" to help out.

Farne receives no pay for coordinating the program—an adjunct professor doesn't get paid. However, some of the dentists at Fort Riley say they also benefit from the program.

African film 'Mandabi' is different, but diversions, subtitles bog it down

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Mandabi" will be shown today in the Union Little Theatre at 3:30 p.m. and in the Union Forum Hall at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $1.25 with student I.D.

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

If you're looking for something different, go and see "Mandabi." It's about as different as you can get. But different doesn't necessarily mean good. Or, if you don't get to see the film, don't worry. It's not worth missing "Soap."

Collegian Review

"Mandabi" is an African film, made in Senegal. For some reason, it was awarded "Best Film" at the 1970 Atlanta Film Festival. Apparently, it just wasn't a very good festival that year.

In whatever language they speak in Senegal, "Mandabi" means the "money order." The film tells what happens to a peasant man when he receives a rather large money order from his nephew in Paris, with the request that he cash it and save it.

Attempting to cash the money order, the peasant man, Ibrahim, finds that being a man of honor and a true believer in the Moslem faith is not enough proof of identification to cash checks.

So, he goes on a series of journeys that may remind viewers quite a bit of changing majors at a large midwestern university. First, he needs an identity card. To get that, however, he needs a birth certificate. And so on, and so forth.

THERE ARE some funny scenes, as Ibrahim tries to battle a system so strange to him. All of his neighbors beg from him, his two wives go on a spending binge, and the people in the city are uncooperative. Most of them are trying to swindle him, anyway.

The whole point of the film seems to be that severe cultural shock can hit people like Ibrahim in such strange situations.

The message is universal—it's pretty tough to take it when you discover that being a good and honest man doesn't mean a thing; that people would just as soon steal from you as look at you.

If you are into anthropology, the film should be very fascinating. You'll especially like the part where Ibrahim goes to the barber, and has his head, beard and nostrils shaved. Also very enjoyable is the way he treats his wives—when one of them is preparing to wash his feet for him, she even has to lift them off the floor and into the basin for him.

But "Mandabi" just has too many such distractions—it's too foreign to our own culture to be interesting.

What really kills the film, however, is the translation. Reading the trite and cliché-ridden subtitles and trying to relate them to what you're seeing entails more work than it took to make the film.

If you find yourself in the theater tonight, go ahead and watch "Mandabi." It's unique enough to make it worth watching.

The Society for Advancement of Management invites all students in the College of Business to a Student-Faculty Tea Friday, February 10 from 2:30-4:00 in Union 212.

MANDABI

Ousmane Sembene's Mandabi marked the arrival of the first truly African filmmaker of international standing. A story of classic simplicity, the film concerns a man who receives a money order and its accompanying destructive threat upon his traditional existence. Sembene's film is a deeply moving portrayal of an ancient civilization in the throes of change and, at the same time, a subtle comedy of consummate wit.

Needs of the handicapped promoted by student group

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

An organization has been recently formed on the K-State campus to promote the needs of handicapped students.

The organization, Students for Handicapped Concerns, will try to stimulate public awareness to problems facing handicapped persons, according to Donna Gore, graduate in speech pathology and president of the organization.

Melinda Bailey, graduate in adult guidance and counseling and secretary of the organization, said they have been relying financially on private donations up to this time.

"Our next step is to apply for aid from SGA (Student Governing Association)," Bailey said. "Until we get accepted by SGA, we don't have a red dime to our name."

INTEREST IN handicapped student concerns was generated when a group of students set up displays in the Union this fall. Other students began to meet to discuss problems facing handicapped persons on the K-State campus. Last week, the group drew up a constitution and elected officers.

"We have tried to stimulate interest through our displays," Gore said. "We've got a lot of ideas about special projects we would like to sponsor."

The group has already helped in getting parking stalls for the handicapped on campus, Gore said.

Gore said the supporters of the organization want to create an impact on people to make them realize the special problems facing handicapped students.

Bailey said there aren't many people involved in the group now but she is confident they "will get off the ground."

The organization will serve as a communication center for students interested in the problems of handicapped people, Gore said.

"We don't limit ourselves just to handicaps," Gore said. "We want everyone to get involved."

THE GROUP also hopes to promote social activities among handicapped students, Gore said. They hope to have guest speakers, films and recreation at the meetings.

Jane Rowlett, instructor at the Center for Student Development and the faculty sponsor of Students for Handicapped Concerns, said the group wants to create awareness of the handicapped people's needs.

"We have only a few students involved as of yet, but they are ambitious," Rowlett said. "I hope it will be a success."

The first general meeting of Students for Handicapped Concerns will be at 7 p.m. Monday, Feb. 13 in Union room 203. The meeting is open to anyone, Gore said.

"We are going to introduce the elected officers and vote officially on our constitution at the meeting next Monday," Gore said. "We will make more plans for the general meeting at our officers' meeting."

Gore said they plan to have general meetings the second Monday of each month.

Nutrition research involves use of germ-free white rats

By KAREN HOUSTON
Collegian Reporter

For years, white rats have been commonly used to research anything from cancer to the effects of red food dye.

The K-State Department of Nutrition has also found these animals to be beneficial in researching aspects of nutrition.

Experiments using white rats in Principles of Nutrition lab may not seem humane, but Kathleen Newell, assistant professor of foods and nutrition, thinks the experimenting is the best thing the nutrition department does.

"It gives our students the practical lab experience they need, and the research is always needed," Newell said. "I think it is the best thing our department offers."

"An all-university committee is in charge of regulating the care of the rats," Newell said. "They are treated humanely by the strict guidelines the committee sets up. Of course, this allows for the experiments."

D.J. MENSE, senior in dietetics, restaurant and institutional management, said, "It does not always seem humane but it serves a purpose. The outcome is analogous to human characteristics."

Mense said many tests were done to determine vitamin

Cross stops in to meet LRPC

Gene Cross, the new associate vice president for university facilities, met with the Long Range Planning Committee Monday to discuss his background and get acquainted with members of the committee.

Cross came to K-State from the University of Delaware where he has served since 1973 as assistant vice president. Prior to that time he was with the University of Utah for 13 years, serving six years as Director of the Physical Plant.

The committee agreed that Cross' first job should be the hiring of a landscape architect for the University.

deficiency and various amounts of protein in diets.

"When we did vitamin deficiencies, the rats were in pain—especially those on magnesium deficient diets," she said. "They died within seven days."

Paula Neugent, senior in nutrition, said the class was good experience for using animals in research and said the best thing about using the rats was their rate of growth.

"The length of the experiment is about four weeks and in that length of time you can already see what the tests are doing to the rats," she said. "It's not humane, but I would much rather see the results of tests on a rat than in a human."

AFTER THE rats have been through their testing, they are "sacrificed" by decapitation. Studies are then done on their internal organs and bones.

"You get attached to the ones you feel sorry for, like the magnesium-deficient ones," Mense said. "But the data collected correlates to human studies so any pain they suffer is worth it to use in the long run."

The rats are obtained from nation-wide animal suppliers.

"We don't raise our own rats in the lab," Newell said. "We order around 80 a semester at about $1.25 apiece. These rats arrive to us guaranteed germ-free."

The students do their studies in groups and care for their own rats Monday through Saturday. Sunday the instructor is in charge of the rats' care.

Arts and Crafts Fair, Emerson Lake and Palmer, Bryan Bowers, a photography contest, the movie Rocky, hiking in the Ozarks and a ski trip to Colorado. What do all these things have in common? They are all programs sponsored by the K-State Union Program Council.

Union Program Council is an exclusively volunteer organization composed of students with an interest in serving the university community by sponsoring cultural, educational, and recreational programs.

UPC provides volunteer student workers with a real-life laboratory to test their abilities through program conception, execution and evaluation.

Committee coordinators strive to initiate and guide these programs while developing their own leadership skills.

If you are interested in applying for a coordinator position there will be a coordinator information meeting on Feb. 9th at 4:00 p.m. in Room 213 of the K-State Union. At this meeting you will gain some insight into the responsibilities and demands that come with being a coordinator. This meeting will also give you a chance to view all areas of UPC and talk with the coordinators who are involved with UPC this year.

A handful of top runners; a barrel full of meet officials

By JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

Track clubs are usually formed so the members can train for and compete in track events. But the Manhattan Track Club (MTC) was formed for a different reason.

Its primary function is to provide officials for local junior high, high school and college track meets.

"MTC was formed five years ago," Arne Richards, chairman of the long distance events, said. "Our main functions are one — officiating, two — promoting, three — participating. Only eight of our more than 100 members actually compete in track meets."

All members are voluntary officials. Only the starter is paid. The officials used vary from week to week, depending on who is available.

Deloss Dodds, former K-State head track coach, helped form MTC after the demise of the Mid-America track club in 1969. Merle Schwab is the current president.

DODDS was dissatisfied with the Mid-America club, which was composed primarily of former K-State and KU tracksters. Dodds envisioned a club which would involve people of all ages, boys and girls as well as men and women.

In addition, Dodds needed people to officiate home track meets. As many as 50 officials are used at one meet, depending on how many teams are competing.

Today, if K-State track coach Mike Ross or assistant coach Jerome Howe need officials for an upcoming meet, they call on members of the MTC.

Mike Novak, director of Financial Assistance, is active as both an official and competitor. He said the friendship between entrants is one of the positive factors about the meets.

"People are more concerned with beating their best time," Novak said, "than with beating each other."

"The relaxed atmosphere also encourages you to try new events," Novak said. "In Salina last year I tried the pole vault for the first time and missed at four-and-a-half feet, which is less than I can high jump. But I eventually cleared seven-and-a-half feet. It was great fun."

OTHER MEMBERS who compete are Richards, John Schendler, Chet Peters and James Uphan. They're in the masters competition which is comprised of athletes over 30-years old.

Younger athletes interested in serious competition are referred to Club Midwest, established by former Pittsburg track star James Scott.

"We feel it's better to have one strong club of active runners," Richard's said, "than several smaller, weaker ones. We send all our promising young athletes to Club Midwest."

MTC also subsidizes young local athletes so they can compete in out-of-state meets.

"We don't have a great deal of funds," Richards said, "but we do try to help young athletes whenever we can. We helped send Jon Favrow to a meet in Oregon last year. And we've helped Janel LeValley (Manhattan High trackster) attend a couple meets."

ANOTHER FUNCTION of the MTC is helping young kids learn about track. Barry Anderson, K-State women's track coach, and Craig McVey help run a summer recreation track program.

The program was originally sponsored by the Manhattan Recreation Commission. Anderson and McVey have continued the program.

Another function of the MTC is staging track meets. They have six each year. The entry fees are usually nominal, $1.50 or $2, and entrants from all age groups are encouraged to participate, regardless of experience. The only requirement is buying an Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) card, which costs $3.50.

The MTC sponsored events begin March 18 with the 9th Annual Flint Hills Road Run in St. George. More than 100 runners participated in last year's race, which also includes a 10 kilometer run for joggers. Both men and women are encouraged to enter.

THE STATE Junior Olympics are held June 9-11, for boys and girls under 18. Top finishers qualify for the Missouri Valley-AAU district championship, June 17. Both meets will be held at K-State's Christian Track.

The two-person 10 mile relay will be held June 24. In this event participants alternate running a mile until each has run five miles. The divisions include open, women's, mixed, junior and masters.

The Wheat State Classic, July 1, is an all day meet open to anyone with a desire to compete.

Snowstorm cripples East; Midwest still digging out

By The Associated Press
Millions of East Coast residents struggled through a wind-driven snowstorm Monday as schools closed and traffic, business and government slowed to a near standstill for the second time in 17 days.

From Washington, D.C., through the Middle Atlantic states and into New England, authorities reported drifting, blowing snow that started before dawn and continued through the day, cutting visibility to almost zero.

By midmorning, there was as much as half a foot of snow piled on the ground in some places. Forecasts generally called for anywhere from 1 to 1½ feet by the time the storm ends today. Commuter train and bus lines reported lengthy delays; airport runways were closed while crews tried to clear the snow; major roads were passable—but just barely.

Children in hundreds of communities got an extra holiday as classes were canceled. Public offices and courts were closed. Legislative sessions were called off. Many businesses said they planned to send employees home early. Snow emergencies were declared in several areas as authorities tried to limit traffic as much as possible.

THE MIDWEST, still digging out from a blizzard that hit a little more than a week ago, reported relatively few problems on Monday, but the West Coast was suffering torrential rains. Five people in Southern California died on Sunday in traffic accidents caused by rain and mudslides, and forecasters predicted heavy rain for Northern California during the coming week.

In the East, the National Weather Service issued blizzard warnings for many areas. Forecasters said up to 20 inches of snow might fall in some New York City suburbs as the storm continues through Monday night. The one-day record for the city—17.5 inches—was set on Feb. 5, 1961; the Jan. 20 snowstorm brought 13.6 inches.

Weather officials, who failed to predict the severity of last month's storm, had been warning of Monday's snow since Saturday and authorities tried to take extra precautions.

Road conditions were extremely hazardous. The speed limit on the New Jersey Turnpike was cut to 35 mph early Monday; at midday, it was cut still further, to 30 mph, on the northern part of the highway. Motorcycles and utility, boat and house trailers were banned.

In Pennsylvania, a tractor-trailer and a bus carrying 46 girls from New York City collided on Interstate 80 near Bloomsburg, injuring at least 10 persons. The section of the road where the accident occurred was closed at midmorning because of the weather.

Bilingual course in Spanish improves skills in English

By SALLY PEREZ
Collegian Reporter

A bilingual-bicultural Spanish course offered this semester by the Modern Language Department will help native Spanish speakers improve their reading, writing and speaking abilities.

Sheryl Santos, instructor of the class, said that this class is designed for students of hispanic origins having varying abilities in the Spanish language.

"Some students in the class desire to perfect their oral ability while others desire only to learn rules of grammar and writing," Santos said.

Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Cubans and other bilingual students have linguistic and cultural needs different from their Anglo-Saxon counterparts, for whom the sounds of the language and cultural insights may be foreign and new, Santos said.

THUS, SANTOS said, different teaching strategies and methods are used in the bilingual-bicultural approach.

Many bilingual students were born in the United States and bring to class with them the dialect of their hometown, she said.

"A bond of respect and understanding is encouraged as each class member experiences acceptance and pride in his or her cultural and linguistic traditions," Santos said.

Santos said that the course differs from regular Spanish courses which don't stress as highly the dialects that students may bring to class.

Teresa Guillen, a student in the bilingual-bicultural class, said she would like the ability to be able to identify strongly with the teacher, students and the language.

"Through this class I would like to get a better understanding of myself and of other latino cultures," Guillen said.

GUILLÉN SAID she likes the atmosphere of the class and feels comfortable with the other classmates who have somewhat similar backgrounds.

Everyone concerned with this course is putting forth enthusiasm and energy to insure its success and continuance, Santos said.

People are becoming aware of the importance of cultural and linguistic diversity, she said.

"This bilingual-bicultural class helps enhance the reality of multiculturalism and helps the students develop and maintain self-esteem and real pride in their culture. At the same time it gives the student the opportunity to retain and develop this bilingual skill," Santos said.

A CLOSER LOOK...Dan Riddell, graduate student in animal science studying ruminant nutrition, examines the remnants in a cow's stomach as part of his research.

Windows give K-State cows something to moo about

By LYNN BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

If anything good can be said about a window in the side of a cow, it might be that storm windows aren't needed in the winter.

But thanks to the miracle of modern science and a helping hand from the K-State Department of Animal Science and Industry, the digestive systems of cows, sheep and a number of animals can be closely observed through such a device.

The department has 13 cows with openings in various parts of the digesting system, Erle Bartley, professor in animal science and industry, said. Four more will be ready for use soon, he said.

The department uses the openings, or windows, to study the effects of having four stomachs, he said.

A window can be placed in that part of the stomach you wish to study closely, Bartley said.

THE WINDOWS are usually installed by one of the doctors in the surgery and medicine department, Bartley said. Dr. Mark Spire has put in the most recent windows.

The operation involves cutting a small opening in the side of the animal and sewing the stomach wall to the wall of the cow's body, Bartley said.

The cow will be fully recovered from the surgery within two weeks and there are no painful after-effects on the cow, he said.

"We have had cows live almost 15 years with a window in their stomachs," Bartley said.

The windows are made of plasticol, a product with a rubber texture, Bartley said. After the opening is healed, a plasticol window is placed over the opening. This window has a cushion to increase the cow's comfort, Bartley said. A plug made of the same material closes the hole, he said.

The windows will last three to five years before they have to be replaced, Bartley said. This involves replacing the windows and the plug, not redoing the entire operation, he said.

These cows are used almost entirely for research purposes, Bartley said.

"There is a lot of lab work that involves trying to analyze the fermentation of products in the stomach," he said.

THE WINDOWS allow researchers to observe the fermentation process in the stomach system and the effects that certain medicines and feeds have on this system.

When the plug is removed, the contents being fermented in the stomach are allowed to escape through the opening in the cow's side. A researcher may place his hand on the inside of the opening if he needs to, Bartley said.

Bartley said he used the windows to research the causes of bloat after the cow has eaten and to develop a medicine to reduce this bloat.

The department is currently researching causes for the sudden death syndrome, alfalfa bloat, wheat bloat and feed-lot bloat, Bartley said.

Special senate committee pushes Laetrile legalization

TOPEKA (AP) — Legislation legalizing use of the controversial cancer treatment Laetrile was recommended for passage Monday by a committee of the Kansas Senate.

The 11-member Public Health and Welfare Committee took action on a voice vote with only one dissent.

Under the bill, a physician would be able to prescribe Laetrile for patients; and hospitals would be forbidden from interfering with the physician-patient decision to use the substance.

"There is no question the people of Kansas are wanting to try this substance called Laetrile," declared Sen. John Vermillion, (R-Independence).

"If we don't abide by the good thinking of the Kansas people, we will be confronted with bootleggers, con artists and those who come up with something to sell these folks," he said.

SEN. ROBERT Talkington, (R-Iola), who cast the lone negative vote, has said in the past he believes the Laetrile bill should contain greater restrictions on use.

The committee was scheduled to vote on the controversial issue last Friday, but Sen. Wes Sowers, committee chairman, delayed action until Monday so that all panel members could vote. Sen. Jan Meyers, (R-Overland Park), was absent from the Friday meeting.

Vermillion chided doctors and health officials who opposed the bill, saying "they may be standing still when they should be marching."

He described the measure as a compromise between medical interests wanting Laetrile banned and supporters who urge easy access to the substance.

SEN. JACK Janssen, (D-Lyons), said he personally favored a more liberal bill, but was voting for the measure anyway.

"It allows certified doctors to prescribe the drug," Janssen said. "Those people who want it will be able to go to a doctor in Kansas rather than go to Mexico."

During two days of committee hearings, some Laetrile supporters claimed the ban on the substance forced them to travel to clinics in Mexico to get treatment.

Permitted to prescribe Laetrile under the bill would be physicians and osteopaths. Chiropractors and other branches of the healing arts would still be forbidden to prescribe it.

Child care funds earn city's okay

 By CINDY IZZO
 Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan city commission voted last night to appropriate $6,012 to finance University for Man's evening child-care center.

The funds for the project were barely approved by a 3-2 vote after the same proposal was rejected in December by a 2-2 vote, with one member out of town.

Mayor Russell Reitz had been away when the proposal had been killed by the deadlock, and broke the tie to pass the bill when he sided with Commissioners Robert Linder and Terry Glasscock. Robert Smith and Henry Otto were the commissioners opposed to the proposal.

According to Linder, the money would be used to benefit low and moderate income parents with children.

"This evening child-care center would allow these people to look for jobs or to attend school without worrying about their children," Linder said.

JULIE COATES, administrative director of the UFM evening child-care program, said the proposal was brought back again "because of a tremendous outpouring of community support."

"There is no other evening day care center in Manhattan to even compete with," Coates said.

She added that they would try to broaden the program with the money provided by opening earlier in the day.

A monthly written report to be sent to the commissioners and city manager, along with the stipulation that persons using the center be Manhattan residents, was proposed by Linder.

The first reading of a proposal to close Houston St. between 9th and 10th was unanimously approved by the commission. Approval of a second reading would enact the closing of the street, which would add considerable square footage to the property of Manhattan Junior High.

Margaret Withy, board of education representative, said the closing of Houston street would expand the area by several thousand square feet and would allow the children to have a straightforward way of entering the school.

WITHY ALSO said the school should be set aside as a thing of beauty and safety for our children.

"The total area should become one total unit", she said. James Benjamin, superintendent of Unified School District 383, said the drainage problem on Houston would be solved by adding dips on each side of the block near the school.

"We have two alternatives," Bruce McCallum, city engineer, said, "either we leave the street pattern as it is, with a one-way past ninth, or we redo Houston and Pierre at Juliette, putting in a two-way sign."

Linder voiced his approval of the plan by saying that the closing of Houston would not harm downtown traffic patterns.

COMMISSIONERS approved a proposal to improve the guidelines for the Community Development (CD) department's rehabilitation program.

According to CD Director Marvin Butler, the guidelines will "provide inspection policy for income eligibility" for rehabilitation loans and grants.

The guidelines put into writing the qualification standards by which CD officers can determine eligibility, Butler said.

Carter prepares to announce program to send college students $1.2 billion

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter will announce a major program today to provide a reported $1.2 billion to college students from middle-income families because he fears a 71 percent jump in college costs has put their chances for higher education in jeopardy.

Hoping to stave off a move in Congress to give a $250 tax credit to the parents of all college students, Carter will propose a combination of grants and loans for the aid, said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell.

It was announced last month that Carter had set aside $700 million in contingency funds in his fiscal 1979 budget for the aid, but sources in the government and Congress said the aid package will total $1.2 billion.

NEARLY $1 billion will go to increase the government's $2.2 billion Basic Educational Opportunities Grants program, which is now targeted at low-income students, the sources said. The rest will go in increased funding for the Guaranteed Student Loan program and campus work-study programs.

The package will raise the family income limit from $25,000 to $40,000 for students to receive loans with the government subsidizing the interest while they are still in school.

The president and Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. will unveil the program today.

Powell said the program will be targeted mostly at the middle class.

Soldiers reap benefits for radiation exposure

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Veterans Administration says it has awarded medical disability benefits to at least 12 veterans in the past 10 years who claimed that they developed cancer after they were exposed to nuclear tests in Nevada and the South Pacific during the 1940s and 1950s.

However, some of the benefit grants were made not on the basis of radiation exposure alone but because the veterans had other service connected disabilities, VA officials said Tuesday.

Sydney Shuman, chairman of the Board of Veterans Appeals, said any doubt as to how the disability was incurred is settled in favor of the veteran. "We try to be compassionate," he said.

THE NUMBER of radiation-related claims actually awarded is unknown. J.C. Peckarsky, chief of the VA's Compensation and Pension Service, said "it's difficult to have figures that add up," because his field offices have been keeping record on such cases only since 1967 while the appeals board has been doing so only since 1970.

The statements by Peckarsky and Shuman are the nearest the federal government has come in recognizing some responsibility for illness developed by servicemen who were exposed to radiation in the weapons tests.

ONE OF the cases granted—but not on the basis of exposure—was that of Paul Cooper, who drew national attention early last year when he claimed he is dying of leukemia as a result of exposure in a 1957 test in Nevada.

In that test, troops maneuvered near ground zero after detonation of a 44-kiloton device.

Shuman said Cooper apparently is the only participant in that test, called project Smoky, who has had his claim acted on by the appeals board. He noted that the board is now considering the case of another Smoky veteran, Donald Coe of Kentucky, who has hairy cell leukemia.

Peckarsky's office lists six Smokey claims.

The VA officials said 174,000 veterans have engaged in the atomic tests since the first such test in 1946.

UGB tackles liquor sales, juvenile problems in Union

By JUDY WELTSCH
Collegian Reporter

A bill to change the statutes allowing hard liquor to be served in the K-State Union, passed by the state Senate Feb. 3, will now go to the floor of the state House of Representatives.

"If the bill should pass, the decision to serve liquor in the Union would be a decision the Union Governing Board (UGB) would make," Walt Smith, director of the K-State Union said in a UGB meeting Tuesday night.

According to Smith, the Union would not sell liquor. Instead, liquor would be brought in to be served by organizations.

The University of Kansas wanted the statute changed, Smith said. He added that K-State doesn't really want it, but they could handle liquor being sold, if it passes.

KU Student Body President Steve Leban cited statistics showing that at least 60 percent of that schools's student body was over 21, and that the average age of a student at Wichita State University is 24, Marc Elkins, UGB member said.

According to Elkins, at least one-half of the students at K-State are under 21.

UGB also discussed problems caused by junior high and high school students in the Union.

Last weekend, during the Regional Games Tournament, 70 junior high and high school students caused trouble in the recreation area of the Union and were asked to leave. On Saturday night, they were prohibited from entering the Union, Smith said.

"We are dealing with a group that is not a part of our group," Steve Hermes, assistant director of the Union said.

Individual students can still enter the Union only if they have a purpose for being there and if they are not infringing on other people or causing trouble, Smith said.

Liberal overturns Olney again to win annual pancake races

LIBERAL (AP)—The women of Liberal continued their domination of transatlantic pancake race competition Tuesday, with an 18-year-old college student covering the icy 415-yard course in near-record time.

Stephanie Wagner, a student at Seward County Community College, won in 59.5 seconds, four and one-half seconds faster than the 64 seconds turned in at Olney, England, by June Statham, a 24-year-old housewife.

Miss Wagner said she entered the race for the fun of it and had no expectations of winning.

She was congratulated and given the "kiss of peace" by British Consul-General Douglas Brown of St. Louis and Kansas Gov. Robert Bennett.

Wagner's time was just a second off the race record of 58.5 seconds set by Liberal's Sheila Turner in 1975. Turner, 24, a secretary, finished second this year. Peggy Luck, 22, finished third at Liberal.

Tuesday's event marked the 29th year the women of the two towns have competed in a race that dates back to 1445 in Olney. The women of Liberal now hold an 18-11 edge in the comparative-scores contest.

The 15 Liberal women competed in a freezing mist and 16-degree temperatures. Workers were clearing ice from the race course just 15 minutes before the noontime dash.

TRADITION says the race began when an Olney housewife, late for Shrove Tuesday church services, raced to the church with skillet in hand, still wearing her apron.

The transatlantic competition began in 1950 when R. J. Leete, then president of the Jaycees in this southwest Kansas town, saw a magazine feature on the Olney race and sent a cable challenging the English.

Boston goes black

BOSTON—A piece of tar paper roofing blown by hurricane-force winds into generating wires was blamed for a power failure that blacked out much of Boston for several hours Tuesday, leaving thousands cold and helpless in the midst of a blizzard.

Boston Edison Co. lost power to 75,000 of its 200,000 customers in the metropolitan area, but there was no estimate of the number of individuals affected.

The power started to fail shortly before 6:30 a.m. Tuesday. By dawn, with the storm still lashing at the city, Bostonians awoke in chilly, powerless homes.

The outage was blamed on a piece of tar paper roofing that was blown into the latticework of wires at the city's largest generating station.

'Evil ladies' prompt killings

LOS ANGELES—A man claiming to be the Hillside Strangler said in a letter made public Tuesday that he killed a dozen "evil ladies" because his mother told him to.

Police, stressing that they did not know whether the letter was authentic, said the writer gave them "another week or so" to meet his call for help in turning himself in safely, and threatened "something serious" if authorities failed to respond.

Assistant Police Chief Daryl Gates read reporters the first page of the pencil-printed, six-page letter mailed last month to Mayor Tom Bradley. The lined school notebook page said:

"Dear Mr. Mayor.

"PLEASE listen to me. I am very sick, but I do not want to go back to that place. I hate that place. My mother told me to kill those evil ladies. It's not my fault ... Mother makes my head hurt. That's why I kill her. But I can't get her out of my head. She keeps coming back. That's why I hate her."

Carter backs executed GI

DETROIT—Antoinette Slovik says she doesn't know whether it was compassion or politics that prompted President Carter to back her claim for her executed husband's GI life insurance.

Whatever the reason, Mrs. Slovik, widow of Pvt. Eddie Slovik, the only American soldier shot for desertion in this century, is grateful.

"He may have political motives," Mrs. Slovik said the day after Carter announced he will support a move in Congress to give her the $70,000 her husband's insurance would be worth now, including 30 years of interest.

Soviets move in arms race

WASHINGTON—The Navy's top admiral said Tuesday that the Russians may have built their first nuclear-powered surface warship.

Adm. James Holloway, chief of naval operations, told the House Armed Services Committee that "the Soviet Union has recently launched a large ship, apparently a combatant which is fitting out at the Baltic shipyard in Leningrad.

"We cannot rule out the possibility that this may be the Soviet's first nuclear-powered surface warship," Holloway said. He described the vessel as over 600 feet long and well over 20,000 tons in displacement, but gave no other details.

The United States is far ahead of the Soviet Union with 10 nuclear-propelled aircraft carriers and cruisers, some of them nearly 20 years old. Three more are being prepared for commissioning.

A bright outlook on energy crisis

A man named Barry Commoner spoke here Friday. The man is an ecologist, a lecturer and an author—but his greatest attribute is that he can see.

He can see, of course, that this country has an energy crisis that must be coped with.

He recognizes the fact that our government is committed to an agenda of coal and nuclear power and that this energy policy is most concerned with the preservation of capitalism rather than the environment or the standard of living as we now know it.

President Carter's energy plan mandates the development of coal and nuclear power to supply 73 percent of the country's energy needs by 1985, with one percent being supplied by solar, Commoner said.

The reasoning for the lopsided drift toward the environment-polluting (and nonrenewable) resources such as coal and nuclear power is based on corporate economics.

BOTH coal and nuclear energy production can be owned and controlled by giant utility companies.

This very important, if you happen to be holding down an $80,000 per year position in one of the utility companies.

Production control means big bucks for the future. But solar energy doesn't readily adapt to this mold.

In fact, solar technology predominantly stresses the concept of small solar heating units installed in the homes of private individuals, cutting back heating energy needs by 40 percent or more.

Then there is the photo-voltaic cell, which can directly convert sunlight into electricity.

These solar innovations, if allowed to be mass-produced, would soon be within the price range of any American home-owner who is now paying utility bills.

BUT it appears that the development of solar energy will depend upon the stubbornness and convictions of private individuals and companies for the time being, because the idea still isn't really popular in Washington.

But Barry Commoner is an optimistic man.

He firmly and cheerfully believes that the U.S. will one day see the light.

Of course, we will be trailing years behind Japan and other foreign countries in solar development... but we will watch and we will learn.

Dry ice jacket story in error

Editor,

I would like to protest the inept reporting of Rick Dickens. This type of apprentice should only be permitted to work on articles under very direct supervision.

For example, my name is Konz, not Cons. An elementary precaution would have been to look my name up in the phone book. He called me at home so the name must have been in front of him at that time.

The suit does not consist of "a pants and vest," it is a jacket only. In fact in the next line he mentions a jacket.

The insulation protects the skin from burns, not burn.

I never worked for the Air Force Science Research Corporation. No such Corporation exists. I did have a grant from the Air Force Office of Scientific Research.

The project did not involve trying to keep astronauts cool. It had no connection with astronauts.

It did, however, use the same type of technique as was used for the astronauts.

The Air Force did not drop the cool water technique for the air cooling technique. NASA made the decision and they dropped air cooling for water cooling.

I went to South Africa in 1971, not 1972.

The gold mines are underground so they do not "get extremely hot during the daytime," they are the same temperature at all times.

I did not "work with the National Science Foundation," they supported us with a grant.

Again it was not a "pants and vest" project.

Who is the "it" who got the suit functional?

I think the editors of the Collegian have a responsibility to maintain at least a minimum level of competency for their reporters.

The deadly crosswalk boogie

Although dodging cars at 8 a.m. can make one alert and ready for the day's classes, I prefer a cup of coffee.

Pedestrians call it the "crosswalk boogie," the police call it Zero Pedestrian Growth (ZPG) and others simply refer to it as crossing the street.

It may seem ridiculous to think a task such as crossing the street could be as hazardous as playing hop-scotch in a minefield.

But it is.

And the no-man's land is called Anderson Avenue.

I'm referring to one certain part of the avenue—that popular faded-white strip of paint located near the campus entrance at the south end of the Union parking lot.

It has been imaginatively called a "crosswalk."

Drivers lovingly call it the "Gaza Strip."

The city hasn't gotten around to installing a signal light at the crosswalk for reasons known only to those familiar with city hall.

IF CROSSING this particular area is beginning to sound like Moses parting the Red Sea, then you are getting an idea of what it is like trying to get traffic to slow down for a pedestrian on the crosswalk.

Although "the law" tells us that motorists are to stop for pedestrians as soon as their toes hit the walk, it doesn't slow down the novice driver out for his first "ped."

The "Ped X-ing" sign is recognized by the alert driver as an invitation for open hunting on peds.

In their hurry, drivers (no one motorist receives all the glory), insist on speeding up, with the false pretense of trying to "make the light," whether it is green or not.

In the fall and spring, the pedestrian has the weather on his side. The concrete provides the pedestrian a firm foot-hold for the ten-yard dash (in two seconds or less) to safety.

The football team has been known to hold practice drills there, efficiently weeding out those players who cannot make the run.

THE WINTER SEASON, however, is a motorist's delight.

In snow and ice, a driver can put his car into a slide and make it appear as though the pedestrian was dumb enough to walk into a speeding car.

The lane changing of a careening car (swerving to miss a pedestrian) usually offers a tail-wind gust that will land the ped on his back for the next driver to finish off.

This war tactic is known as "setting up for the kill."

It is, however, reassuring to know motorists are not discriminatory in their attempts at running down the scampering pedestrian.

Given the opportunity, they will go for anyone, regardless of race, color or creed.

The most experienced drivers play the game known as "pin that ped on your bumper," and use an ingenious system of scoring the "bumped."

PhDs, who frequent the campus (but can afford their own cars) are worth 50 points because they are a rarity on the crosswalk.

INSTRUCTORS AND graduate students are worth 25 points because they are also a relatively rare species to find on foot. Usually they are the drivers trying to get to the parking lot before the 8 a.m. rush.

And then there are the undergraduates. As an undergraduate on foot, I rate a mere five points.

To help the situation, the athletic department could put football helmets to use by renting them out for pedestrians to use for protection.

The idea of drafting mothers or university secretaries to walk the college students across the street is ridiculous, although it might work.

It seems the only thing that would bring remedial action on the part of the city, the University and the motorists is an accident.

If someone gets killed or maimed, drivers may be persuaded to take the extra minute or two needed to let people cross safely.

Until then, pedestrians will have to keep their legs in shape.

And pray.

Dole disdains 'partisan outburst'

Editor,

RE: Jan. 17 editorial "Sen. Dole will not will 'cheer' for farmers."

I noted with interest Mr. Montgomery's recent editorial criticizing my failure to play "cheerleader" for the farm strike.

As the thousands of farmers I have met with understand, there are more effective ways for me to spend my time assisting them.

That is what I have always endeavored to do—as my record clearly shows.

I assume, since Mr. Montgomery did not contact my staff or myself regarding my activities relative to the farm strike, he is not interested in the facts.

Other readers may be and they are as follows.

In the last month alone, I have:
—met, in groups or individually, with over a thousand farmers who traveled to Washington;
—sponsored and chaired seven hours of Agriculture Committee hearings in Kansas City;
—attended farm strike rallies in Topeka, Wichita and Washington, D.C.;

—given speeches to five farm-related groups in Wichita, Kansas City, Madison, Wisconsin and Denver, Colorado;

—attended all scheduled Agricultural Committee meetings, including hearing attended by Secretary Bergland;

—authored and introduced a resolution to halt discrimination between financing of agricultural and industrial exports by the Export-Import Bank;

—authored and introduced a bill mandating purchase of grain for the Emergency Grain Reserve;

—authored and introduced the "Flexible Parity Act of 1978" which would provide a sliding scale whereby an individual farmer could determine his or her own target levels by the amount of ground set aside. A farmer who set aside 50 percent of his land would receive 100 percent parity; —authored and introduced a bill to increase payment to farmers for grain storage to incentive levels, not less than 25 cents per bushel per year, and to lower interest charges to farmers on commodity loans to not more than the cost of money to CCC from the U.S. Treasury;

—authored and introduced a bill mandating $200 million in additional funds for Title I of P.L. 480 in 1978;

Within the next few days, I will:
—introduce a bill proposing changes in the Meat Import Act of 1964;

—introduce a bill extending Commodity Credit Corporation credits to the Peoples Republic of China, certain East European countries and to the Soviet Union under certain conditions; —introduce a bill to create an economic disaster loan program for farmers.

Later this month the Agriculture Committee will hold ten days of hearings. One of the bills that will be considered is my "Flexible Parity Act"—the legislative proposal I believe holds the most promise for immediate relief from the current agricultural emergency.

Many of the farmers currently in Washington agree with me and are working with us to muster Congressional support. I appreciate their assistance and the positive action taken by the visiting agriculture groups to educate urban Members of Congress.

I think they have been effective, and I am hopeful that the climate is right for legislative action.

This has been a bipartisan effort. I have worked closely with members of both parties and have often expressed my view that Secretary of Agriculture, Bob Bergland, is doing the best he can—that he wants to help—and that we ought to give him more to work with.

I realize this is lengthy, however I have been very busy on behalf of farmers, and believe it is necessary to set the record straight. I trust these facts will receive the same attention accorded Mr. Montgomery's partisan outburst.

Commoner's socialistic economy unrealistic

Editor,

Barry Commoner gave a fine discussion of some of the many problems in the energy situation, but his final conclusion that we must turn into a socialistic economy was unrealistic.

The reason he gave for doing this was that the U.S. system has failed to meet the demand for employment and energy (which are internal).

The one example he gave for how government could change to solar energy and hopefully generate jobs in the process is something that could be done now if it actually worked.

Unfortunately, I doubt if the military is ready to rely on continued clear weather for their solar cells during a war.

With weather like we've had the last few weeks the batteries would have long gone dead.

One point worth mentioning is that Mr. Commoner attacked the Carter energy plan and the part that draws his greatest wrath is the planned nuclear power expansion.

Yet he states that the people who build the reactors want to stop because they're losing money, but Carter promises to help them out.

The reactors would not be built in a pure capitalistic system, but only with the type of system he wants to turn to.

Cuban troops steam toward Ethiopia to aid in war effort

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP)—Thousands of Cuban soldiers are steaming toward the Horn of Africa aboard Soviet ships to help Ethiopia in its war against ethnic Somali rebels, diplomatic sources claimed on Tuesday.

The reports said about 3,000 to 6,000 Cuban troops left their Caribbean homeland for Ethiopia sometime last week and would "triple or double" the number of Cubans said to be fighting in southeastern Ethiopia's disputed Ogaden Desert on the Somalia border.

The sources said most of the Cuban troops are believed slated for a major role in Ethiopia's long-expected counter-offensive to drive out ethnic Somali rebels who now control about 97 percent of the Ogaden and are trying to annex it to Somalia.

(In Addis Ababa, AP correspondent Brian Jeffries reported Ethiopia formally announced Tuesday it had launched a major military offensive to recapture rebel-held portions of the Ogaden. But Jeffries said the Marxist military regime denied Somali government claims Ethiopia plans to invade its East African neighbor with the help of Cuban troops and Soviet military advisers.)

NEITHER the opening of the counteroffensive nor the transport of additional Cuban troops to Ethiopia could be confirmed independently.

Diplomatic sources say Cuban Gen. Carlos Acha is in Addis Ababa helping plan the counteroffensive aimed at ending the six-month-old war. Acha was the reputed mastermind when Cuban forces helped bring about a Marxist victory in Angola's 1975-1976 civil war.

The latest contingent of Cuban soldiers is believed heading for Assab, Ethiopia's last remaining open port along the Red Sea and an apparent gathering point for Cuban forces, the sources report.

In Washington, the State Department reported at least 1,000 more Cuban troops have been sent to Ethiopia, raising the estimated number of Cubans in the conflict to 4,500. On Tuesday, spokesman Hodding Carter III said the United States does not believe "the participation of outside powers is useful" in the Horn of Africa and cautioned both Egypt and Israel against supplying arms or troops to Somalia or Ethiopia.

In Rome, Ethiopia's information minister, Maj. Girma Neway, said Tuesday his country has "every right" to receive non-combat aid from any friendly country.

THE SOURCES said Cuban troops primarily provide artillery support for Ethiopian soldiers at the government strongholds of Harar and Dire Dawa in the northern Ogaden. The Cubans are driving tanks and armored personnel carriers in ground battles and flying Ethiopia's MiG-17 and MiG-21 planes—newly acquired from the Soviet Union—in saturation bombings of Somali-held towns, primarily Jijiga, diplomats report.

The ethnic Somali rebels want to join the Ogaden to Somalia, with which they share a common language and culture. Ethiopia also is battling secessionists in the northern province of Eritrea which controls the country's only access to the Red Sea.

Dole urges Carter to freeze moves toward normal relations with Cuba

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.), has urged President Carter to freeze moves toward normalization of relations with Cuba and shut down the liaison offices the two governments have established in Havana and Washington.

Describing Cuba as "a client tool of Soviet interference on the African continent," Dole said Tuesday he had written the president "it is time we discard the illusion that Cuba is ready to take its place among the community of responsible, peaceable nations."

Dole, the 1976 Republican vice presidential candidate, is a leading opponent of normalization of relations with the Castro government.

CARTER has said repeatedly there is no chance the United States would establish normal relations with Cuba so long as that nation continues its military involvement in Africa.

However, the Ford and Carter administrations conducted secret talks with Cuba that led to relaxation of restrictions between the two countries and establishment last year of diplomatic missions in Washington and Havana.

Castro yielded to U.S. pressure to release a number of political prisoners and the Carter administration dropped the ban on travel to Cuba by U.S. citizens.

In his letter to Carter, Dole called for a freeze on further contacts with the Cuban government.

He said Cuba "has shown itself to be an aggressive force of death and destruction in both Angola and Somalia, and there is no end in sight to the buildup of Cuban troops and 'advisers' throughout Africa."

Sadat promises to 'raise hell' in efforts for U.S. military aid

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat told members of Congress on Tuesday that he will not be shy in asking for U.S. weapons, adding that "I shall raise hell" if Congress does not approve them.

Although the comment was made with a laugh after a meeting with members of the House of Representatives, he seemed more somber as he emerged later from a similar session with a Senate group.

"I threatened them," Sadat said after his closed door talks with the senators.

AFTER TALKING with the House members, Sadat offered the "raise hell" comment with a laugh, but said in serious tone about his request to buy U.S. arms: "The last time I was here I was shy. But I am not shy any more."

Then, after meeting with members of the Senate, Sadat said: "I am not any more shy at all. I am speaking as a partner and I am threatening." He refused to say how he threatened the senators and it was not clear from his manner how serious the threat had been.

SADAT SAID he had lost his "shyness" after what he saw as an overwhelming American response to his Middle East peace initiatives.

He suggested that congressional approval of the arms sales to Egypt would demonstrate that the United States is behind Egyptian efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East and would be a demonstration of "partnership and cooperation."

After their meeting with Sadat, several House members said the Egyptian president told them he wanted more than the 120 light-weight F-5E jet fighters he reportedly is asking the Carter administration and Congress to approve. But the House members said Sadat did not specify what other arms he wanted.

WHEN REPORTERS asked Sadat if he also wants the Air Force's sophisticated new swingwing F-15 jet fighter, he refused to specify but said he has given a meticulous list to President Carter.

After the meeting on the House side of the Capitol, Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas said he believes that whatever President Carter requests for Sadat: "I think we'll give him."

AN OFFICIAL at the National Security Council said it has not made recommendations to President Carter yet on arms requests from Egypt, Israel, Saudi Arabia or Iran.

They said Sadat was asked what guarantees the Arabs could give that Israel would be safe from attack under any peace agreement and that Sadat replied that he has already promised whatever guarantees Israel wants in the Sinai.

Overhead, education raise cost of hair cuts and styles

It may be that the old adage, "you get what you pay for" holds true when referring to getting the old locks clipped.

Perhaps a $7-and-up hair style is worth more than a $3 hair cut.

There is a difference between a hair cut and a hairstyle, according to Rick McClanahan, owner and manager of Hair By Rick and Friends.

"People have to live with their hair 24 hours a day," McClanahan said, saying they should be aware that the technique used for a typical haircut is basically the same on 99 out of 100 heads of hair.

A HAIRSTYLE, however, is a cut which constantly utilized updated techniques and trends. A hairstyle should conform to the individual's style and his or her hair, McClanahan said.

Generally speaking, hairstyling salons are usually more expensive than barber shops. However, many barber shops are now offering hair styles with prices for styling set accordingly.

The Campus Barber Shop in Aggieville charges $3 to cut short hair, $5 for long hair and $7 for a hairstyle, which includes a cut, shampoo and blow-dry. Similarly, the Aggieville Barber Shop and Westloop Barber Shop ask $4 for a haircut and $7 for a shampoo, cut, style and blow-dry.

Gary Wood, of the Campus Barber Shop, attributes the cheaper barber shop prices to overhead.

"Also the time element is a factor," Wood said. The longer it takes to cut your hair, the more it will cost.

MANHATTAN hairstyling salons vary in pricing more than barber shops.

A hairstyle at The Hair Shapers cost $6.50 whereas at Crimpers, the cost for a style and shampoo is $8 or $9, depending on the stylist. Crimpers charges $2.50 to $4 extra for a blow-dry.

Jeannie Brubaker, manager of Crimpers, claims that the high costs of education for herself and her employees is a major consideration in the setting of her prices. Throughout the year, Brubaker's employees participate in classes, seminars and workshops.

"We go to these to learn new techniques and trends that come in every year," she said.

McClanahan said he believes that hair must be shampooed, cut wet and blown dry to be assured of an even cut. The price for this process is $9.

"I want to be sure it's done right," he said.

In determining the prices, McClanahan said he has "overhead and price increases just like anyone else."

Graduation to gain meaning by single college exercises

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

Each college will have its own commencement at indicated locations following an all-University commencement to help improve the graduation experience and make it more meaningful to the students this spring.

The all-University commencement will be held at the KSU Stadium at 9:30 Saturday morning, May 20.

"What the seniors want is a more personalized graduation and a big university commencement. They want the best of both worlds," said John Chalmers, vice president for Academic Affairs.

A proposal distributing diplomas to graduates during the college ceremonies is being considered by the Faculty Academic Affairs Committee.

IF THE proposal is passed by the Faculty Senate, diplomas will be given to the graduates at their individual college commencements.

In the past, graduates received their diplomas in the mail about a month after their graduation.

If the proposal is passed, it would cause some problems, Chalmers said.

"The hang-up is how to get grades for the seniors," he said.

There are several options that could be taken so that grades could be determined before commencement, Chalmers said. Final exams could be given early. Seniors could be excused from finals. The commencement ceremonies could be delayed a week or tentative grades could be turned in to the Admissions and Records office at the end of dead week.

The tentative grade collection is the proposal being considered.

"Right now there seems to be strong feelings against the proposal, yet everyone is in favor of personalizing the commencement," said Carole Francq, chairman of the Faculty Academic Affairs Committee.

TURNING IN the tentative grades would require the instructors to do a lot of rush-work, Francq said.

"So the faculty definitely has the right to determine the basis for grading a student," she said.

Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of Admissions and Records, said approximately 1,800 students graduated last year. Of those graduates, about 1,300 went through the commencement ceremony.

Gerritz said he believes under the proposed circumstances more students will go through commencement.

"I think it deserves an honest try—then we can evaluate it and see if we want to continue," he said.

If the proposal for tentative grades is passed, a list of all candidates for degrees will be sent to the instructors by the tenth week of the semester. This list will alert them that tentative grades are due by the end of dead week.

The tentative grade will be used to determine whether the student is eligible to graduate. If it is a border-line grade, the instructor will give the student the lower grade.

"The tentative grade is not official, it's just an idea to know if the person is able to graduate," said Julie Hampl, senior class president and chairman of the Commencement Review Committee.

If the instructor needs to lower a grade as the result of a final, it must be before 3:00 on Friday of finals week, as it may determine whether the student can graduate.

Lowering a grade to keep a student from graduating is unlikely, Hampl said.

The TI-57. The super slide-rule that'll get you into programming... fast and easy.

Even if you've never programmed before.

For the student who requires slide-rule functions, the TI-57 delivers an exceptional combination of advanced mathematical and statistical capabilities. From functions such as trig, logs, powers, roots and reciprocals...to mean, variance, standard deviation and much more.

And as long as you're in the market for a super slide-rule calculator, why not buy one that can also put the power, speed and convenience of programming at your disposal?

Programming a calculator

simply means giving it a logical set of instructions for accomplishing what you want it to do. Programming enables you to solve lengthy and repetitive problems quickly by substituting new variables into the set of instructions which you have already entered into the machine.

The end result is more efficient use of your time in problem-solving.

All this and more is explained in our unique, illustrated, easy-to-follow guidebook, "Making Tracks Into Programming." This 200-page book comes with the TI-57. It contains simple, step-by-step instructions and examples to help you quickly learn to use programming functions to make your problem-solving faster, more accurate and fun.

Bennett request for more counties to be added to federal farm relief list

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. Robert Bennett urged Tuesday that the Small Business Administration designate additional Kansas counties disaster areas so their farmers are eligible for long-term, low interest loans above the 82 approved a month ago.

The request is based on adverse weather conditions last year, and the assistance being sought comes under the SBA's disaster program.

On Jan. 9, SBA approved 82 of the state's 105 counties for the program.

Now, Bennett said, the 23 remaining counties will have the designation sought for them on a county-by-county basis as additional information regarding farm losses are compiled in them.

THE STATE Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service emergency board presently is asking three counties to submit updated information, Bennett said. He identified them as Marshall, Doniphan and Brown Counties in northeast Kansas.

"This crisis has been compounded by adverse weather and severely depressed commodity prices."

Bennett said several counties not included in the Jan. 9 declaration adjoin counties which were made eligible.

Graffiti: anonymity attracts po

Graffiti. The lines of memories, names, numbers and faces are painted over on walls with streaks of blue.

These random markings, clever sayings, and lewd remarks can be found in abundance on desk tops and bathroom walls. It isn't new.

"You could say graffiti is as old as man. The cave dwellers had wall drawings," said John O'Shea, assistant professor of art.

Graffiti dates back 2,000 years ago when traces of it were apparent on the walls of Pompeii, according to Donald Mrozek, assistant professor of history.

The study of ancient inscriptions, epigraphy, might have been the beginnings of what graffiti is today, he said.

The graffitist usually remains anonymous, according to Lelah Dushkin, assistant professor of sociology. Because of this, she said, it would be difficult to determine the social significance of graffiti.

GRAFFITISTS who live in deprived areas might be making social statements about their extreme sense of despair, she said. Some people who write graffiti are sheltered and live a life of frustration and they don't know how to cope.

"In some areas where people lead such lives of extreme despair, frustration and deprivation, you can see why a bathroom," he said. "People want to break out a bit from the tedium—the boredom.

"It gives them a break from the monotony of the institutional designs where people get tired of dirty green tile and gray metal," Mrozek said.

Graffitists who leave marks in restrooms and buildings aren't seeking attention, Mrozek said, but they want to bring some highlights into the dull, boring life of institutions.

Roderick Hofer, graduate student in English, is interested in graffiti. He's seen it, read about it and thought about it.

There is a type of association between graffiti and restrooms, he said. Men feel more secure within the private walls of a bathroom.

"It's private," he said, "Nobody can see you do it. Many times there's nothing else to do.

"I guess a lot of men feel secure there. Women can intimidate a great many men. So, in their little sanctuary, they feel secure enough to speak their mind, when they wouldn't do it elsewhere," he said.

THE BATHROOM is a good place for graffitists to amuse themselves by philosophizing, according to Hofer.

"People tend to be philosophical when they are exer-person who may have a creative side to him resorts to the spray can of paint to make some kind of personal statement," Dushkin said. "There aren't too many options open to them."

One of the reasons for political and religious graffiti is graffitists write to share a message, according to James Hamilton, assistant professor of philosophy.

"People who write both political and religious slogans are sharing a revolutionary context," he said. "What both of them are doing, is putting slogans (down) to claim a position."

THE POLITICAL or religious graffitist is neither trying to prove himself nor gain attention, Hamilton said.

"They probably aren't trying to prove anything (by their writings)," he said. "They want to attract attention to their causes."

But according to some, the graffitist may choose reasons other than religious or political causes for wall writing. Case Bonebrake, physical plant director says different types of wall construction tend to promote graffiti.

"There is something about the construction materials used in toilet rooms that seems to promote this offense," Bonebrake said. "It's a continuing headache."

Concerning writings in bathrooms, Mrozek said, it would be nice if graffitists marked in their own bathroom, but added, it probably wouldn't be as exciting or fun as writing in public.

"You probably wouldn't do graffiti in your own cising biological functions that don't take up their mind," he said. "People muse when they eat...people muse when they defecate."

There are some common motivations for men and women to do sexual graffiti, according to William Griffitt, professor of psychology.

"Personal anonymity is one motivation for men and women to do sexual graffiti," he said. "It's funny, creative and cute.

"I would assume there may be more female produced sexual graffiti due to loosening of sexual shackles on women," Griffitt said.

Bonebrake disagreed with the Griffitt theory.

"The messages found on the walls in the women's toilet rooms are not as vulgar as the graffiti found in men's rooms," he said. "It is more random scratchings, markings and vandalism, than a communication of thoughts."

ANONYMOUS sexual threats and genital drawings are expressed in manners which don't condemn the graffitist, Griffitt said.

"Some people have no other way to express something. Some may be creative about sexual drawings and expressions," Griffitt said. "There is nothing wrong with sexual graffiti."

Sexual graffiti is a form of release, Griffitt said, and much of it points to race or a certain subculture with degrading lines about one's sister, mother or other close ties. Graffitists who do this are using sex as revenge, and the way it is done is humiliating, he said.

Graffitists want to be recognized for what they do, Griffitt said, and they realize their thoughts will be passing recollections for others to remember so they do their ultimate to compete for best lines.

"There's great competition for people who do graffiti—who is best," Griffitt said. "Each of us wants to make our marks someplace—a temporary morality, a dumb statement or a long poem.

"Most people know this little thing isn't going to last forever. They might get some vicarious fame in a short amount of time. Most of us want to have something to be known for," Griffitt said.

Many times, a sexual graffitist who writes in bathrooms or on desks is expressing a remote type of fantasy, and he may wait a short period in hopes of influencing someone to become his sexual partner, Griffitt said.

Bill Koch, associate professor of English prefers to study desk-top graffiti over latrinalia (bathroom) and wall graffiti because it is not so harsh and offensive.

"Wall and latrinalia graffiti turn off a lot of people," he said. "It's kind of like that of subway graffiti. It is kind of an artistic movement or taste," he said.

PORNOGRAPHY is more abundant on walls and in bathrooms than on desk-tops, Koch said. The type of pornography on desk-tops are very mild compared to some of the lewd expressions found in bathrooms, and desk-top porno is not so "wholly, utterly repulsive."

Students who do graffiti on desk-tops are on a high intellectual level, Koch said.

"Desk-top graffiti, as such, is the most interesting type of graffiti because it shows a uniquely, distinctive non-stereotype thinking," he said.

The pictorial aspect of graffiti pleases Koch and he said he found designs and other drawings more inviting than lines or expressions.

ets, artists and philosophers

Roderick Hofer

In the summer of 1977, Koch and three graduate students did a graffiti survey concentrating on pictures drawn on desk-tops.

The results showed the animals drawn most were dogs. There were also various types of human faces drawn. Kil Roy, Koch said, appeared often, depending upon how the graffitist perceived the little man with the long, drooping nose.

Some interviewed said graffitists usually try to express thoughts in each of their drawings. O'Shea, does not think graffiti is a visual statement. It is, he said, an emotional outlet.

"Generally, I think graffiti is more of a sociological or psychological statement rather than an artistic statement," he said. "It is more of an emotional verbal outlet."

However, Dushkin said she thought much graffiti was innocent and might have some good in it.

"Some graffiti is quite innocent and amusing," she said. "Whatever outlet there is, is hard to say."

"Perhaps people are saying things that they want to say but don't want to have attributed to them."

VULGARITY in graffiti is one example, Dushkin said, of people trying to say something. The graffitist feels repressed, and so must use obscenity.

But sometimes obscenity can be used in a creative manner, according to Hofer.

"There can be a creative aspect to it. There isn't always, though. Graffiti can be creative when somebody writes something that nobody has ever written before."

"It's as simple as that," he said. "It's like any other art, either it's new or not new."

The subjects of graffiti are varied. They range from sex, religion, apple pie and politics. While the graffitist usually remains anonymous the observer doesn't.

Some people are disturbed when they see religious messages written on desks and walls. Lilly Nelson, senior in business marketing has been a Christian for three years. A follower of the Jesus movement, and a born-again Christian, Nelson said it is sad to find graffiti written on schoolroom walls or desks.

"I think it's quite sad," she said. "I tend to think maybe that person had such a limited concept of what life is all about. They have not experienced the personal experience."

"It's like they never have been exposed to the beauty of life. Maybe they (students) don't like the test they are taking or don't know the answer," she said.

BORN-AGAIN Christians don't insist on writing on walls and desk-tops, Nelson said.

In general, Nelson said she didn't like graffiti of any type, particularly on desk-tops where religious messages aren't welcome anyway.

"Initially, my reaction is like, 'Oh, don't write on the desks,' because there are always other messages on the desks about fraternities and sororities, and about teachers. I don't think that's the right place for it," she said.

While Nelson doesn't like graffiti, she said she was encouraged by some of the religious messages she read on desks.

"At times when I've sat down at a desk where I've seen a simple but basic truth like 'Jesus loves you', and then someone comes along and writes underneath, 'Yes, I know', and then a third comes along and writes, 'Me, too', it is kind of like they have reacted the same way I have and it's nice to know that somebody believes and has been touched by the same thing," she said.

Other places where graffiti would be well received would be areas that have billboards, according to Nelson, and she said she was encouraged by having messages written on them.

Carol White, junior in landscape architecture, said she really wanted to know the motive of the graffitist who writes religious statements. She also said she wants to understand how the graffitist perceives God.

"I would wonder if it was somebody who really believed in Jesus, or if it was somebody who was trying to make a joke of something," she said. "I would really wonder what their motive was."

The bathroom is a poor and unpopular place for the graffitist to get his religious greetings across to others, White said. A more effective place would be a messages or information board, but writing on a desk wouldn't be all that bad, she said.

THE GRAFFITIST may not always be offensive to society.

Graffiti might be a personal statement which doesn't make the community suffer to the point where one's that there was a definite appeal for the graffitist in expressing himself.

"I can't remember having written on a wall, although I must have," Hoffer said. "I am sure I have written on a desk top somewhere."

Bonebrake said, he too, had the urge to write on the walls.

"There have been times when I have had the urge to write something back at them," he said. "Rather than write back, I would prefer if someone had something to say to me they would bring the complaint directly to me."

(Bonebrake was the subject of graffiti several years ago, when he removed the doors of the toilet stalls in the men's bathrooms in Farrell Library.)

We are often conditioned to keep things clean, according to Dushkin, which makes the offense more attractive to the graffitist.

"I suppose we all have these naughty urges every now and then especially when we are told to behave, and keep everything nice and clean," Dushkin said.

Graffiti, for some, may be fun and entertaining. But according to Harry Longbottom, a Manhattan attorney, graffiti is a destruction of public property.

THE PERSON who owns property has a right not to have it vandalized and he can sue for damages, Longbottom personal rights infringe upon community members, Bonebrake said.

'I guess a lot of men feel secure there. Women can intimidate a great many men. So, in their little sanctuary they feel secure enough to speak their mind, when they wouldn't do it elsewhere.'

Those who commented on graffiti tended to agree—graffiti is here to stay.

"Graffiti is at least an attractive means of putting things on walls which previously had nothing there at all," Hofer said.

"Why remove them," he said, "because they're sometimes obscene? We put up with obscenity elsewhere. It seems to me graffiti is more attractive than nothing."

OF THOSE interviewed, none could express a definite reason for the graffitist writing anonymously. They did say said. There are criminal statutes for criminal damage to property in addition to the people suing, he said.

"If you do $50 or more damage you can get a maximum of one to five years in a state penitentiary and a $5,000 fine," Longbottom said.

Concerning the offense of someone doing graffiti, Bonebrake said it would be difficult to catch the graffitist in the act.

"It is a punishable offense," Bonebrake said. "But it would be pretty hard to catch someone in the act. We're not about to barge into men's toilet stalls. That would just not be acceptable."

Influenza strikes the state, but it's not a Russian strain

By SHARON KALE
Collegian Reporter

Influenza is affecting much of Kansas, but there are no proven cases of Russian flu in the state.

"Influenza is an upper respiratory disease caused by as virus," said Donald Wilcox, the state epidemiologist for Kansas.

Michael Bradshaw, health educator at K-State, said that there are numerous cases of influenza at the University.

"Each year during the winter we get several hundred cases of influenza in December through March," Bradshaw said.

Influenza hasn't reached an epidemic level at K-State. When there are thousands of cases instead of hundreds, we will have an epidemic, Bradshaw said.

TO THE average, healthy college student, influenza isn't dangerous. There may be some complications, however.

When a person has influenza, he is more susceptible to a bacterial pneumonia because his immunity is lowered.

"If you have an outbreak of flu, a certain number of people will get pneumonia," Bradshaw said, saying this is more serious because some people can die from it.

These people who contract pneumonia are mostly from the high-risk group including elderly persons or people with chronic diseases.

Bradshaw said there isn't a lot that can be done to protect oneself from the flu.

"Usually by the time you know you have it, you have contaminated others," Bradshaw said.

INFLUENZA has an incubation period of 24 to 72 hours. If a person has been exposed to influenza, he will know in two or three days if he has contracted the disease.

Bradshaw said that the only real way to protect oneself from the flu is to stay away from crowds—a difficult task for most college students.

It will be difficult to determine exactly when the Russian flu is in Kansas, if it arrives here at all, Bradshaw said.

"It could be here and we wouldn't know it for a while. It is difficult to diagnose," Bradshaw said.

An outbreak of Russian flu has been confirmed in Wyoming, causing dizziness, congestion, nausea, soreness and fevers in its victims.

DON BERRETT, a spokesman for the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta, said that Russian flu can spread rapidly. He said he didn't know if it would develop into an epidemic in the U.S. this year.

Russian flu is expected to spread across the U.S. either this winter or next. The disease mostly affects people under 25 and over 50 years of age.

"The main concern with this particular disease is the number of individuals, especially the young, who have not been exposed," Bradshaw said.

Older people are more likely to have been exposed to other types of flu, such as the Hong Kong or Asian flu, and might have more immunity, he said.

In 1957 the Asian flu swept through the U.S., followed by the Hong Kong flu in 1968. Together these two diseases killed 90,000 people in the U.S.

The Russian flu, however, is not as severe as either of these strains, Bradshaw said.

Students drive toward goal by designing a golf course

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

The chance to design a golf course has been in the back of Alan Crawford's mind for a long time.

This year, as a senior honors project in the College of Engineering, Crawford, senior in civil engineering, and Wayne Helms, senior in civil engineering, designed a nine-hole grass-green course for Wakeeney, Kansas.

"As much as five years ago I had in the back of my mind that I might help out with the course's construction, but I didn't know I would be this much involved with it," Crawford, a Wakeeney native, said.

"About a year ago, a half section of land became available south of Wakeeney for a new course," Crawford said. "Since I had been involved in discussions about a possible new golf course at Wakeeney, I asked for the opportunity to work on the design and was given the 'go ahead'."

WHEN CRAWFORD realized all the work the project involved, he enlisted Helms to work with him.

The first step Crawford and Helms had to make was selecting 80 acres, within the half section of land for the course. After the two surveyed the land last summer, Helms made a contour map and last fall they decided where the holes for the course could be located.

Bob Smith, professor of civil engineering, and Alton Barnes, associate professor or landscape architecture, have supervised the two seniors' project.

Smith and Barnes provided information on how to design a golf course, how to line up holes and set up the greens, Crawford said.

Crawford used his professors' advice and his own knowledge of golf when he decided on basic hole placement and shape of the greens.

"I've been playing for eight years and have played on a lot of courses," he said. "So, their advice (Smith and Barnes) and my own experiences helped in the design of the course."

THE FACT that Helms isn't a golfer has worked to their advantage, Crawford said, because they aren't "second guessing each other all the time on which way the course should be constructed."

Crawford said he practiced hitting several shots on each proposed hole to get the right distances for the course layout. Two or three holes layed out naturally on the land, so they designed the rest of the course around these holes.

"We've completed the designing of the golf course," Crawford said. "Right now we're in the process of advising construction of the course."

Crawford staked out the fairways over the semester break and had the grass mowed. He said further construction depends on when the weather breaks.

They hope to finish construction of the course this summer in time to seed the greens and tees in the fall. The course will be ready to play on the following season, Crawford said.

BESIDES designing the course, Crawford and Helms have worked on layouts of a clubhouse area, parking area, driving range, a maintenance road, landscaping and have set up sub-divisions around the course.

The project started out to be a one credit hour project but they really didn't know what they were getting into, Crawford said. Since they are working on the course this semester, they will get another one hour of credit for their work he said.

"It has taken a lot more time than I had expected," Crawford said. "But I have a local interest. This is something I can always look back on as a contribution to my community."

Democrats, Republicans argue over sales tax credit proposal

TOPEKA (AP)—The $31.6 million difference between Gov. Robert Bennett's proposed sales tax credit for the elderly and disabled and the Senate Democrats' plan to give everybody a $17 credit affords "a lot of room for negotiation," Sen. Ross Doyen said Tuesday.

The Republican Senate president and three other top leaders of the Legislature discussed legislative issues, focusing on tax relief proposals, during the "Caucus '78" forum sponsored by the Kansas Association of Commerce and Industry.

Doyen said he thinks Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger has "overstated his case" in arguing there are sufficient funds available now in the state treasury to finance giving every one of Kansas' 2.3 million citizens a $17 credit or refund to compensate for the sales tax they pay on food. That proposal would cost $39.1 million.

Bennett's proposal to allow those who qualify for homestead property tax relief a $20 sales tax credit or refund would cost $7.5 million.

Steineger said the state will collect an estimated $33 million more in taxes during the current fiscal year than anticipated.

Women's studies gains acceptance; class enrollments increase by 100

By JULIE YERGER
Collegian Reporter

The Women's Studies program, offered for the first time last fall, is gaining popular acceptance among K-State students.

With an increase of 100 students since last semester, the present enrollment is 455 in women's studies courses.

"The program started because of the interest among students and faculty," said Sara Chapman, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Science and coordinator of the Women's Studies program.

"It's an objective inquiry into the issues, problems and special contributions of women," Chapman said.

THE PROGRAM was developed by the intercollegiate women's studies committee. This committee is responsible for the program, approves and sets standards for the courses.

"It leads to some self-

New rate proposal encourages use of alternative energy

TOPEKA (AP)—A Kansas Power and Light Co. official said Tuesday the utility is proposing new rates that would encourage use of solar, wind, water and other forms of energy.

William Brown, KPL manager of rates, said the proposal is part of a rate request now before the Kansas Corporation Commission.

Brown said if the proposal is approved, the rate would allow a customer to hook his own power system into the company's power grid.

"Any generating system with a capacity of 50 kilowatts or less that works can be interconnected if it can be operated safely and in phase with KPL's system," Brown said.

He said if someone has a small solar or wind generator and the sun isn't shining or the wind isn't blowing, it would not be necessary to have a large investment in batteries to provide backup power.

"Under our proposal, KPL will be the 'batteries' for a solar or wind system," Brown said.

He said the customer must be willing to supply necessary interconnecting devices, but KPL would supply metering and other services provided any customer.

understanding—and trying on a new perspective," said Mary Harris, assistant professor in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction and a member of the women's studies committee.

"There is also the recognition that women have an influence on history, the development of society and the education of children. Sometimes this has been overlooked and we need to recognize this in both women and men," Harris said.

The women's studies program is the first of its kind at K-State. It is offered as a secondary (or minor) major to be taken in conjunction with a primary major. No additional hours are required for graduation.

Women's studies courses are acceptable as general studies requirements and elective courses. In order to be certified in the program, 24 hours of electives should be taken from this curriculum.

"You don't have to take the major in addition to regular coursework," Chapman said. "This is something students have not been clear about."

WOMEN'S studies is an interdisciplinary program, consisting of the colleges of Arts and Science, Business, Education, and Home Economics.

"The strong thing about the program is the involvement of four colleges," Harris said. "A future hope is to include all colleges who have subject matter with a focus on women."

"The program is a recognition that women and women's concerns are legitimate subjects for academic study," she said.

"There was a need for more opportunity for study than the existing courses," Chapman said. "Women's studies was developed because of an interest in the roles and contributions of women. Previously there was no way to recognize work done by students in this area."

"The program is about women but not exclusively for women," she said. "We encourage more male enrollment. Anyone in any profession can benefit from these courses."

"For example, it can help men in business who will be working with women to promote understanding and provide a mutual growing process," Chapman said.

Committee considers probe into grain trade practices

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill designed as the first step in a multistate investigation of the international grain trade got a mixed reception Tuesday in a Senate committee.

Ivan Wyatt, vice president of the Kansas Farmers Union, urged passage of the bill, saying "our present marketing system is neither free nor is it working for the producer."

But Paul Fleener, lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau, said he thought the state could initiate a study of grain marketing practices now through the state's four grain commodity commissions.

Hearings on the bill were to continue today. Establishment of the commission would cost $200,000 plus another $20,000 a year to operate.

The measure calls for a nine-member committee which would contact other grain-producing states to initiate a coordinated probe of the grain marketing industry and to suggest ways of remedying low farm prices.

WYATT TOLD the Senate Agriculture and Livestock Committee that the nation's present cheap food policy would lead to the extinction of the family farm. He said an investigation by a regional body armed with subpoena power might turn up information that would help farmers get better prices for their crops.

"If our free-market systems is to survive, it must work," he said. "If the people of Kansas believe in free enterprise, and we believe they do, then it is the responsibility of government to see to it that free enterprise works. Our present market system is neither free nor is it working for the producer."

William Daniels, a farmer from Cimmaron and a member of the Farmers Union, told the committee the study commission is necessary to assure farmers they are getting an honest deal.

"I suspect someone or some group is manipulating prices in our marketing system so that farmers are forever shut off from fair prices," he said. "I believe the whole situation needs to be investigated."

SEN. Richard Gannon (D-

Goodland) one of the sponsors of the bill, said there is widespread suspicion of price-fixing by giant grain marketing firms, and he said such an investigation would be designed to determine if that was true. He said such a commission would collect marketing information and make it public so that a few exclusive firms wouldn't have an edge.

"The power that these few grain companies wield in controlling the world grain market also allows them to directly control world grain prices," Gannon said.

Battle rages over ERA rescission

TOPEKA (AP)—Sen. John Vermillion continued his war of words Tuesday with Attorney General Curt Schneider over rescission of the Equal Rights Amendment, accusing him of issuing confusing opinions.

"The people of Kansas deserve clear and distinct opinions from your office, rather than the confusion that comes about when you do not get a straightforward opinion," Vermillion said in a letter to Schneider.

Schneider earlier this week took Vermillion to task for taking "ill considered and palpably groundless complaints" to the attorney general's office. He also accused Vermillion of either not reading previous legal opinions regarding rescission or being incapable of understanding them.

Vermillion said he felt the fact that Schneider had issued several opinions in the past on the issue proved his point that many people haven't understood what Schneider has said.

"I think one of your problems, Mr. Attorney General, is that you are trying to be on both sides of this issue at the same time," he said. "However, I think your letter on Feb. 6, 1978, has taken you off the fence on this issue and placed you in a clear and distinct position of saying that the Kansas Legislature does have the authority to adopt their own resolution which does rescind the action of the 1972 Legislature" ratifying the ERA.

Schneider has said in his opinions that the Legislature may rescind its ratification of the ERA, but it was up to Congress to determine its validity. So far, 35 states have voted to ratify the ERA, three short of the required 38.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee has scheduled hearings today on Vermillion's resolution to rescind the amendment.

The K-State Wildcats will set their three game winning streak on the line tonight when they travel to Lincoln to take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

series with the Cornhuskers and has posted victories in four of its last five trips to Lincoln.

Pacing a well-rounded Nebraska offense is 6-8 center Carl McPipe, who is averaging 15.1 points and eight rebounds per contest. Junior guard Brian Banks, 6-0, is averaging 14.5 points an outing and super-sub Andre Smith has averaged 12.3 points and 5.6 rebounds per game in league play.

DEFENSIVELY, the Cornhuskers are among the nations top ten allowing foes only 61.8 points per game.

The 'Cats, who have opened up on offense the past three games, are led in scoring by Curtis Redding's 20.5 points per game and Mike Evans' 20.1. Rolando Blackman and Steve Soldner are also averaging in double figures in Big Eight play with 10.8 and 10.7 points, respectively.

'Angry Killers': warm-up as Docs

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

"We all had a great time. We were having some fun and getting some exercise because we really don't get a lot of exercise in veterinary school, other than pushing a pencil," said Jim Felton, senior in veterinary medicine.

But even when they're having fun playing recreational basketball as the Angry Killer Macrophages, 12 veterinary students don't put their curriculum out of their minds.

"A macrophage is a cell that circulates in the body and is part of the body's defense mechanism," team member Felton said. "It seeks out infectious bacteria and kills them."

"One instructor made a big deal of the 'angry killer macrophages'," Felton said.

"When we got up this team,

Fur will fly; Wildcats vs. Bearkittens

Coming off three big wins during the past week, the K-State women's basketball team sets itself to play Northwest Missouri State tonight in Ahearn Field House with tipoff slated for 7:30 p.m.

The 'Cats moved their record to 14-12 with victories over Wichita State, 84-63, Nebraska, 63-57, and Missouri, 71-61, in five days.

Northwest Missouri State brings a 17-5 mark under coach Mark Poulson into tonight's clash.

K-State trails 2-3 in the five year series with Northwest Missouri State that includes a 71-51 loss to the Bearkittens a year ago.

THE BEARKITTENS are led by 5-10 forward, Janet Cooksey, who is averaging 15 points a contest.

another vet student thought the name sounded good. It caught on and we adopted it."

THE TEAM has veterinary style warm-ups before the games.

"Every vet student has to buy a scrub suit," Felton said. "A scrub suit is green pants and a green short sleeved shirt that the students wear under their gowns while performing surgery. It's kind of like pajamas."

About three days before their first game, the team members decided it would be pretty funny to wear their scrub suits to warm up in, Felton said.

"We came up with some awful corny releases for our frustrations and tensions or whatever," he said.

FELTON said he and a friend came out of the locker room before their game and passed two girls on their way to the court.

"The two girls eyes got real big and one said, 'Oh no, here comes the AVMA (American Veterinary Medical Association)'."

The general spectator reaction was disbelief, Felton said.

Imagination and creativity don't win games though, and the Angry Killer Macrophages lost their season opener, 24-12.

Nobody felt bad about losing, Felton said.

"Winning isn't the important thing. It's just a little relaxation and fun. That's what we did it for."

Chip off the coach's block

The same words describe the players on Jack Hartman's basketball teams 99 times out of 100. (Curtis Redding is naturally the exception.)

K-State basketball players have been rightfully stereotyped as polite, well-mannered young men. They are disciplined on and off of the court. They are usually soft-spoken and not too emotional. They are intense basketball players with friendly personalities. And they all respect their coach.

As Lon Kruger and Daryl Winston continue to show the personality traits characteristic of K-State players as assistant coaches here at K-State, another former Wildcat, Bob Chipman, does the same at Washburn University in Topeka.

CHIPMAN, who is currently in the running for the head coaching job at Wayne State in Nebraska, played basketball at K-State in 1971-72 and 1972-73, after two years at Flint Junior College near his home in Davison, Mich.

K-State won the Big Eight championship both years Chipman played. The Wildcats also went as far as the final game of the Midwest Regional in the NCAA Tournament both years. As a senior, Chipman started for the 'Cats as a guard opposite Kruger.

Chipman said he took one extra semester to graduate after his basketball eligibility ran out. Since there were no teaching jobs open in December, he said he decided to start graduate school.

"I really enjoyed it. K-State has an excellent physical education program for masters degree candidates. Charles Corbin had a big influence on me. He sort of inspired me," Chipman said.

IN 1975, he completed his masters degree in physical education with an emphasis in exercise physiology.

"They won't believe that," Chipman said. "Dr. Zuti will say, I don't know that."

Chipman spent the next year in Manhattan substitute teaching and working at a Mini-Mart. He also started his thesis, which he has almost completed.

In 1976, he was hired at Washburn. He is an assistant basketball coach, tennis coach and physical education instructor.

CHIPMAN said his job keeps him busy.

"Most nights I go to high school or junior college games to recruit or I scout our opponents or we have a game," he said.

When he is not coaching, Chipman is often playing basketball. He plays in the city league in Topeka and on an Amateur Athletes Union (AAU) basketball team, the Alma Chefs.

This is his third year on the AAU team. Kruger and other former K-State and area college graduates make up the team.

"There's not much free time," Chipman said. "I like to have a date once in a while."

BUT BASKETBALL isn't ever out of his mind too long. It has played an important part in his life.

"The biggest thing I ever gained from K-State basketball was that I grew up a lot. I had never been away from home. I was real immature," Chipman said.

"I respect Coach Hartman a lot. He did a lot for me other than basketball.

"He's a knowledgeable man. He knows personalities. He knows how much you can take. I'm sure he knew I was immature. He made me grow up.

"It was painful at the time. But now I look back and I really appreciate all he did for me."

HARTMAN often tells of his own respect for his college basketball coach and the way his coach influenced his life. Today, young coaches like Chipman, Kruger and Winston say the same things about their coach through their words and actions.

Chipman isn't sure of his future plans. He said he would like to get his doctorate in physical education. And he would also like to be head coach at a high school, junior college or small college.

Anyone familiar with players on Hartman's teams can guess what type of coach Chipman is.

The other two Washburn coaches often show their emotions during a game, but Chipman's emotions aren't observable.

Last week at a game, the other two coaches jumped up from the bench on both sides of Chipman. They threw their arms into the air in disagreement with a referee's call. But Chipman remained seated, calm and collected. He leaned forward a little and talked to the players on the court. Then he clapped once or twice.

He acts like a K-State basketball player.

Kentucky holds onto top spot in poll; Cornhuskers make appearance at 19

By The Associated Press

The top five teams in last week's Associated Press Top Twenty college basketball rankings each held its position in this week's poll.

But the second 15 lost almost half their games, resulting in a wholesale shuffling of teams.

Kentucky, 16-1, beat Georgia, 90-73, and Florida, 88-61, and kept its No. 1 ranking with 1,140 points.

Arkansas, now 21-1, beat Texas, 75-71, and Rice, 69-48, and got 879 points to remain No. 2. Third-ranked Marquette beat Penn State, 73-60, then was extended to two overtime periods before defeating South Carolina, 69-66. The Warriors, 17-2, garnered 836 points.

The Wildcats collected 52 of 57 first-place ballots cast by the nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Arkansas received two first-place votes, No. 4 Notre Dame got two and sixth-place New Mexico received one.

NOTRE DAME, 16-3, received 723 points as the Irish beat LaSalle, 95-90, and Davidson, 100-76. UCLA, beat Stanford, 101-64, and California, 94-75, to improve its record to 16-2. The Bruins received 566 points.

New Mexico, 17-2, beat

Wyoming, 94-91, and Colorado State, 91-82, and moved up from 10th. North Carolina beat Mercer, 73-70, and Virginia Tech, 101-88, but lost to Furman, 89-83, and fell from sixth to No. 7 with an 18-4 record.

Kansas, 18-3, beat Oklahoma State, 83-65, and Oklahoma, 69-68, and remained at No. 8. Louisville, 14-3, beat Marshall, 85-69, and Cincinnati, 83-76, to remain ninth.

Michigan State, 16-3, stumbled from seventh to No. 10 after losing, 71-66, to Indiana and, 65-63, to Michigan before defeating Indiana, 68-59.

DEPAUL, 18-2, moved up from 13th to 11th as the Blue Demons beat Creighton and Oral Roberts. Texas, 18-3, beat Houston and TCU but lost to Arkansas and remained at No. 12.

Virginia, 15-3, beat Maryland but lost to Wake Forest and dropped two notches to 13th.

Candidates differ on minority problem solution

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a four part series dealing with candidates for student body president and their positions on the issues of reapportionment, minorities, parking and the effectiveness of student senate.

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

Although the five student body presidential candidates agree measures should be taken to create a university atmosphere to make minorities feel more welcome and more minorities should be integrated into the University community, they differ on the methods.

Candidates Stan Watt, Cindy Thomas, Bernard Shaw, Ted Knopp and Sam Brownback agree minorities should become a more active participant in University activities, including faculty and administrative roles as well as students' activities.

Stan Watt said his coming from a white, male category limits his identification with minority needs but doesn't believe that will hinder his effectiveness in solving their problems.

"My white, male background doesn't say I can relate with them, but it won't stop me from working with them," Watt said. "The key is communication, cooperation and working with them."

THE MOST important minority need according to Watt is making minorities feel a part of the University world.

Watt proposes to work on a more appealing public relations campaign for minorities and improving the minority ratio in the administrative and faculty area.

Implementing an ethnic degrees program at K-State to promote the hiring of minority faculty is proposed by Cindy Thomas.

"The only way this University can change this perspective—the problems minorities face on the campus—is to have more faculty and administrators on this campus," Thomas said.

Because the program would offer classes in all areas of ethnic studies, the University would have to hire more minority faculty to teach the classes, she said.

Russian Flu hits

Air Force Academy

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP)—An outbreak of Russian flu among cadets at the U.S. Air Force Academy has peaked, but cases now have been confirmed at Lowry Air Force Base in Denver and in Michigan.

Until this week, the only confirmed cases of the disease in this country had been last month among school children in Cheyenne, Wyo.

Dr. Timm Edell, a disease expert with the Colorado Department of Health, said Tuesday that two cases of Russian flu had been confirmed among recruits at Lowry. He said sick call visits at the base had jumped from 15 to 20 a day to more than 100 a day since Feb. 1.

Edell also said that flu-like illness is widespread throughout Colorado with 10,973 cases reported since Jan. 1, more than three times the number reported in the corresponding period in 1977.

The Michigan Health Department also reported Tuesday that laboratory tests had confirmed that a 19-year-old Michigan State University student and a 20-year-old factory worker in Tecumseh had contracted the disease.

Because the minority fraternities and sororities serve as a means for cultural interaction, Thomas said she would work to get the minority fraternities and sororities accepted into Panhellenic. She said this move would help strengthen those units.

BERNARD Shaw said minority students need to become more active in the University activities but lack the guidance.

Shaw criticized the small representation of minorities on Student Senate, but said it was due to lack of interest by minority students.

"Minorities need to be more active themselves," he said. "They seem to be expecting handouts."

Shaw said he plans to re-educate the minorities and raise the consciousness of community.

Shaw also said the minorities are suffering from a conflict of interest and need to focus their attention on specific activities.

GETTING minorities involved in all areas of the University to raise the consciousness of their problems and increase the awareness of minorities is the primary concern of Ted Knopp.

Knopp said there has been the problem of under-representation of minorities in Student Senate, the faculty and administrative areas.

"We need to actively recruit minority faculty members and get them tenured before financial exigency hits and there is less hiring of faculty—minority or not," he said.

"Any progress made would have to be an all-University attempt, including the administrative, the department heads, and faculty heads," he said.

Sam Brownback said there is "a need to do more to get more representation and more involvement of minorities."

Brownback said minority representation has done well in certain areas but believes it can do better.

He said there is a critical shortage of minority faculty and a need for more minority faculty.

Use of a "Kitchen Cabinet," an informal group to bring student concerns to Brownback, is already in operation, he said.

According to Brownback, there is good minority representation on that board.

Brownback said he also plans to have a minority administrative assistant on his cabinet. The job of the assistant would be to get underclassmen minorities involved in campus activities.

DOWNSTOWN

Continuing storms show Mother Nature's punch

By The Associated Press

Snow, winds and floodwaters brought a second day of misery to millions in the blizzard-plagued Northeast on Tuesday, and residents of some Midwestern areas also faced hardship from bitter cold and new storms.

Trouble spots ranged from Boston—where a power blackout compounded the blizzard problems—to Billings, Mont., which was struck by snow on Monday and faced continued blizzard warnings on Tuesday. Even Anchorage, Alaska, had to close its schools for the first time since 1964, because of snow which started Saturday and was still falling heavily.

More than two dozen storm-related deaths, some from over-exertion shoveling snow or struggling through drifts, were reported across the nation.

The snow in the Northeast began Sunday night—barely two weeks after the last blizzard—and was still falling in some parts Tuesday afternoon, although it was less severe than earlier and was expected to taper off during the day. Accumulations ranged from one to two feet.

TRANSPORTATION was at a near standstill. Airports in the Northeast were closed, and airports in other parts of the country were jammed with passengers unable to reach their snowbound destinations.

"We're the only thing that's open," said Fred Wilder, a Civil Defense dispatcher in the Pocono Mountains town of Stroudsburg, Pa. "We're trying to get everybody in God's creation to help plow these people out."

Almost no area of the nation was spared bad weather in one form or another. Chicago, still recovering from a blizzard 12 days ago, was hit by an unexpected storm that began Monday afternoon and left nine inches of new snow on the ground.

Near-zero temperatures were recorded in northern Georgia, and the National Weather Service forecast snow by today. Oklahoma got its sixth snowfall in 22 days with accumulations of up to six inches.

South Bend, Ind., shivered in morning temperatures of 14 below zero—a record. Parts of Kansas got up to three inches of snow overnight and predictions of two more inches on Tuesday. Sections of Wisconsin bordering on Lake Michigan were hit by one and one-half feet of snow overnight; the weather service forecast another two to four inches by tonight.

A FREIGHT train was stuck for four hours in a 12-foot snowdrift in North Dakota. Winds up to 40 miles per hour dropped the wind-chill index to 45 below in Montana.

Northern California, already soaked by a weekend downpour, was hit by a new round of heavy rains which caused a rash of rush-hour traffic accidents, minor flooding and mudslides.

One after another, governors and mayors declared states of emergency, banning non-essential traffic. National Guardsmen were called out to help clear snow and rescue stranded motorists. Several officials asked President Carter to declare the Northeast a federal disaster area.

Senate energy committee requests appearance of state director Harris

TOPEKA (AP)—The state's new energy director, Steven Harris, will appear before the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee after all.

Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains) bowed to wishes of his committee Tuesday and said he would invite Harris to appear Feb. 17.

The decision came after Sen. Jack Janssen (D-Lyons) complained that Angell had not scheduled an appearance for the energy chief despite a promise he would do so.

He noted that Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar (R-Westwood) said shortly after the session began that he thought it was a good idea to have agency heads nominated by the governor appear before committees which deal with their area of expertise.

"I came to you shortly thereafter and asked if Harris could be scheduled, and you assured me that you would," Janssen said. "You told me you'd have him in Thursday. Many Thursdays have past and he's not appeared. Now are we going to have him or not?"

Harris, who was named by Gov. Robert Bennett last year to head the energy office, is under fire by some lawmakers who have questioned his credibility.

Enroll in K-State's student health insurance plan.

Insurance may be something you haven't thought much about. But maybe you should . . . just in case! It's like preparing for an exam. You can't always anticipate all the questions, so you 'cram' as much as possible, just in case you need the information. Insurance works that same way.

You can't anticipate a broken bone or mono or appendicitis. And you hope they don't happen. But you can plan ahead for the expenses that accompany such a sickness or accident . . . just in case!

That's the whole idea behind your University's student insurance program. To make sure sudden and unanticipated medical expenses don't disrupt your studies or college budget.

That's why your Student Senate carefully selected K-State's new plan. Underwritten by Mutual of Omaha, it provides hospital-surgical protection for all sorts of sickness and accidents. Plus benefits for doctor's calls, X-rays, ambulance and miscellaneous benefits. Right from the start of the new semester, right on through next summer.

We want you to enjoy the excitement of your University years without the worries of doctor and hospital bills. That's our job.

For your convenience, we'll be in the Student Union.

Brownback violates residence hall policy

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Sam Brownback, a candidate for student body president, has admitted to breaking rules of the Association of Residence Halls (ARH) when he went soliciting door-to-door at Haymaker Hall two weeks ago.

According to Fred Works, president of ARH, door-to-door solicitation is prohibited in residence halls.

"Basically, the (ARH) rules are written to protect residents from businesses," Works said.

Brownback said he didn't intentionally break the ARH rules.

"The week before last, I was trying to get maximum student input, so I was going up there (Haymaker Hall) to talk to a friend," Brownback said.

BROWNBACK said his friend introduced him to some of the residents for the purpose of discussing student issues.

"I was just trying to hear what people want to say," Brownback said.

Works said the ARH rules don't deal specifically with political candidates, but political soliciting is not allowed.

Works said when Brownback was informed of the ARH rules, he stopped soliciting door-to-door.

Brownback said nobody had informed him personally about the ARH rules but a campaign worker had been told.

A member of the SGA election committee said it was unknown at this time what action, if any, would be taken against Brownback.

Hillside Strangler arrest prompted by phone call

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A balding, moustached 37-year-old actor was booked for investigation of murder Wednesday after he called police to talk about the Hillside Strangler case, officers said.

The man, identified as Ned York, was arrested at his home in the Hollywood Hills. Some of the bodies of the dozen victims of the strangler have been found in the hills, police said.

"He made certain statements that provided investigators enough cause to make the arrest," Assistant Police Chief Daryl Gates told a news conference. He said York's statement suggested that he had a relationship with one of the strangler victims.

The 6-foot-4, 240-pound actor has played mostly small roles in a variety of television series. His last known appearance was earlier this month in a rerun episode of ABC's "Starsky and Hutch."

YORK WAS wearing an arm sling when he was arrested, explaining to officers that he had been hurt in a scuffle with his dog.

A neighbor, Juan Lazcano, described York as a "normal man, a nice person." He said York was married.

Police said York called officers Wednesday morning and rambled incoherently about the much publicized strangler case. He later was taken to headquarters.

Police Cmdr. William Booth declined to disclose what prompted police to book York.

"Don't get too excited about this closing the book on the whole investigation," Booth said.

The arrest came one day after police released part of the contents of a six-page handwritten letter purportedly sent by the strangler last month to Mayor Tom Bradley and appealed again for the strangler to surrender.

POLICE HAD said they were not sure whether the letter actually was written by the strangler, but Bradley promised the writer full protection should he turn himself in.

York apparently did not write the letter, police said.

The bodies of the strangler's victims all have been found in hilly areas near roads or freeways in sections and suburbs north of the city—the first on Sept. 9 and the last on Dec. 14.

Several of the victims were connected with prostitution or the Hollywood street scene, police said.

Mandy Green, assistant to "Starsky and Hutch" producer Joe Naar, said York did two episodes of the police series, "Nightmare," first shown Nov. 28, 1976, and "Murder Ward," first shown Oct. 8, 1977.

Both episodes were rerun within the last month on a late night ABC mystery series.

In "Nightmare," York played a police officer and "had two or three lines," she said. The episode was a lighthearted piece in which Starsky and Hutch attempt to bust a gangster.

Senate opens canal debate; members split on ratification

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate opened debate Wednesday on the future of the Panama Canal—a subject one lawmaker called "the most intensive foreign policy issue for the United States since the Vietnam war."

That judgment was offered by Sen. Clifford Case (R-N.J.) as he joined others in backing a proposal by the Carter administration to turn the 64-year-old waterway over to Panama by the year 2000.

As the politically-charged issue reached the Senate floor for an expected month or more of debate, both backers and opponents of the agreement still were looking for decisive votes. Neither side had the votes to swing the outcome their way.

KEYNOTING the debate was Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who urged approval of the agreement after the insertion of certain leadership-backed amendments clarifying future U.S. defense and canal access rights.

Sparkman cautioned, however, that "the Senate would be making a serious mistake if it allowed itself to get bogged down in useless debate on matters not directly related to the real purpose of the treaties."

It will take a two-thirds vote in the Senate to pass the two treaties, one of which would gradually turn control of the canal over to Panama during a 22-year period and another which would guarantee the neutrality of the canal and U.S. access and defense rights to the waterway after Panama assumes full control in the year 2000.

In a nationally televised reply to President Carter's pro-treaty "fireside chat" last week, former California Gov. Ronald Reagan urged rejection of the treaties as "not in the national interest" of the United States.

While the United States should find ways to "strengthen bonds" with Panama, Reagan said, "we must seek alternatives . . . that will preserve our basic rights to use the canal permanently."

REAGAN, given a half-hour of equal time by CBS, also challenged the Carter administration's claim that the canal treaty would cost taxpayers nothing, citing published estimates that canal operations could not be fully financed through toll increases projected under the treaties.

Sparkman is serving as "nominal" floor leader for the debate but will share the chore with other treaty proponents. The opposition also will split up the task with Sen. Robert Griffin (R-Mich.), serving as the nominal quarterback.

In his opening remarks, Griffin explained why he was the only member of the Foreign Relations Committee to oppose the treaties, saying he found them "riddled with ambiguities, with defects so serious that they cannot be corrected by rewriting on the Senate floor."

SEN. JAMES ALLEN, (D-Ala.), a treaty foe who is widely regarded as a wizard in parliamentary strategy, won a ruling that members could filibuster on each of the two treaties that form the canal agreement. But he was rebuffed in seeking to have them voted on article by article. Vice-President Walter Mondale said the treaties would be considered that way, with only one vote on the final document.

Allen, who has said he does not intend to filibuster the treaties but wants them "voted up or down," promised that the debate would not be tied up with delaying tactics. But he said there are "literally dozens" of substantive amendments that must be considered.

Committee favors arterial highway

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

Citizens of the south side of Manhattan met Wednesday night with city officials to discuss recommendations for an arterial highway that would be located on the Rock Island railroad tracks south of the city.

Bill Smith, head of the committee, pointed out that "we are not talking about a by-pass but are talking about an added arterial to the city's system which happened to be in the southern end."

Smith said the arterial would relieve Yuma Street of increased traffic flow from the west into Manhattan. He said the flow increased 300-fold in the last 15 years.

The committee recommended the city purchase the Rock Island railroad track and make its path into a new arterial system.

THE ROCK Island tracks have been chosen because they have only four trains running on them in a 24 hour period. It is generally believed the tracks are in poor condition.

"There is a possibility to build two lanes at a time. I would anticipate four lanes altogether," Smith said.

"There is a possibility with the acquisition of the railroad right of way, we could design open places for a park-like situation," he said.

There had been a meeting earlier in the day with Rock Island and Union Pacific Railroad officials to discuss the possible buying of the tracks.

"Both tended to agree to abandon the Rock Island track for this purpose," said Marvin Butler, director of the Community Development department.

THE COST of switching the four Rock Island trains to the Union Pacific tracks is estimated at $200,000. The cost would include new switching and signaling devices. Neither of the railroads could bear the costs at this time, Butler said.

Butler said the city is investigating ways the city could receive funds to purchase the tracks for the highway.

"There are federal funds for this purpose. Contact is now being made with other cities who have used such funds," Butler said.

"We have also contacted Martha Keys' office and they are going to look into it," he said.

"This is just a preliminary presentation," Gary Stith, city planner, said.

Senate studies change in elections schedule

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Jill Gardner says her pastry art exhibit featuring cookies baked with broken glass and such delicacies as "Hot Gross Buns" is "all about attraction mixed with revulsion."

"Some people might say this is about American eating habits, some might say it's about sexual frustration," said Gardner, 21, whose "How Sweet It Is Emporium" opened Wednesday at the Kansas City Art Institute where she is a student.

"There is a lot of me in it—sex, art, childhood," she said.

"That's a great thing about it. I get to play with my food and call it art."

The show is set up to resemble a bakery. Among items for sale are Crepes, rolled rubber discs containing vaseline, glue, toothpicks and matches, and looking like crepes. A collection of crescent rolls has newspaper clippings, steel wool and rubber bands among its ingredients. Viewers can be teased by Nitty Gritty Dirt Bread—baked loaves of "whole earth" gravel, straw and mulch; and Dreadzels—glass-filled pretzels.

"People see these cookies with glass and needles and nails sticking out, and their first feeling is wanting to eat them, even though they know they're dangerous," Gardner said.

Her instructor at the institute, Hugh Merrill, said the show "is aggressive ... well done in a fertile area of taking an everyday object, basically defenseless ... and transforming it into something obnoxious, lethally dangerous, causing the viewer to focus in on things they take for granted, such as what may be called women's work being examined by women."

Gardner put on her first one-woman art show in 1975. But the pastry exhibit represents a bizarre new step.

"It was just an experiment in basic dough. Like being a mad chemist," she said. "I set the kitchen on fire twice ..."

Although many of the items are inedible, some are tasty even though they look repugnant. There are heart-shaped cookies appearing to drip blood, and gingerbread figures sporting peg legs.

Those who have seen it so far, Gardner said, have shown "... little negative reaction, although my mother looked at it and said, 'Weird, Jill, weird.'"

A bill to establish yearly Student Senate elections will be considered today by Senate at 7 p.m. in the Union Big 8 room.

The bill provides for one election in the fourth full week of classes in the spring semester. Senate elections are currently held twice yearly, with half of the members elected each time.

"Basically, the bill is to improve efficiency and continuity within senate," Cindy Thomas, sponsor of the bill, said.

The bill would allow senate to work together for a longer period of time.

Now, senate is either campaigning or allocating funds. If the bill is passed, there will be more time for committee work, Thomas said.

Senate will also consider a bill to formally express disapproval for closing the gymnasium to students during the noon hour.

The bill requests the policy be discontinued after March 15, when the experimental stage is over.

"Basically, we disapprove of the actions taken to keep students out of the gym during the noon hour," Thomas, a co-sponsor of the bill, said.

If the bill passes senate, it will be considered by Faculty Senate.

"We could possibly form a committee with a group of faculty members to work out the problem," Thomas said.

Sadat heads home

WASHINGTON—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat ended his talks here Wednesday without an immediate decision by President Carter to sell him jet fighters. But the United States leveled new criticism at Israel for sending settlers into occupied Arab lands.

"Further settlement activity would be inconsistent with the effort to reach a peace settlement," the White House said after a final meeting between the two leaders.

Carter, in an emotional farewell, called Sadat "the world's foremost peacemaker" and noted the Bible calls peacemakers "the sons of God."

Prices going up

WASHINGTON—Prices are likely to increase between six to seven percent a year for the next several years unless the government acts to restrain them, the head of the Carter administration's anti-inflation agency said Wednesday.

"The current outlook for inflation is extremely dismal," Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, told the House Budget Committee.

He said the risk that inflation could get even worse is greater than the possibility it could improve especially if there is another economic shock, such as an increase in oil prices.

Radar checks passers

MEMPHIS—The Dallas Cowboys are aiming to keep their top spot in professional football and are packing some new hardware to assure that.

The National Football League Super Bowl champions are using a radar speed gun to determine how fast some collegiate prospects throw the football.

"This is our first year of using it. We just bought it last summer and used it in training camp some and are using it now," Gil Brandt, the Cowboys' vice president for personnel, said Wednesday.

The handheld gun is used extensively by law enforcement agencies to catch speeding motorists and a similar device has been used in baseball to determine the velocity of pitches and also in tennis to time a player's serve. But it is thought to be the first instance of the gun being used to help a football team gain information useful in the drafting of college players.

Court convicts policemen

HOUSTON—Three former Houston policemen were convicted in federal court Wednesday of violating the civil rights of a Mexican-American laborer who drowned in a bayou while he was their prisoner.

They could be sentenced to life in prison. Two of the defendants were convicted of a misdemeanor in state court in connection with the death and were given one year probation.

The three were found guilty of two counts, one a felony, but innocent of actually pushing the prisoner into the water. One defense lawyer said his client would appeal.

The officers were accused of slapping and kicking Joe Campos Torres, who had been arrested in a barroom disturbance and taken to an isolated area near police headquarters, before he went off a bluff 16 feet into the bayou.

Local Forecast

Snow accumulations of one to three inches are possible today with highs in the 20s. Lows tonight in the mid teens. Friday will be mostly cloudy with highs in the 20s.

Parking permit sales excessive

All it takes is a few inches of snow to bring out the very worst of the parking problem at K-State.

For, in times such as these, when a layer of snow obscures the painted parking space stripes, drivers feel that they have the right to park their cars in any position they want, whether it be hanging out into the driving lanes (sealing them off to any traffic other than two-wheeled vehicles), blocking entrances and exits to the parking lots, or simply parking at wierd angles in the spaces, such as sideways or backwards.

SINCE THERE aren't enough parking spaces to begin with, this situation forces many legitimate long-distance commuters to park off-campus.

But many of the people in this university community have the choice of walking to campus.

These people live in the much-talked-about five-block fringe area of campus.

This area contains a great number of University people—students, faculty, administrators and other University personnel.

It has been proposed that the sale of parking permits be discontinued to residents of this area.

BUT THIS idea has not been accepted by the K-State administration.

One reason is that the idea would not be popular to the people who are accustomed to driving from their doorstep to the campus (even though it may be only a few blocks).

But perhaps the main reason is that by not selling parking permits to these thousands of residents, K-State would lose a pile of money.

Yes, selling parking permits for parking spaces that do not exist is a very profitable venture.

But, unless K-State administrators come up with a new and remarkable solution for the parking problem, the University may have to give up this lucrative sideline.

IT WOULD not be such a "cruel and unnatural" sacrifice to make.

Very few universities of this size in the U.S. would dream of selling parking permits to areas surrounding the campus, as K-State now does.

But all will not be lost.

If the University does lose this source of revenue, perhaps there will be a market in selling parking permits for an all-new, super-deluxe, high-rise, imaginary parking garage.

Three cheers for capitalism.

'Mandabi' review 'lacks empathy'

Editor,

RE: Jim Chalfant's review of Ousmane Sembene's film, "Mandabi."

Seldom have I read a more sarcastic, myopic and ethnocentric review.

Mr. Chalfant does not like the film particularly—not because the plot makes no sense, or the acting or cinematography is bad—but because it "just has too many... distractions" and "it's just too foreign to our own culture to be interesting." He wrote that despite his assertion that "the message is universal."

So much for cross-cultural understanding and empathy.

What is further aggravating is Mr. Chalfant's flip and almost insulting attitude: "In whatever language they speak in Senegal..."

One can easily find out what the language is, but one assumes that is too much work and not worth the bother since it is too strange and different anyway.

But since he does not know what the language is, Mr. Chalfant has no basis on which to judge the translation and sub-titles.

Since so strange and different maybe the Senegalese speak in a "trite" and "cliche-ridden" manner!

Having seen the film (and having some criticisms of my own) I find nothing "funny" in sequences depicting the destruction of a man and his family.

And finally, Mr. Chalfant clearly knows little about anthropology if the only points of such interest he can note are the activities of barbers and foot-washing.

If the Collegian wishes to review foreign films, it might send reviewers of a more empathetic leaning and with fewer cultural hang-ups of their own.

Maybe "Ma and Pa Kettle" will suffice for the others.

All letters must be signed and include the year in school, classification and the telephone number of the writer.

Letters may be submitted (preferably typed) in either Kedzie 116 or 103.

Jett Anderson

Jett's coma-column

EDITOR'S NOTE: Collegian News Editor Jett Anderson is now a statistic. He is one of many struck down in the line of duty by the dreaded "winter cold virus germ plague" and is now vegetating in Lafene Student Health Center with a genuine case of pneumonia.

Several other Collegian staffers have likewise bitten the dirt in the last few days and, to the skeleton crew that is managing this operation, Jett has sent a message of cheer and encouragement.

Oddities in the content and style of the letter should be attributed to the fact that Jett is "under treatment" and, in his drug-crazed state of mind, he can't be held responsible.

To my dear friends and neighbors on the outside,

I thought I would write you a note since I am conscious for the moment and am bored. Bloody sorry about deserting you all. I fought it off as long as I could, but it finally got me.

So about three of you are still healthy, huh? Maybe we should shut down the Collegian for three days and let everyone read "Today's Student," the paper for "thinking people."

My room is charming. It is painted two lovely shades of lima bean green. And, of course, I have a beautiful view of the Physical Plant. Case should be proud. The Monday morning whistles sound great from 200 feet. They remind me of being in Haymaker when my neighbor turns up his stereo.

Speaking of stereo, Doc says I do have pneumonia—both sides, of course. But then, I always was a lung man. My temp was down most of today. Last night when it got up to 104 some 7-foot, 9-inch tall orderly named Lurch "convinced" me to sit in a bathtub of cold water. It wasn't the highlight of my stay. When they let me out, the nurse put four ice packs on my body for another 90 minutes. I won't tell you where she put them, but I think we have to get married.

Anyway, the temp went down today but is starting to rise again.

AS YOU CAN imagine, things are really hopping up here in the attic of Lafene. My roommate is brushing his teeth for the seventh time today. I think he is related to Felix Unger. All he does is wash his hands, brush his teeth and wash his hands again.

Dinner was dynamite. The main course tonight was porcupine meatballs. I wonder where they found porcupine this time of year? Dessert was a strawberry tart with whipped cream served in a baggy. It wasn't very appetizing. I just kept thinking of the time I was seven years old and put by brother's white rat in the blender.

Speaking of white rats in the blender, who wrote that jewel for Tuesday's paper "Windows give K-State cows something to moo about?"

Just remember that gem was in the same issue in which Chris offered to share our journalistic expertise with our less fortunate brethren at Cosmo U.

Someone yell at the R2s to get some decent news tips in. I am sure our readers love reading about germ-free white rats in home economics but we aren't going to pick up any Pulitzers that way.

SPEAKING OF R2s, did we lose very many to initiations back at "the house?" From watching the personals in the classifieds, it looks like the casualties could run pretty high.

I have been laying flat on my painful back for two days and am beginning to feel like something out of an Alfred Hitchcock movie. I keep expecting Betty Davis and Cary Grant to walk up beside my bed and see Betty start saying "And this is our cousin Albert. Albert was kicked in the head by a horse when he was three years old. How are you feeling today Albert? Quit making that face Albert (slap). Do you hear me (slap, slap)? Quit making that face (slap)! I'm warning you (slap). I won't let you play with the rabbit (slap, slap)!"

As you can see, the drugs are getting to my brain.

Anyway, don't worry about me. The nurses are nice and that is all that matters. I should be out of this place in a few days.

Keep an eye on UPC.

Jett

Living groups work together

Editor,

I feel the letters that you have received the past few days concerning Greek organizations and dorms have some merit but leave much to be desired.

At best they have only been emotional appeal. The whole issue centers around a few members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity being slightly rowdy at a basketball game but has been transformed into a giant exercise of name calling between various living groups.

Inasmuch as I do not agree with the statements made by Scott Mitchell, I cannot stand by and allow Mr. Herbers to refer to Greeks as "yard apes."

We have to realize that both Greek organizations and the various other living groups are independent of each other. In the same respect of independence, they compliment one another.

I cite the example of the muscular dystrophy bump-a-thon.

In this case we find people from all the various living groups joined together for a common cause. There is no distinction between Greek participants and others. They are a group of young people working together, striving for the same goal.

This is the way that it should be. If care is not taken to remedy this problem of inter-living group rivalry, it is conceivable that this issue could become more involved than the student body presidential election coming up.

We must see that this does not happen.

In closing I would like to offer praise to the Goodnow residents for their letter which appeared in the Feb. 2 edition of the Collegian.

I believe that it is important to assert one's independence by choice of living group and I heartily agree with them that residence halls offer a separate way of life.

They must therefore agree with me that fraternities also offer a different way of living.

Amendment a 'radical tool'

Anti-ERA Forces push for rescission

TOPEKA (AP)—Opponents of the Equal Rights Amendment Wednesday urged the Kansas Legislature to reconsider its ratification of the ERA, which they described as a radical tool to promote homosexuality, abortion and immorality.

Meanwhile, supporters called reconsideration a futile exercise that would waste time and money, but prove nothing. They noted that Congress has the final say on whether rescission by a state is valid.

"I am sure that your original ratification did not include the promotion of homosexuality, abortion and other immoral aspects of this amendment which have surfaced as ratification has been pursued," Brenda Waugh of Overland Park told the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

Credit-no credit registration now

Credit-No Credit (CR-NCR) registration, which began Monday Feb. 6, will continue through Friday, Feb. 18.

Students in the College of Arts and Sciences may sign up through their advisers and bring their forms to the basement of Farrell Library for processing, Jerry Dallam, associate director of Student Records, said.

Students in other colleges may sign up at their respective deans' offices. The forms will be collected and sent to Farrell, he said.

Some CR-NCR courses begin at mid-term of each semester. Registration for those courses will be March 27 through March 31.

Dallam said he recommends that students check the Schedule of Courses to insure that courses they select are offered as CR-NCR. Only those designed by an "A" in the schedule are CR-NCR.

She said her anti-ERA group, Women Who Want to Be Women, believes feminist groups are using the controversial amendment as a means of achieving radical social goals.

"I am convinced that ratification was an impulsive decision rather than an error in judgment," said Jane Clark of Overland Park, another ERA opponent.

SHE SAID the 1972 Legislature's decision to ratify the ERA was hasty and ill-conceived, and she urged the panel to approve a resolution to rescind the controversial amendment.

More than 100 women crowded into a committee hearing room for the debate, some wearing red "Stop ERA" buttons and others with green "Go ERA" tags.

The chief of capitol area security and several officers were on hand at the request of Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, committee chairman. But the meeting was orderly and there were no outbursts or incidents.

Reilly directed staff to research the legal question of what rescission would actually mean. He said the panel would not vote on the resolution until hearing from its staff.

In general, ERA supporters said the decision of the Legislature in 1972 to ratify was legal and binding. Even if the Legislature reversed its position this year, it would still be up to Congress to determine if the rescission was legal, they said. Both the U.S. Justice Department and the Kansas attorney general's office have said the same thing.

SO FAR, 35 of the required 38 states have voted to ratify the ERA and supporters, faced with a deadline for passage, have requested another seven years for states to consider the issue.

Gloria O'Dell, president of Kansans for the Equal Rights Amendment, said ERA supporters were wrong in claiming that the 1972 Legislature acted precipitously.

"Unfortunately, some citizens are less aware of that debate and purport that the action of Kansas legislators in 1972 was without thought," she said.

Sadat ends weapon talks; U.S. increases peace efforts

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat ended his talks here Wednesday without an immediate decision by President Carter to sell him jet fighters. But he said the United States would step up its drive for an Arab-Israeli peace settlement.

"The United States is not an observer, or a go-between, or a mediator," Sadat said. "No, the role of the United States now is complete partnership."

With that statement to reporters, Sadat claimed success in one of the two principle objectives of his 5½-day visit—more direct involvement by Washington in the on-again, off-again peace talks.

However, disappointment loomed for Sadat as he prepared to take his lobbying campaign to Europe when administration officials said no decision was imminent on selling him jet fighters and other weapons.

SADAT'S request, made to Carter on an urgent basis, "is under review and until the president has made up his mind there will be no announcement said one key U.S. official who declined to be identified. "It'll be a little bit longer," he said.

Pressing his case hard, Sadat had told members of Congress that he would "raise hell" if they did not approve a weapons sale. "I am speaking as a partner, and I am threatening," he said.

After a final talk with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance the Egyptian leader stressed the diplomatic aspect of his mission.

"I came really disheartened and discouraged, but I shall return with more perseverance so that we can attain our goal," he said.

Sadat said he could make a greater effort now that the United States was enlarging its role. In effect, he wants the administration to push Israel into concessions.

SADAT planned to fly to New York and then on to London after a brief courtesy call on Carter.

In asking for arms, Sadat specifically requested 120 F5Es, a short-range jet fighter, and expressed interest in more sophisticated F-15s and F-16s, a second U.S. official said.

"The best bet is that he'll get some F-5Es," said the official, who also preferred to remain anonymous. But the official said he doubted that Congress, which can block arms sales, would approve supplying Egypt with the more advanced planes.

EVEN IF that deal went through, Egypt would not get F-15s and F-16s until 1983 or 1984.

Kelley may run for KC mayor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Retiring FBI Director Clarence Kelley is seriously considering running next year for mayor of his hometown, Kansas City, the Kansas City Star reported in its Wednesday editions.

"Some Kansas City friends have told me I have a real good chance, that I am popular and I would get good support," Kelley said.

He was interviewed in Washington as he prepared for his retirement next Wednesday. He is 65.

"I want to do what I can for Kansas City," he said. "Kansas City has been good to me. I would like to be mayor, but I just can't say now that I will run. I have not turned it down. I don't know yet."

A source close to Kelley said circumstances surrounding the removal Tuesday of Marvin Van Kirk as Kansas City chief of police, the job Kelley left to become FBI director, may prove a factor in his decision.

With shovels, determination, snowy Northeast digs out

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
With help from Army troops, with equipment flown from Texas, with shovels and determination, the Northeast began a massive cleanup Wednesday of the up to 2 feet of snow that buried the region. In the midst of it, Boston was hit by a second power failure in two days.

In other areas, roadways remained impassable because of snow or thousands of stranded vehicles, transportation was slowed and businesses were closed.

"Even with the Army troops, it's going to be a long haul," said a spokesman for the governor of Rhode Island.

THE ELECTRICITY in parts of Boston failed shortly before noon, hours after the end of another storm-caused outage which left more than one-third of the 220,000 Boston Edison Co. customers in Boston without power for up to 23 hours. How many people were affected by Wednesday's trouble was not known immediately.

Throughout the Northeast, travel was still difficult and sometimes hazardous. There were scattered bans on non-essential driving—with threats of tickets and arrests for violators. Nonetheless, many workers struggled back to jobs they had abandoned during the height of the blizzard Monday afternoon. Shoppers searched stores for supplies of milk, bread and other staples. And homeowners shoveled. And shoveled.

While the East got a respite from bad weather, the West Coast was battered again by heavy rains. Another wave of Pacific storms struck Northern California early Wednesday and brought some flood warnings.

THE RAIN was moving south, and there was a 70 percent chance of showers in Southern California during the night. Officials said mudslides had been cleared from the Pacific Coast Highway by 3 a.m., but warned that the road would be closed if it started to rain again.

Scott Momaday slated to speak at convocation

Scott Momaday, Pulitzer Prize winner and an American Indian, will be a convocation speaker at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium.

He will also be featured at an open forum at 1:30 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall.

Momaday, professor of English and comparative literature at Stanford University since 1973, will speak on his book "The Man Made of Words."

Momaday won the Pulitzer Prize in fiction in 1969 for his book "House Made of Dawn," and for that honor was named "Indian of the Year."

John Lilley, assistant dean of Arts and Sciences and chairman of the KSU Convocations Committee, said Momaday was chosen to speak for two reasons.

"First of all, since he is a distinguished author, we feel he has something to say, and secondly he has lived a unique kind of experience growing up on reservations of the Southwest and knows what it means to live in a minority culture," Lilley said.

Among his many honors are a Guggenheim Fellowship, which Lilley said is "the most distinguished fellowship given in this country."

Health fee payment policy makes some students sick

By CAROL HOLSTEAD
Collegian Reporter

Paying student health fees at K-State has never been known to create problems, but in the last few months some part-time students have started to complain.

The existing policy states that the $37 student health fee is automatically included in a student's total fee amount, unless they are full-time University employees enrolled in six or fewer credit hours, or their spouses.

These students may elect to be exempted from paying the health fee, but then they are not eligible for student health center services, Jerry Dallam, associate director of records, said.

"Student fees are set up on the basis of everyone paying a student health fee, unless they specifically ask not to," Dallam said.

THERE ARE, however, some students who feel they have been cheated, because they did not realize that the Student Health fee had to be paid on the day of registration.

"I registered at night and when I went through, no one bothered to ask me if I wanted to pay the health fee or not. They didn't say anything when they saw I was only taking six hours," said one graduate student, who wishes to remain anonymous.

"When I went to pay the health fee at Admissions and Records, they said it was too late," she said.

Jean Hyde, part-time student in general, said that when she went through registration she also had problems.

"When I went through registration and I was asked if I wanted to pay the health fee, I told them I didn't have enough money to pay for it right then," Hyde said.

"I went to Admissions and Records to pay for it later, but I was told I could not. They said I had to pay for it on the day I registered," she said.

IN PREVIOUS semesters, students have been able to pay the student health fee after registration, both students said.

This, however, was only done in rare cases, Dallam said, and only within a week or so after registration.

"These students are asking for the kind of program where they can pay when they need assistance," Dr. Robert Sinclair, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said.

Registration workers are instructed to ask students who are going through if they wish to be exempt from the student health fee. If they do not want to pay the fee then, they can't pay it later, Dallam said.

"Allowing a student to pay the fee later, or when he was ill and decided he needed it, would be like getting in a car wreck and then deciding to get car insurance," Dallam said. "That just wouldn't be right."

"Some students have been coming straight to Lafene to pay the late fee," Sinclair said. "Then they blame us for not taking their money."

"We have nothing to do with money. This is set up by (Dean Ellsworth) Gerritz and Jerry Dallam. It is their rule. We have nothing to do with fees. All we care about is that it is paid," Sinclair said. "We don't want to get blamed for things we have no responsibility for."

Speeding costs Schneider ticket number four

TOPEKA (AP)—Attorney General Curt Schneider has paid his fourth speeding ticket within the past four and one half years.

Shawnee County District Court records show Schneider on Monday paid a $12 fine, plus $10 court costs, for a ticket he got last Friday on Interstate 70 about four miles west of Topeka. The arresting Kansas Highway Patrol trooper said Schneider was going 67 mph, 12 miles above the legal 55 mph limit.

Records of the state Vehicles Division in the state Revenue Department show Schneider has three prior speeding convictions.

The attorney general is not close to having his driver's license suspended, however. The Vehicles Division reviews a person's driving record if he or she receives three moving vehicle violations within one 12-month period, or 10 such violations with a five-year period.

Suspension is not automatic, however, said Bob Balthazor of the Vehicles Division. Each case is reviewed, and the three-member review board within the division may recommend suspension, require attendance at a driver improvement clinic, or put the driver on "good behavior" for a time if the violations are relatively minor.

'Iago' digs Shakespearean plays

By ALLISON ERKELENS

Arts Editor

"To be or not to be, that is the question."

"To be" for Marc Weishaus, a two-year member of the National Shakespeare Company, is to traverse the unbeaten path seven months of the year to bring the plays of William Shakespeare to those who otherwise might never see them.

Weishaus, along with 10 other members from the New York-based company, brought "Othello" and "As You Like It" to Manhattan over the weekend, and stayed on to present a workshop in Shakespearean modes for two sections of Theater Appreciation Monday.

The villian Iago in "Othello," and Touchstone the clown in "As You Like It," Weishaus teamed up with Harvey Wilson (the duke of Venice and Amiens, respectively) to make the works of Shakespeare more relevant to contemporary audiences; namely the 900 students enrolled in Theater Appreciation.

"People have a preconceived notion of Shakespeare," Weishaus said in his improvised lecture. "They go to see a play expecting to be bored."

"I dig Shakespeare, and it is certainly difficult to understand that other people don't. There's a richness there; it's not an everyday thing," he said. "Shakespeare is a rare wine, a treat; much too expensive to drink every day."

Weishaus believes that students can enjoy Shakespeare, once they drop their notions of the pure, boring intellect of the plays.

"It is of the greatest value for college students, when we're successful," he said. "We attempt to make them aware that the plays of Shakespeare can be quite entertaining, once they are released from the classroom."

"Othello," which, according to Weishaus, is one of the moreactable of the plays, was meant to be performed on a stage. "As You Like It," however, has been updated to the styles of 1968, to make it more conducive to modern entertainment. The lines have remained relatively untouched, but the actors go about their roles wearing jeans and beads, carrying 8-tracks and transistor radios.

Shakespearean plays, according to Wilson, were written very quickly and illustrate the difference between the oral and the written word. He also explained that the interpretation of these works, especially that of the characters, has changed considerably since their origin. The role of Iago in "Othello," for instance, was played in an evil, melodramatic style at its original inception, whereas Weishaus pulls it off with a cocky, almost mischievous attitude.

"To be in the business and remain in the period—one would be making antiques," Wilson said.

"The cast that puts on a Shakespearean production does not live in a museum," he said. "We (the cast and the audience) are all products of the 20th century; it isn't interpreted the same."

The company, under the enterprise of Philip Meister, began 15 years ago, and is touring the nation in a bus, bringing "Winter's Tale," as well as the two aforementioned plays to college audiences during the academic year.

Weishaus, who received his Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from Carnegie Tech, finds living out of a bus and motel rooms the major drawback in his present job.

Kirk Wolfinger, who plays Roderigo in "Othello" and Silvius in "As You Like It," was unavailable for comment, as he was repairing the bus that serves as the home between motels for the actors. Wolfinger also plays the role of business road manager and liaison between the company and sponsors, as well as one the drivers.

"It (being on the road) upsets everything; it's impossible to plan," Weishaus, who acts as artistic road manager, said.

"Since we do mostly one night stands, if you meet someone interesting, you just leave the next day," he said. "It's an adventure, but a very demanding adventure."

Like every other actor, Weishaus confesses that someday he'd like to be a star. "But I'd settle for working consistently," he said.

Jonathan L. Seagull—a bird with a dream

By ALLISON ERKELENS

Arts Editor

"Transcend ... Purify ... Glorious." The lyrics to one of the many gorgeous songs on the soundtrack of "Jonathan Livingston Seagull" by Neil Diamond is a way of life for a rather extraordinary bird.

Although not the kind of motion picture that will be immortalized as an all-time great, it is meaningful, and capitalizes on a commodity rare in current releases—sensory pleasure.

The visual display of panoramic vistas of greeting-card sunsets, saw-toothed clouds and serene shorelines realization of a seemingly unattainable goal.

Jonathan's is merely to fly faster than 62 m.p.h., the supposed speed for your standard gull. To realize this goal, he puts himself through all manners of daredevil stunts, more often than not winding up ragged and half-drowned in the ocean.

Following his ostracization from the flock for his antics, he transcends to a different level of being through some obscure means which can only be translated into realistic terms as death.

Finally finding his own particular "birds of a feather," Jonathan is able to see beyond his personal goals of flying higher and faster physically, and relate them to a more ethereal realization.

Through it all, the uncertainty of his beliefs plague his desires. He questions himself, as we all do, if all the struggling is worth the attainment of his goal. Many times he decides that he will content himself with the so-called normal flow of things, and give up his incessant preoccupation with unsurpassed flight.

THIS DECISION holds fast for approximately 30 seconds, when, in a flash of inspiration and agonizing reappraisal, Jonathan heaves his battered body from his precarious perch atop his latest crash site and flies into the sunset, backed up by a tremendous crescendo from Diamond. Perhaps a bit on the corny side to the average viewer, but inspirational just the same.

The film is dedicated to "the Jonathan Livingston Seagull who lives within us all."

To strive, to struggle, to survive is to be, whether deviant aviation or nine-to-five is your niche.

holds great impact when combined with Diamond's musical genius.

With his unique contemporary-on-the-verge-of-classical style, Diamond's grandiose orchestration and meditative lyrics send the imaginative viewer through rushes of revelation. The total effect is a seminar in feeling through non-touch senses.

THE OVERT meaning of the film is expressed when Jonathan thinks "there is more to life than fighting over a fish head." The covert meaning comes in application to real life; the striving for and Trio lays back in swing styles; 'Giant' album presents true jazz

By SCOTT FARINA

Contributing Writer

Duke Ellington said it all with one song title; "It Don't Mean a Thing if it Ain't got that Swing." The ability to swing, more than any other factor, is the true essence of jazz, and swing is precisely what Oscar Peterson, Joe Pass and Ray Brown do on the Pablo album "The Giants."

A black-and-white description of swing is difficult. It has to do with laying back, with getting "behind the beat." Critic Gene Lees once summed it up by saying that whereas rock 'n roll jumps up and down in one groove, music that swings is rhythmically propulsive.

The title "The Giants" may sound like promotion department hyperbole, but it isn't. This album, with all acoustic instruments, contains eight mellow jazz tunes that swing.

What makes this record so fine is that the music sounds spontaneous; it has the feel of "let's do this right in one take." It's a refreshing change at a time when so many LP's are mixed, dubbed over and edited from 59 different takes; what comes out is technically pure but often sterile.

All three musicians get a chance to stretch out and solo as well as interact with each other. Pass on guitar shows why he is a consistent poll winner. There is a smoothness to his constantly flowing, imaginative lines that is almost breathtaking.

Bassist Ray Brown is not as well known as some of his contemporaries like Stanley Clarke or Ron Carter. Fortunately, talent is not just a by-product of fame. Brown holds everything together, especially on the uptempo numbers.

Peterson is the least impressive of the trio. For all his reknown, the keyboardist is in the same class as colleague Brian Auger; flashy and facile, but not a lot of depth. Listen to the difference between Peterson's improvisations, and those of Pass, and you'll know what I mean.

The absence of a drummer, by the way, is not all that unusual, nor does it hinder the musical proceedings. The music moves so well you don't really realize there's no drummer.

The recorded sound is fair, and the surface is reasonably clean. With only three instruments, it seems curious that Brown's bass is mixed so low behind the others. Nor does it make sound sense to bunch all three in the middle of the stereo channels, instead of spacing them out more.

Picky, picky. Jazz fans, enjoy!

Up and Coming

Jazz bands from 33 high schools and colleges, along with the Buddy Rich Orchestra and top name musicians, will perform at the three-day Central States Jazz Festival, Feb. 10-12.

Marilyn Maye, vocalist, and her trio will perform with the KSU Concert Jazz Ensemble, Friday, February 10 at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Tickets are $3.50, $3 and $2.50 for students, and are available at the McCain Box Office.

World-famous drummer Rich and his Orchestra will give the concert Sunday evening. Tickets are $5 main floor, and $3 balcony.

A dinner theater featuring Tim Settimi, a whiteface mime, will be in the K-State Union Catskeller, February 10 and 11. Settimi, who performs his own mime sketches and skits, also sings and entertains with the guitar and flute. Tickets for the 6:30 buffet are $5, and will be available until Friday.

Dallas Theater Center presents "Scapino," a modern play adapted by Frank Dunlop and Jim Dale from "Moliere." For those who delight in the fantasy and the fun of the carnival, clown, juggler and acrobat, this play is a must. (And don't be surprised if 'Scapino' involves you in their act. It's all a part of their type of comedy.) For ticket reservations, call 532-6425.

Feature films presents "The Deep," Feb. 10 and 11, at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Admission is $1.25 with an ID. "Jonathan Livingston Seagull" will be shown February 12 at 7 p.m. Admission is $1. Both films are in Forum Hall.

Survey to discover appeal of labor unions to military

LONDON (AP)—The U.S. Army, in a continuing effort to make service life more attractive, is paying $12,000 to a British social scientist to find out whether GIs would like to join labor unions.

Seven European countries, including West Germany where many U.S. servicemen are stationed, allow military men to form unions or professional associations to negotiate wages and working conditions.

But Gwyn Harries-Jenkins, a lecturer at Hull University in eastern England assigned to conduct the survey, says he doesn't believe Uncle Sam's top brass or senior officers are ready for unionization.

"Judging by what I've read and from unofficial contacts I believe they feel unions would be prejudicial to good order and discipline and reduce military capability in fighting effectiveness," he said.

The Welsh-born specialist in studying the relationship between the armed forces and society says he submitted the research idea to the U.S. Army Institute for Behavioral Sciences in Washington. The Army accepted it and gave him the grant for a 15-month study.

"American military people say they keep hearing about unions for servicemen in Europe, but they don't know the facts," Harries-Jenkins said. "So I am looking into what there is, how servicemen feel about it and how they think they ought to be represented."

THE TREND in Europe—where Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Holland, Norway, Sweden and West Germany have organizations to watch over servicemen's interests—is to set up separate associations for officers, non-commissioned officers and enlisted men.

The reason for unionization in Europe, the social scientist said, is not political but economic. He said the armed forces feel deprived because their earning power has fallen below civilian standards.

"I think the military unions have been successful in Europe in improving conditions and raising rates of pay. The Swedes, and the Dutch, have benefited," the analyst said.

The Dutch and West Germans, Harries-Jenkins noted, maintain near parity with civilian pay and working conditions and the Swedes now pay overtime to military personnel. But the Belgians, British and Americans have fallen way below and in Britain especially, military pay is "25 to 30 percent below civilian levels," he said.

Growing prosperity and the increasing availability of civilian jobs are making recruiting more difficult in the United States and Britain, he said. In addition, he found that U.S. servicemen resent the loss of fringe benefits—such as allowances for special skills and PX stores—which have been cut back by Congress.

Woman inherits parent's corneas; bequeath eyesight as their final gift

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—A woman whose failing eyesight improved two years ago when she received a cornea transplanted from her dead mother has gotten a second new cornea—bequeathed by her father.

Eileen Billington, 27, of Dunmore, received the new cornea on her right eye Sunday at Wills Eye Hospital.

The cornea—transparent tissue that forms the outer coat of the eyeball—was donated by her father, Joseph Menskey, who died Saturday of a heart attack at age 51.

TWO YEARS ago Mrs. Billington received a cornea in her left eye, the most severely affected by a condition called keracotonus, which caused her own corneas to begin changing shape and blur her vision in her teen-age years. It had been donated by her mother, who died of a brain tumor.

Mrs. Billington, a part-time hospital admissions worker, says that knowing her improved vision is tied to her parents' deaths has put her under an emotional strain.

"I laugh during the day and cry at night," she said Wednesday in a telephone interview from the hospital.

"I had tried to prepare myself," she said. "I knew my father wasn't in the best of health. But when somebody comes out of the hospital and tells you your father is dead...you just want to sit down and cry. But there's no time to cry."

WITHIN 24 hours of her father's death, Mrs. Billington said goodbye to her husband, Perry, and 5-year-old daughter and entered the hospital for the transplant.

Mrs. Billington said that even before she knew she would need a transplant, her mother had expressed interest in being an eye donor. And her father, knowing of his heart condition, said he would do the same, she added.

Because doctors hesitated to operate on both of Mrs. Billington's eyes at the same time, her mother's second cornea was given to another recipient. Her father's second cornea also went to another person needing the surgery, hospital officials said.

DR. PETER Laibson, the surgeon for both operations, said donations of corneas need not come from relatives, although a hospital spokesman said such donations were preferable.

Mrs. Billington said she hopes her story will encourage others to bequeath their eyes.

"By my telling you this, it's going to pound somebody over the head," she said. "And they're going to do something and somebody's going to see again because of it."

Carter asks for $1.2 billion in aid for college students

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter called upon Congress on Wednesday to provide a record $1.2 billion in new aid to college students, including $250 grants to at least two million students from families with gross incomes between $16,000 and $25,000.

"No one should be denied the opportunity for a college education for financial reasons alone," the president declared as he unveiled an aid package designed to head off moves in Congress to provide tax credits of $250 or more to parents of all college students, regardless of income.

IN ADDITION to making two million students from middle-income families eligible for direct federal grants for the first time, the Carter plan also would provide subsidized loans to students with family incomes as high as $45,000 before taxes, and expand federally subsidized work-study programs. The extra money would be available for the school year starting in the fall of 1979. Students in families with incomes below $25,000 would apply individually to the government for the grants as part of the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program. Grants are credited directly to students' accounts at the colleges.

Carter wants to add $1 billion to the $2.16 billion basic grant program, which now aids 2.2 million students primarily from low-income families.

THE PRESIDENT already proposed $250 million in extra student aid last month. The entire $1.46 billion package would boost federal spending on college student aid programs in fiscal 1979 to $5.2 billion, an increase of almost 40 percent.

Carter said more than five million college students could get federal aid in the school year starting in the fall of 1979, an increase of at least two million.

Rep. William Ford (D-Mich.), who heads the House Education and Labor subcommittee on higher education, called it "the biggest single infusion of funding for middle-income college students since the adoption of the GI bill at the end of World War II."

FIVE OTHER leaders of House and Senate committees that handle education legislation joined Carter and Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano Jr. at the White House for the announcement of the program.

The six lawmakers all hailed the administration's proposal, but some later expressed reservation about limiting the grants to $250 for all students in the $16,000-to-$25,000 range.

Senate considers special prosecutor to investigate architectural problems

TOPEKA (AP)—The Senate tentatively approved a bill Wednesday to hire a special prosecutor to investigate architectural problems which have plagued the University of Kansas Medical Center.

Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita) said the state "needs the best legal talent we can get to unravel the mess" discovered at the clinical sciences building, which is still under construction.

A prosecuting team from a private law firm would be given full authority to investigate who was at fault for the problems and to bring suit if necessary to recover damages.

"We're talking about quite a bit of money that the state has been damaged and we need a special prosecutor with experience to handle it," he said.

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY General Donald Hoffman, chief of the litigation division, has voiced opposition to the measure, saying his office is capable of handling the case.

In a related move, the Senate gave final approval Wednesday to a controversial special claims bill which directs the state to pay $290,000 to the Truog Nichols Co. of Johnson County because of faulty plans at the basic sciences building.

The firm won a $260,000 arbitration award against the state, but the 1977 Legislature refused to pay the amount.

Truog Nichols is one of three subcontractors on the project expected to file suit against the state for mistakes which hampered completion of the basic sciences building.

Emotional debate on the special claims bill tied up the Senate on the final evening of the session last year and, as a result, the measure was held over until this session.

Police see footprints as clue to murderer

WICHITA (AP)—Footprints in the snow may help investigators find the person or persons who stabbed oilman Robert Aylward to death, police said Wednesday.

A friend found the 43-year-old Aylward Tuesday afternoon lying face down in the kitchen of his home. Aylward, a partner with his father in a drilling company, was stabbed three times and his throat was slashed, District Coroner Robert Daniels said.

Detective Lt. Bernie Drowatzky said detectives found footprints leading from the south side of Aylward's home to a street about 20 yards east of the home.

Drowatzky said the person or persons who killed Aylward may have made the footprints, then left in a vehicle that could have been parked on the street.

An autopsy was conducted on the victim's body Wednesday.

Detectives said they believe Aylward was stabbed to death sometime Tuesday morning but they declined to say how they reached that conclusion.

Matlack outlines fieldhouse proposal for the upcoming student referendum

By NORM PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

Students will have the opportunity Wednesday to vote on a Student Senate proposal which would increase student activity fees to fund the construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State.

Student Body President Terry Matlack explained the proposal at a "Let's Talk About It" program in the Union Catskellar Wednesday.

Details of the proposal include a $5 per semester increase, beginning in the fall of 1979, and an additional $5 per semester increase to begin the semester before contracts for the fieldhouse are to be let, Matlack said.

"This is a good way for students to apply pressure to the bureaucracy which is what makes it work," Matlack said.

Matlack said he supports the student referendum because "by taking the initiative, we have a better chance of getting alumni and state help."

ANOTHER provision of the proposal would be to increase the activity fee of part-time students $2.50 per semester beginning in the fall of 1979, and an additional $2.50 the semester preceding the letting of contracts for the fieldhouse construction, Matlack said.

"The money will be accumulated in an escrow account," he said. "If unable to get other funds by June 30, 1981, the money would revert to the Student Governing Association. At that time, a referendum would be held to decide what to apply the funds to."

Matlack said other possible places in which funds for construction might be obtained is from the Alumni Association.

"However, the Alumni Association has not shown itself capable of raising such large sums of money," he said.

Matlack said he believes that seeking state funds for construction is unrealistic because state funds are limited.

"We would have to place athletics over academics in building priorities to get state money for the fieldhouse," he said.

A bill introduced to the state legislature by Sen. Donn Everett (R-Manhattan) in which two-thirds of a cigarette tax would be divided between K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State, might also be a possible source of funds for the fieldhouse, Matlack said.

Students using points to hold off the pounds

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Residence hall students counting calories may find the point system used by the K-State food services a convenient method to use.

The point system, developed by Virginia Stucky of Wichita, totals 75 calories as one point. The total points for a serving of food is listed beside the entree on the menus, said Barbara Torrence, instructor for the Department of Housing.

"The amount of points the food the menu has is conducive to the size of the serving," Torrence said.

Torrence said Kansas is the first state to use the system. K-State food services have used it at least four years.

"The point system was developed primarily for the purpose of helping people count calories more easily," Torrence said. "The reason we print the point system is for students who are watching their calorie intake."

JANET MAXWELL, Service and Sanitation Dietician at Derby Food Center, said the amount of points required daily depends on the person's body size, activity level and age.

People can find the number of calories they need daily from a medical person or a dietician and divide that number by 75 to get the calorie points needed daily, she said.

"I often see people going through cafeteria lines keeping track of calorie points," Maxwell said.

"Eating the right number of calorie points doesn't necessarily mean the person is getting a balanced diet," she said. "One of the factors causing disease is that the person isn't getting the right nutrients."

Maxwell said there is a point system based on nutrition concepts for people concerned about getting a balanced diet, but it is detailed. She said the nutrition point system specifies the amount of each of the ten main nutrients required for a balanced diet.

Maxwell said students wanting more information about the point systems may contact dieticians at the food service centers.

Juco's have better facilities

Ag shops 'just adequate'

By NORM PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

Students taking agricultural mechanization (ag mech) courses at K-State may have had better facilities in junior college or high school, according to Lee Doyan, director of agribusiness and vocational education at Cloud County Community Junior College (CCCJC).

"Cloud County Community College graduates attending K-State are coming back complaining about the facilities," Doyan said.

"They (the shops) are just adequate at best. The ventilation is awful. They could use new equipment," said Maury Catlin, K-State graduate in agricultural education.

"The present shops are unable to handle all of the students wanting to take shop courses now," Doyan said. "The present building has students working in crowded conditions."

A NEW building for agricultural engineering is in a University five-year plan.

In the capital improvement requests submitted in December 1977, the Department of Agricultural Engineering placed first priority on a new building, said William Johnson, director of agricultural engineering.

"So far as I know it was not accepted by the Regents," Johnson said. "They did okay $100,000 for replacement of portable equipment."

The department also requested funds for ventilation of welding and paint areas.

New shops for the ag mech courses are in the college of engineering's Phase III. University administration and Donald Rathbone, Dean of the College of Engineering at K-State, place a higher priority of Engineering Phase III.

"Our problem is worse than that of other universities," said Paul Young, vice-president of facilities at K-State. We are 900,000 square feet behind in classroom and office space."

YOUNG SAID the shops are unsafe, but most of the older buildings on campus are in bad shape.

"I feel that when we have safety inspections we will have as many citations as KU," Young said. "The problem is that there is not a sufficient amount of funding to do what everybody wants."

The shops are in the newest part of Seaton Hall and the older buildings needed work first, he said.

Rathbone said the requests for additional money for agricultural engineering is getting more response than it has in the past.

"I don't know when we will get a new building. It's a question of priorities," he said.

"Getting $100,000 for equipment was our hope," Rathbone said.

Business interests win in the House with rejection of consumer agency

WASHINGTON (AP)—The House gave business interests a major victory Wednesday by decisively defeating a bill to establish a government agency to advocate consumer viewpoints before federal regulators. The bill was defeated 227 to 181—and possibly killed for good—after a long lobbying campaign by major business groups to defeat it and strong appeals by consumer groups to pass it.

The vote came even though President Carter and House Speaker Thomas O'Neill had joined recently in arm-twisting in favor of the bill.

THE BILL would have established an agency with authority to make arguments before federal regulatory bodies on behalf of consumers. Although it would have had no regulatory powers of its own, the consumer agency could have appealed regulatory decisions it opposed through the courts.

AFTER THE vote, the Chamber of Commerce issued a statement saying the vote showed that "the people simply don't want higher taxes, more red tape, bureaucratic gobbledy-gook and all the rest that goes with creating still another new agency."

Consumer advocate Ralph

Nader commented, "The corrupting influence of big business contributions, promised or withdrawn has never been more clear than in the last few days. That is why big business' massive lobbying defeated a measure supported by a 2-1 public margin."

The vote continued a trend of diminishing support for the agency in the House. It had been passed by 344 to 44, 293 to 94 and 208 to 199 in previous years.

McCain wins award for distinguished work

TOPEKA (AP)—James McCain, former K-State president and now state secretary of human resources, will be one of 10 state officials nationally to receive the National Governors' Association award for distinguished service.

This is the second year the awards have been presented by the national governors organization. McCain is the second Kansan to be picked.

Last year, one of the awards went to state Budget Director James Bibb.

The award will be presented at the NGA winter meeting in Washington later this month.

"I am extremely pleased, and I believe all Kansans can be proud, that Dr. McCain has received this honor," Bennett said in announcing McCain's selection.

"Dr. McCain has devoted his life to public service and to the betterment of his fellow man. He is beloved and respected not only by the thousands of students who attended Kansas State University but by many thousands of other Kansans as well."

McCain was president of Kansas State for 25 years, 1950-1975, then joined the Bennett administration as Secretary of Labor in the fall of 1975. When the department was reorganized and renamed the Department of Human Resources, he became its first secretary.

McCain during Kansas Day activities was named a distinguished Kansan by the Native Sons and Daughters of Kansas, although he is not a native of this state.

Full parity could hurt grain exports

By KAY COLES
Managing Editor

If striking farmers achieve their goal of 100 percent parity, the United States' share of world grain exports could be reduced.

"Farmers can achieve it (parity) in two ways," said John Boyle, Chief of Food Policy for the U.S. Department of State.

The first, Boyle said, would be to leave grain prices the way they are and establish a transfer system. By shifting tax transfers, food prices wouldn't be raised and farmers would be compensated.

The second way to achieve parity would be to raise prices. This is ternational wheat agreement conference scheduled in London.

"We develop policy and positions on given issues which are in the U.S. domestic interest and in the interest of our international relations," Boyle said.

The division also decides which countries should receive food under Public Law 480 (PL 480) and how much food aid these countries will receive, Boyle said.

Congress sets the amount of food donated into PL 480 for distribution each year, he said. The food comes from U.S. surpluses.

The law has three titles which designate how much a country will pay for food.

about a 2 percent interest rate, Boyle said.

Title II allows for an all out grant of food to a country. This title is usually used to provide food for humanitarian purposes, he said.

Title III is the developmental aspect of the law and is just now being explored, Boyle said.

"What we're hoping for is to say to a government, 'You buy food under PL 480 and you won't have to pay us back if you use the revenue from the food sales in your country to promote your own agricultural development,'" Boyle said.

Food isn't granted under PL 480 to a country which can commercially buy the food, he said.

that perhaps the U.S. could withhold food supplies from some nations, particularly the Middle Eastern nations, in hopes they would be forced to continue supplying oil to the U.S.

"This means it doesn't take much food to feed them," he said. And with other countries producing food, the Arabs would probably find another market.

"Also, we criticized the Arabs for using the cartel," he said. If the U.S. used a "food power" cartel, it would be against what we have said we stand for.

"We must never lose sight of the fact that there are a lot of places where food can be grown," Boyle said. The Arabs could invest in such an area, like the Sudan, and subsidize food grown there for their own use.

John Boyle

what is being demanded by many agricultural groups, Boyle said.

"This would present some severe problems in that the U.S. farmer relies on export markets for selling goods," he said. "If we were to raise prices, it might price the U.S. right out of the market."

OTHER COUNTRIES which produce wheat, such as Canada, Australia or Argentina could take up the slack in world wheat markets.

"If we assume the U.S. price goes up and no other major producer goes up, what you'd see would be other countries tending to try to produce more wheat and sell it cheaper," Boyle said.

In the period from 1972-76, the U.S. exported 59 percent of its wheat, 51 percent of its soybeans, 51 percent of its rice, 36 percent of its cotton, 36 percent of its tobacco and 25 percent of its corn.

In an economic sense, if U.S. agricultural prices increase there may be countries producing cheaper grains which could end up exporting their grains to the U.S., he said.

The food policy division of the state department deals with many issues besides the exportation of grain.

"Food policy covers a number of areas," Boyle said.

He said the division is involved with setting policy in food and agricultural areas and is involved in commenting on specific areas of food policy such as agricultural tariffs.

IT ALSO deals with international organizations such as the United Nations and participates in negotiations, like the Tokyo round of negotiations currently being held in Geneva and the in-

TITLE I allows for broad concessional sales. The country requesting this aid will be given grain as a loan. Payments for the grain extend over a period of 20 to 25 years and the U.S. charges

WHEN THE Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) embargoed oil sales to the U.S. in 1973, there was some discussion of the use of U.S. food as a political weapon. It was thought

Chalk up four in a row for women as they defeat Bearkittens, 71-69

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Editor

The K-State women's basketball team, depleted by injuries and illness, used some hot shooting from the free throw line Wednesday night to defeat Northwest Missouri State, 71-69, in Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats shot 25-of-31 free throws to offset a cold shooting night and a shortage of healthy players.

Beth Boggs, Sara Hackerott, Gayla Williams, Kristi Short, Eileen Feeney and Nancy Nibarger each played with the flu that is prevalent on campus.

The Bearkittens used the long range missiles of Julie Schmitz and the board strength of Donna Haer to grab a 37-33 lead at halftime, as the duo combined for 23 of the Bearkittens' points.

But Feeney and Williams decided they'd had enough of the Bearkittens and began to hit from all over the floor as Feeney scored 14 second half points and Williams 11. Feeney also grabbed 12 rebounds.

Boggs added six points and five rebounds to help the Wildcats win their fourth straight game, raising their season record to 15-12. The Bearkittens fell to 17-6.

FEENEY finished the night as the game's leading scorer and rebounder with 24 and 19, respectively. Boggs added 15 points and eight rebounds while Williams finished with 11 points.

Betty Grieser finished as the Bearkittens' leading scorer and rebounder with 18 and 14, respectively.

K-State head coach Judy Akers said she was pleased with her team's effort, especially from the free throw line.

"That's the thing that kept us in the ballgame," Akers said of the free throws. "It was a good win, they're a tough team. Most people underestimate them."

K-State will welcome the Iowa

State Cyclones into Ahearn Field House Friday night for a 7:30 game. Iowa State is 10-7 on the year, including a five game winning streak that was broken last week.

Wildcats shucked by Nebraska again

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats ran into a championship contender last night that played like a champion.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers, holding onto second place in the Big Eight race, defeated the 'Cats, 63-50, before 14,912 fans in Lincoln, second halves of basketball that we've played all year," said Nebraska coach Joe Cipriano.

The Cornhuskers, who are ranked among the nation's top ten teams defensively, allowing only 61.8 points per game, allowed the 'Cats only 21 points in the second half.

K-State tallied only 12 points in the first 16 minutes of the second half. At that time, the score read Nebraska 56, K-State 41, and all that was left was for the methodic Nebraska offense to slowly, but surely, run down the clock.

That methodic Cornhusker offense, that has been known to lull people to sleep, helped Nebraska shoot 51 percent from the field, while their "cat quick" defense played a major role in K-State's hitting only 39 percent.

ONCE AGAIN, as has been the rule throughout the year, the smaller 'Cats were whipped on the boards, 39-24.

K-State was led in scoring by Mike Evans with 15 points and Rolando Blackman with 14. The Cornhuskers held the 'Cats leading scorer Curtis Redding to only eight points, six of those coming in the first half.

The loss drops the 'Cat's record to 14-8 overall and 5-5 in the Big Eight race, struggling for a first division finish.

Nebraska moved its record to 19-3 overall, and 8-2 in the Big Eight, just one game behind league-leading Kansas.

Next up for the 'Cats will be the conference leading Jayhawks Saturday afternoon at 1:30 p.m. in Ahearn Field House.

Sports

the largest crowd in Nebraska history.

The 'Cats, who didn't show signs of being affected by the patented slow-paced Nebraska offense in the first half, trailed only 31-29 at halftime.

An omen of strange things to come in the second half came with the second period tipoff. K-State's Scott Langton controlled the tip and drove to the wrong basket for the shot, only to have it blocked away by Nebraska's Carl McPipe.

Unfortunately for the 'Cats, that was all McPipe did wrong. McPipe completely dominated the game inside with turn-a-round jump shots and rebounds. He finished as the game's leading scorer with 21 points and also led all rebounders with 11.

THE 'CATS went cold at the start of the second half and allowed the Cornhuskers to pull away to a 43-33 lead with 16:50 left in the game.

From then on, Nebraska played with the protective offense and aggressive defense that has earned them the 19th ranking in the nation.

What not to throw

K-State fans would never retaliate for the hot dogs thrown at Curtis Redding by KU fans in Lawrence, would they?

No, because K-State fans are all fine upstanding men and women.

But if the thought ever did cross the minds of the fans in Ahearn Field House, I thought it might be fun to guess just what the students of 'Silo Tech' would toss at the Gayhawks in addition to the multi-colored birds that may flutter to the floor.

For Darnell Valentine, the player with the huge thighs and the romantic name, a shower of chicken thighs might be appropriate. Or how about candy hearts, or why not chicken hearts.

FOR KEN Koenigs of the 4.0 grade-point average, dunce hats or books could be tossed. And if a stray chicken or two happens to come his way and frighten Ken, he'll need a towel to wipe up the liquid trickling down his leg.

For the gargantuan "Big Mo" Mokeski who fought a bout with pneumonia this season, the walking wounded from Lafene could cough in in his direction while others throw bones. Then he he could be greeted with a rousing chorus of "Tall People" by Steve Lawrence and Tim Conway.

High schoolers sign with K-State

Ten high schoolers signed Big Eight football letters of intent with K-State yesterday, the first day players were eligible to sign. They are:

Wade Wentling, 6-6, 210, Beloit, offensive-defensive tackle...4.8 speed in the 40... all-class all-stater and unanimous 2-A selection...helped Beloit to three state championships...

Phil Switzer, 5-11, 170, Hill City, running back...football, basketball and track standout...4.4 speed in 40...nephew of former K-State great Veryl Switzer, and brother of recent Wildcat starter Marvin Switzer...

Amos Donaldson, 6-2, 238, Norton, lineman...second-team all-class all-stater and unanimous 3-A selection...heavily recruited by Nebraska...

Stan Shapley, 6-3, 240, Belle Plaine, lineman...second team all-class all-stater...recruited by Oklahoma State, Kansas and Wichita State...

DOUG HOPPOCK, 6-4, 230, Wichita Southeast, tight end...consensus all-stater... helped Southeast to back-to-back 5A titles in '76 and '77...highly recruited by KU, Iowa State and Arizona State...

Sid Abramowitz, 6-5, 252, Leavenworth, lineman...4-A all-stater...

Mark Mackey, 6-2, 190, Olathe, linebacker...4-A all-stater who averaged nearly 14 tackles per game his senior year...second team all-class selection...

Richard Buck, 6-0, 175, Amarillo, Tex. (Palo Duro), defensive back...recruited by Colorado and several Southwest Conference schools...runs the high hurdles in 13.8, high jumps 6 feet, 6 inches and long jumps 23 feet, six inches...

Vic Koenning, 6-3, 190, Owasso, Okla., linebacker...second-team Oklahoma all-stater...4.8 speed in 40...averaged 13.8 tackles his senior year...

TRINE VILLERREAL, 6-0, 215, Amarillo Tex. (Palo Duro), linebacker... gained all-conference and all-West Texas honors...recruited by Texas...

"Obviously, to get as late a start as we did and still sign seven of the outstanding players in the state of Kansas the first day is personally rewarding and gratifying," Wildcat head coach Jim Dickey said.

"They got giant ears and billboard faces, elephant teeth with great big faces; hockey stick legs without any hair, they got skinny little butts hanging in the air..."

A hex should be thrown at John Douglas so he doesn't come through in the clutch as he's capable of doing and ruining K-State's fun.

No cheers from the pressbox

For Clint Johnson, the fans might not want to cheer. They could just clap.

AS LONG as I'm tossing fun, how about a list of the things KU fans should have thrown at the 'Cats.

For big bruiser Steve Soldner, shoulder pads are appropriate. The fast hands of Scott Langton would need handcuffs. Blinders might stop the deadeye shooting of Mike Evans.

Rolando Blackman could use a garbage bag for all the easy buckets and rebounds he picks up, for 'garbage' is a way of describing an easy bucket or rebound that comes from being in the right place at the right time.

And for Curtis Redding — mustard. Because when Curtis plays within his limits with a little bit of hot dog style, he can give the Wildcats just what they need to win.

Parking seen as complex problem

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a four-part series dealing with candidates for student body president and their positions on the issues of reapportionment, minorities, parking and the effectiveness of student senate.

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

Parking, the burr under the saddle of the mobile K-State student, is seen as a complex problem by four of the five student body presidential candidates and one that will not be easily resolved.

Cindy Thomas, Stan Watt, Ted Knopp and Sam Brownback defined the problem and suggested solutions to the problem confronting motorists daily. Bernard Shaw, a fifth candidate, was not available for comment.

Thomas has divided the problem into three categories: the Union parking lot, the campus in general and dorm residents parking shortage.

Increasing the number of small car spaces in the Union lot, which could increase parking space by 15 percent, is being proposed by Thomas. She also believes more 15 minute zones would help eliminate traffic congestion in the lot.

A proposed shuttle bus system to serve a six-to-eight block area surrounding the campus is suggested to alleviate the campus parking.

"The only way to get people to quit driving to campus is to offer a quick and convenient means of transportation," Thomas said.

ALTHOUGH STUDENTS might have to pay a quarter to ride, they wouldn't be the subsidizers of the shuttle system.

Thomas also proposes increased security for large car storage lots to encourage student use of the lots.

The parking problem is two-fold, according to Watt.

The answer to the immediate problem is to inform students of parking areas not being fully utilized. Watt cited a study by the Office of Traffic and Security which claimed there were never less than 150 spaces open in the West Stadium lot.

"People close enough to walk to campus are driving," he said.

Watt proposes to raise the parking fee for spaces in a four-block radius of the campus to discourage parking of those who live close to campus and encourage use of large parking lots.

Watt is opposed to the shuttle bus system because he believes it isn't economically feasible.

HOWEVER, Watt favors more research into the feasibility of a multi-purpose parking garage located on the edge of campus.

Educating students on the costs of the solutions to the parking problems is the primary concern of Knopp.

"Before we can take any action, we need to educate students," he said.

Knopp referred to the study conducted by Traffic and Security and said students need to be re-directed to use those lots.

Getting the administration to accept the responsibility of providing a parking space for every dorm resident is the solution to the dorm parking shortage, he said.

According to Knopp, the city of Manhattan is working towards zoning off areas surrounding the campus and he believes students should join with city residents to have a larger and more effective voice against the zoning laws.

Knopp is opposed to the shuttle bus system because he believes it would be hard to get federal funding.

Bennett's opposition accuses aide of 'dirty' campaign ploy

TOPEKA (AP)—An aide to Gov. Robert Bennett was accused Wednesday of engaging in an alleged "dirty trick" by pretending to be interested in joining a political rival's campaign when, in fact, he was prying for information.

The allegation came from Jim Vestring, Wichita rancher-banker, who is a declared candidate for the Republican nomination for governor this year against Bennett.

The governor's office discounted the allegation as merely an attempt by Vestring to gain publicity.

Leroy Towns, Bennett's press secretary, identified the aide involved as Brent Anderson, who is one of Towns' assistants.

He confirmed Anderson went into the hospitality suite Vestring had during Kansas Day activities here Jan. 28 with a friend from the University of Kansas, but said neither of them stated or implied they were there to join the Vestring campaign.

Suit claims files should be open

TOPEKA (AP)—The executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union for Kansas said Wednesday the organization has appealed a U.S. district court ruling relating to surveillance records maintained by Kansas law enforcement agencies.

The appeal was filed with the 10th circuit of the U.S. Court of Appeals in Denver, said Jan Price, ACLU executive director for Kansas.

The suit involves investigation reports kept the Kansas Bureau of Investigation on private citizens. The existence of those reports was revealed by news media in 1975.

The action was originally filed to prevent Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider from destroying some of the files which Schneider said contained no relevant information for law enforcement purposes.

Schneider said at the time the records were kept prior to his taking office.

The suit claimed those individuals who had files on them had a right to examine the information contained in them to determine if there was an invasion of privacy for which a damage claim could be made.

In January, a federal district court judge in Kansas City, Kan. dismissed the suit on procedural grounds.

"ACLU regrets the procedural stumbling blocks which have left these plaintiffs without a remedy but will appeal the decision on the basis that ACLU believes that those citizens are entitled to a remedy for these alleged violations of their constitutional rights," Price said.

The only persons known to have files kept on them are Schneider and former Gov. Robert Docking. The names contained in other files have never been made known, and the ACLU action is on behalf of those unknown individuals.

tingent on the city of Manhattan," he said. "Although they would like one, they aren't willing to work for it."

Brownback proposes to alleviate the problem by promoting storage parking and a study into the feasibility of a mass transit shuttle bus system.

Brownback said he believes each dorm resident wanting a parking space should have one available and believes storage parking would accomplish this.

A $20,000 study into the feasibility of the shuttle system is the immediate answer to the long range outlook of the parking problem, according to Brownback.

"We support the idea of the shuttle bus system, but we think there needs to be further study into the situation," he said. "If it is feasible, then we need to secure the funding."

Brownback said federal funding is available for research into the shuttle system which would serve both the city and K-State students.

Exercise goes under in 'Aqua-Fitness' plan

By CARLA SPEHART
Collegian Reporter

Joggers in the pool at the Natatorium are a common sight in the "Aqua Fitness" class sponsored by the Recreational Services.

Three nights a week, an average of 24 women twist, stretch and "dance" in the water.

"It is an enjoyable form of exercise that many people would not do on their own," said Donna Casey, instructor of the class and senior in recreation.

Casey said the aquatic exercises are especially beneficial due to increased resistance on the muscles by the water.

"But you can't feel the force directly and don't get tired as easily," Casey said.

ATTENTION IS given to all parts of the body with the various aquatic exercises. Hips, thighs, waist, arms and bust, Casey said, are the problem areas at which the exercises are directed.

"These are fantastic exercises for toning up your muscles," Janet Ostrom, graduate in administration, said. "I'm coming three times a week for the whole semester."

The exercises compose the major part of a one-hour program, but a "12-minute swim" is an optional activity. Not all girls choose to participate in this distance-versus-time category.

Sherri Broughe, freshman in business, said the workouts are building up her endurance.

"I'm coming basically to lose weight," she said.

NONSWIMMERS are not excluded from this class, according to Casey, since three-fourths of the exercises are done at the side of the pool or in waist-deep water.

"A lot of adjustments can be made in this type of program to fit individual needs," Casey said.

Spectators of the class might make the women embarrassed, since some of the exercises are awkward looking, Casey said.

"But in a large group it makes the embarrassment easier to take," she added.

Lori Bauer, freshman in education, prefers this exercise routine to jogging. She said she wants to attend the class regularly, hoping the exercises will get easier as the semester goes on.

"It gives you a feeling of total physical fitness," Bauer said.

The "Aqua Fitness" class meets at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. No fee is charged for participation.

Children expose buried treasure; stolen $18,000 Ferrari uncovered

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Whoever stole Rosendo Cruz's elegant Ferrari more than three years ago decided to go underground with it—literally.

About a week ago, sheriff's Sgts. Joe Sabas and Lenny Carroll were flagged down by children who had been digging in a backyard and found something unusual below the surface.

On Tuesday, the two officers, aided by heavy equipment, uncovered a green 1974 Ferrari—a car worth at least $18,000 when new.

Investigators said the car was purchased by Cruz of Alhambra, Calif. in October 1974 and was reported stolen two months later. They said they didn't know how it came to be buried in the backyard of a home here. Neither the present tenants nor the home's owners knew anything about the vehicle, investigators said.

Enroll in K-State's student health insurance plan.

Insurance may be something you haven't thought much about. But maybe you should . . . just in case! It's like preparing for an exam. You can't always anticipate all the questions, so you 'cram' as much as possible, just in case you need the information. Insurance works that same way.

You can't anticipate a broken bone or mono or appendicitis. And you hope they don't happen. But you can plan ahead for the expenses that accompany such a sickness or accident . . . just in case!

That's the whole idea behind your University's student insurance program. To make sure sudden and unanticipated medical expenses don't disrupt your studies or college budget.

That's why your Student Senate carefully selected K-State's new plan. Underwritten by Mutual of Omaha, it provides hospital-surgical protection for all sorts of sickness and accidents. Plus benefits for doctor's calls, X-rays, ambulance and miscellaneous benefits. Right from the start of the new semester, right on through next summer.

We want you to enjoy the excitement of your University years without the worries of doctor and hospital bills. That's our job.

For your convenience, we'll be in the Student Union. Stop by and see us.

Senate denounces noon-hour policy

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

A bill formally expressing disapproval of the policy forbidding student use of the gymnasium during the noon hour was passed by Student Senate last night.

The Recreational Services Council's policy, which is only in an experimental stage, reserves the gym for faculty use during the noon hour. It was created in response to complaints of faculty members to the Recreational Services Council, said Terry Matlack, student body president.

"Well, I have been under pressure from students wanting to use the basketball courts," Matlack said. "I think we should go on record as representing the students by disapproving of it (the noon-hour policy)."

Passage of the bill by senate won't immediately cancel the noon-hour policy as the final decision, to be determined after March 15, rests with the recreation council.

The main objection of the bill concerned the difference in the fees paid by the faculty and students for use of the facility.

Steve Walton, arts and sciences senator, countered the objection by pointing out the difference in fees was negligible if senate considered the money being paid by students towards the building of the recreation complex.

In other action, senate tabled for the third time a bill to change the semester election of senators to a single election to be held in the fall, in conjunction with a proposed fall student body presidential election.

An amendment, proposed by Richard McClanathan, graduate senator, to change the date of the election to February, was defeated.

"If you allow it in February, instead of in October, senators will be more responsive to students in final allocations (of activity fee money)," McClanathan said.

"In regard to the president being elected in the spring semester, it is an advantage in dealing with the Board of Regents to have the student body president around earlier in the school year," Matlack said.

"If this amendment passes, it will put us at a disadvantage with other Regent schools," he said.

The bill, voted on twice, clearly failed. However, the body decided to reconsider the measure and tabled it for action next week.

Decision today

Amendment may push death penalty reinstatement

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill to reinstate the death penalty in cases involving premeditated murder was amended slightly Thursday into a form expected to win easy approval by a Kansas Senate committee.

Sen. Edward Reilly, chairman of the Senate Federal and State Affairs committee, said he expects to vote Friday. Indications are that the capital punishment bill will be approved by a majority of the 11-member committee and sent to the full senate.

The measure would permit the death penalty in cases of premeditated murder. A jury in a capital case would be required to find that the aggravating circumstances outweighed any mitigating circumstances.

LISTS OF aggravating and mitigating circumstances are in the bill. Among the aggravating circumstances are a finding that the person on trial was previously convicted of murder, aggravated kidnapping, aggravated robbery or aggravated battery.

Mitigating circumstances listed in the measure include a jury conclusion that the person charged with murder committed the crime under an emotional or mental disturbance.

The measure under consideration by the Senate committee was passed Jan. 19 by the House. A few minor changes made Thursday by the committee incorporate sections of a Senate death penalty bill which is quite similar.

MEMBERS OF the committee Thursday were given an opinion by Attorney General Curt Schneider saying both measures are constitutional.

"Both versions of death-penalty legislation submitted for opinion substantially track the guidelines provided in the 1976 Supreme Court decisions on the issue and in my opinion are constitutionally sound," Schneider said.

Among changes made Thursday was a requirement that if a prosecutor wants to use as an aggravating circumstance the fact that the defendant committed the murder during the commission of a kidnapping, robbery, rape or arson, he would have to prove both the murder and the other crime.

ANOTHER change would permit the defendant in a murder case to choose his own lawyer, subject to approval by the court.

Sen. Tom Rehorn (D-Kansas City) recommended that change after overhearing two court-appointed lawyers last year whom he said showed little compassion or concern for some of their clients.

Also amended was a section which requires two separate legal proceedings in capital cases—one in which the jury finds guilt or innocence and the second to determine if the death penalty should be imposed. As amended, the same jury would handle both functions.

Clearance deadline today for graduating seniors

SENIORS who plan to graduate in May must file for graduation clearance in their respective deans' offices by 5 p.m. today.

The graduation clearance is not to be confused with the graduation check, according to Marjorie Cleland, assistant to the dean of Arts and Sciences.

The graduation clearance is used to check and approve the student's final class assignment.

Graduation clearance may be filed by filling out an application in the respective deans' offices by the end of the fourth week of classes, Cleland said.

"If a student does not sign up by the deadline date, they must see their dean," Cleland said.

The deadline has been set so that applications will be processed in time for students to be cleared for graduation, according to Barbara Steward, secretary to the assistant dean of Architecture and Design.

"Otherwise, their diplomas may not be ready on time for graduation," Steward said.

Canada ousts 11 Russians in spy case

OTTAWA (AP)—Eleven Soviet officials have been ordered out of Canada for trying to recruit a top officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as a spy, Foreign Secretary Don Jamieson said Thursday.

He told the House of Commons two other Soviet officials who are out of the country now will not be allowed to return.

The Foreign Office told Soviet Ambassador Alexander Yakovlev on Thursday four of the 11 officials still in the country must leave within 48 hours and the other seven by Feb. 23, Jamieson said.

Jamieson told the Commons the alleged spy activities "represent a serious setback to our bilateral relations. This incident and the action we have had to take today will inevitably place strains on our relations with the Soviet Union."

Otto Jelinek, a member of Parliament, claimed in 1976 that there were "espionage agents" in the Soviet embassy.

He said the RCMP had told the government many Soviet secret police (KGB) agents were operating in Canada.

Jamieson said the high RCMP officer the Russians allegedly tried to recruit was paid $30,500 for information of "no consequence."

He said the RCMP officer, who had previous contact with Soviet officials in the "normal course of his responsibilities," had been offered "an unlimited amount of money" to spy for the Soviet Union.

Judge orders woman jailed as her son dies in hospital

CINCINNATI (AP)—A woman prisoner who was denied permission by a judge to be at the bedside of her 3-year-old son when he died in a hospital was "taking it hard" Thursday, her minister father said.

The Rev. Millard Sloan said burial will be next Tuesday for his grandson, Jamie Sloan, who died of hepatitis at Children's Hospital on Wednesday afternoon. At the time he died, his 23-year-old mother, Joan Sloan, was sitting in the Fayette County Jail in a courthouse 70 miles northeast of here, facing a term of one to 10 years for trafficking in marijuana.

"We were told there is no sense in releasing her just so she can come down here to watch the kid die," said Dr. Frederick Suchy, chief resident at the hospital.

FAYETTE COUNTY Common Pleas Judge Evelyn Coffman had permitted the mother to visit the hospital for an hour Wednesday morning, but when the child's condition worsened later in the day, the judge refused to let her make the return trip.

"She's just a mean old thing," Sloan said of the judge.

Judge Coffman said she "hesitated in the first place, because from her standpoint, I thought it would have been an inhumane thing for her to go down there and see her child in that condition."

"The baby only had an hour to live," she said. "It was a heart-breaking decision. I have never had to make a decision like that before."

PRISON officials would not allow the child's mother to talk to reporters after Jamie's death.

The Rev. Thomas Eisentrout, Episcopal chaplain at the hospital who, along with Suchy, had pleaded in vain for the mother's right to make the visit, said he felt strongly that "people in prison should be allowed to visit loved ones at the time of death."

"What irked us first was they kept the mother in handcuffs and under guard when she did see the boy," Eisentrout said. "She was embarrassed about the handcuffs, wouldn't take off her coat. She couldn't hug him."

"I believe it is really important to help parents deal with the death of a child," the minister added. "Our experience has been, if the parents are present, they can understand it, be part of it and get over it easier."

Williams will take psychiatric exam

TOPEKA (AP)—A Junction City man accused of two slayings last week has been ordered to undergo a psychiatric examination to determine if he is mentally competent to stand trial.

James Hope, an associate judge of the Shawnee County District Court, ordered the examination for Albert Dale Williams, 22.

The examination is scheduled to be conducted next week.

Williams is charged in the fatal stabbing of Pamela Parker, 24, a secretary in the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce office.

Several money orders were stolen from the Chamber of Commerce office.

Williams is also charged with first-degree murder in the shooting death of Pamela Smith, 19, of Topeka. He is being held in Topeka on $150,000 bond.

Shawnee County authorities have said Williams would be tried for the Smith shooting before any trial is held in Manhattan.

UFM adds registration time for early workers, students

Early registration for University for Man (UFM) spring classes will be 7 a.m. Monday at the UFM house at 1221 Thurston.

Working people and students with morning classes can register early, said Melody Williams, director of registration.

Registration at the K-State Union will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, Feb. 13 through 15.

The UFM House will accept walk-in registration on Monday, Feb. 13, or registration may be called in by phone on Monday through Wednesday, Feb. 13 through 15.

No person can enroll in more than four classes by phone, Williams said.

REGISTRATION at the Manhattan Public Library and Douglass Community Center will also be Monday, Feb. 13.

Some classes have fees for materials. These fees must be paid on the day of registration, Williams said.

"It is important to us that people register," she said. "Registration allows us to let the class leaders know how many students to expect and how many supplies they will need."

"If someone registers for a limited class and then can't come, it's very important that they let the leader know so that he can let someone else into the class."

UFM staff members use the registration information to determine how many people enrolling are K-State students and how many are from the community. This information is passed on to UFM's funding sources so they can see where their money goes.

Police say York unlikely suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A day after arresting a part-time actor in the Hillside Strangler case, police said Thursday they had nothing firm tying Ned Terrence York to any of the 12 stranglings.

York, 32, is a bit player in several television series and a self-professed born-again Christian. He was booked for investigation of murder after telephoning police and claiming responsibility for the killings of 12 young women since September, police Cmdr. William Booth said at a press briefing.

But a search of his house Wednesday night turned up no evidence from any stranglings, police said.

Investigators delayed any release from custody at least until Friday.

Frozen oil prices continue

TEHRAN, Iran—Prime Minister Jamshid Amouzegar predicts world oil prices will remain frozen through 1978, but expects gradual annual increases after that, he told the Associated Press Thursday.

Phased increases during the coming decade will help impress on the minds of consumers—especially the “gas guzzlers” in the United States—that oil is a “precious and noble resource that must be conserved,” Amouzegar said.

“Price hikes also will provide incentive for investment in alternate means of energy.”

Israel draws U.S. fire

WASHINGTON—Israel, already sensitive about opposition to its settlements in occupied Arab lands, was buffeted again Thursday when the State Department criticized it for violating the rights of Arabs.

The criticism was part of the department's annual report on human rights in the 105 nations that receive American arms or economic assistance. The report accused some of the United States' staunchest allies of violations, including corruption and torture.

The report, based on information supplied by U.S. embassies, was written by middle-level State Department officials and then edited by senior officials before it was released.

The timing of the report was not related to President Carter's recent statements opposing the latest Israeli settlements on the West Bank. Congress, under a law passed in 1976, requires the reports to be delivered on Jan. 31 and they were released to the public Thursday after a delay for printing.

Nuclear test observer dies

BOISE, Idaho—Paul Cooper, the ex-serviceman who claimed his leukemia was caused by his close-range observance of an Army nuclear explosion 20 years ago, has died, a spokesman for the Veterans Administration Hospital said Thursday.

Cooper, 44, had been hospitalized on and off for the past year with leukemia. He was the first of several veterans to claim that witnessing the atmospheric tests in the Nevada desert caused leukemia.

Cooper's fight to gain disability benefits touched off a national quest for hundreds of soldiers who were exposed to radiation during the Yucca Flats detonations in 1957. The Army, the national Center for Disease Control and other agencies are looking for members of the 504th Airborne Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division to determine whether low-dose radiation might be causing delayed leukemia.

Carter urged to accept gift

DETROIT—An aging Cherokee Indian, voiceless because of throat cancer, is asking President Carter to change his mind and accept a handmade feathered headdress like the ones he has given to every elected president since Woodrow Wilson.

Chief Redbird, 78, convalescing in a Detroit area nursing home after surgery last year to remove a malignant larynx, said he sent a headdress to the White House shortly after Carter was elected.

But because of Carter's policy of accepting no gifts from the public, the headdress, made with turkey feathers, was returned.

Now a group of the chief's friends and relatives are trying to arrange not only for the president to accept the headdress but for Carter to receive it in person from Redbird, if the Indian's health improves sufficiently to make a meeting possible.

Good job, Bump-A-Thon!

Seven K-State living groups—six greek organizations and one residence hall—have something special to be proud of now.

Total donations raised by the 1978 K-State Muscular Dystrophy (MD) Bump-A-Thon at Mother's Worry have passed the $14,000 mark and the money is still coming in.

Donations to the 1978 Bump-A-Thon can be made until the time of (and during) the 1978 Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon.

Participants in the Bump-A-Thon come out of the experience exhausted, but with special feelings. They describe the experience with phrases such as "emotionally gratifying—the most fulfilling feeling you can have," and "you walk around for the next three or four months feeling love for everybody."

THE living groups—Acacia, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Chi, Lambda Chi Alpha, Alpha Delta Pi, Chi Omega and West Hall (the first residence hall to join the organization)—worked well together.

The K-State Bump-A-Thon has increased its total earnings for MD each year since its start in 1975, with $1900 being raised that year.

In 1976 it was $5600; in 1977, $12,500 and this year they vowed to break $15,000.

The 63 hours of the 1978 Bump-A-Thon were not spent in vain.

It looks like they're going to make it!

Cleaning up in politics

EDITOR'S NOTE: On Wednesday Tim Horan announced he has thrown in his earmuffs for the presidency. The following is a condensed version of the press conference he held in the back stall of the third floor Union bathroom.

Thank you, I'm glad you could all make it. It seems to be a little crowded in here, maybe I should have rented a larger room. (Pause). However, I see the Collegian made it. Hi, Doug. I'm not responsible for what's written on the walls. (Pause). Well, to get down to business, I would just like to say that I want to be your next president. Are there any questions?

Yes. What makes you think you're qualified?

Some of you may remember what this campus was like in 1968. I assure you I do and it was a mess. Let's face it. Well, I cleaned it up.

For the past ten years I have served as chairman of the Gamma Gamma Delta Sidewalk Cleaning Committee, president in charge of managing Willie the Wildcat's feces and head usher for block C, row 10, at concerts. Now I ask you, have you ever seen a messy sidewalk at GGD or a dirty Willie cage? The answer is no. (Flush).

Are you in favor of a five dollar increase to fund a new fieldhouse?

I'm glad you asked that question and to answer it, I must go back in time to 1976. I, like the rest of you peons, froze my (censored) off standing in line for three days to see the basketball team play. I also have been informed that two of the state's leading senators are supporting a new facility. I have talked with these gentlemen many times and I assure you that they as everyone else in the statehouse are aware of the poor facilities of this university. (Pause). Yes, Doug, you may write our name under the toilet paper.

Are minorities being fairly represented on campus?

I don't see how anyone can say that minorities are being fairly represented when the majority isn't even being fairly represented. However, I don't see this to be a problem. In 1975, I went undercover as a minority and learned what it was really like attending school as a senior.

Then I assume you favor reapportionment?

You know that when you assume you make an ass out of you and me. (Pause). Seriously, that's a very good question. So far my aids tell me there is really no need for any kind of reapportionment. I personally have lived in a dorm, a greek house and in an apartment and not once have I voted. However, I'm not ruling out the possibility. I have a bill which could go to the senate to change the election process so instead of elections being held by colleges they would be held by noses. (Gasp). That's right, noses.

Do you favor the decriminalization of marijuana?

Let me go on record to say I favor any form of contraceptive that will decrease boldness.

I'd like to see more about noses. Well, everyone has a different nose. If all are represented then I envision 100 percent representation.

I'm sorry but it looks like our time is up. I would like to say in closing that I would be a good president of the Tidy Bowl Union and would appreciate your vote. Any slander, defamation and/or constructive criticism will result in a law suit. Thank you. If someone would just push that little lever over there, I'll go home.

Letters to the editor

Can U.S. be neutral?

Editor,

In 1948 the U.S. helped to establish a Jewish state in the Arab's land of Palestine. This was only the beginning. Since 1948, the Israelis living in occupied Palestine have received continuous supplies of arms and financial assistance from the U.S.

In 1967 Israel invaded three Arab countries in the Six-Day War and occupied the West Bank, Sinai and the Golan Heights with U.S. support and arms. Since then the U.S. has continued sending modern weapons and increased financial aid to Israel.

In 1973, when the Egyptians and the Syrians tried to liberate the occupied parts of their land, the U.S. stood firmly behind the Israelis sending them a huge amount of highly sophisticated weapons during the war—changing the balance of power in favor of Israel—which enabled the Israelis to keep most of the occupied Arab land.

The question is: how could we relate all of these facts mentioned above with the absurd statement of the U.S. government of neutrality concerning the Mid-East conflict (Collegian, Feb. 6, front page article)?

At the same time the statement said, "There is no basic change in U.S. policy." This gives the wrong impression—that neutrality was the U.S. policy in the Middle East from the beginning of the Arab-Israeli conflict (which started with the creation of the Zionist state in Palestine in 1948).

A country can't be considered to be neutral by supporting one side against the other or, by giving much more superior equipment one side than to the other.

Therefore, we ask: can the U.S. be neutral and try to be a friend to both sides?

We really hope that this would be true in the future.

Toss trash to play KU's game

Editor,

It is a fact that in times of warfare, organization can and will help defeat an opponent, no matter how overwhelming he may be.

Hence, when K-State meets the much heralded KU team in Manhattan this Saturday, a well executed plan can lead to their demise.

The fans at KU have provided us with the stimulus to write this letter (ie: the hotdog incident with Curtis Redding).

There are many members of the KU team who should also be singled out for such honors.

However, before this happens, we must first dispense with two preliminary tasks.

First, the band needs to prepare a number for Coach Owens—"Teddy."

Then, there is a definite indication for that perennial event, the throwing of the Jayhawks (those splendidly-colored chickens which in the past have been so effective against the hawks).

Now for the individual players.

We need to order 1500 diplomas (Magna Cum Laude or higher), Campaign ban?

Editor,

Thursday's Collegian carried an article about Sam Brownback visiting Haymaker Hall—supposedly against hall policy.

That policy is to keep salesmen out but now it's going to keep students from talking to our student leaders.

Sam took the time to visit friends here in the dorm and then was introduced to our friends in neighboring rooms.

He did that, as he said in the article, for "maximum student input."

We enjoyed the chance to talk with Sam about the real issues and he said he appreciated the feedback.

When Sam found out the rules would not let him meet other people he stopped immediately to keep his campaign totally honest.

But if we elect our student representatives, why can't we talk to them?

We're glad Sam took the time to listen to us.

We should also supply this genius with a string of beads so that he can systematically move one bead at a time to the opposite end of the string to keep track of time outs.

Donnie Von Moore should have miniature gorillas thrown at him. We also suggest that he be admitted to KU Medical School along with Koenigs, with the specific intent of curing hiccups.

We have nothing to throw at Paul Mokeski, but we still wonder how tall he would be if he ever straightened his hunched-over shoulders.

To Max Falkenstein's freshman sensation, Darnell Valentine, we should throw miniature dolls to indicate to him (should he figure it out) that he is still a baby.

If you don't believe us, watch Darnell "Who me?" Valentine when he commits a foul.

Hotdogs would also be in order, however we need to demonstrate our imagination to a particular Topeka Capitol-Journal Sports Editor who thought the KU students showed great imagination by throwing hotdogs at Redding.

For those of you who think this letter is unnecessary and childish, we agree.

However, it's the only way to communicate with the KU student body.

In addition, suppose Jim Bain was to referee this game... we would need some means to make up the 15-point lead KU would have before the game starts.

Organic food makes super supper

January. How many good things can one say about the first month of the year? Before this week I personally thought January was a waste of time, until Restaurant Romp robbed the cradle.

On January 10th Deity's Daughter was born.

Five years ago Eddie and Don Stillings opened Manhattan Health Foods for the same reason less adventurous persons have a paper route—to pay for college. Well the organic food business mushroomed (so to speak) and the next logical step to create an establishment that served the foods they sold.

Rumors ran rampant as satisfied customers pounced upon my person directing me to Manhattan's newest restaurant. Adjectives such as strange, natural, healthy, alternative and invigorating were used to describe the experience by these amateur eaters.

FIRST we should define what exactly is a natural food. Anything is a natural food if it's not made from petroleum. Frozen pizzas, Big Macs and hotdogs can be considered natural foods, at least their basic ingredients were natural at one time.

The secret is in the combination of healthy natural foods. These are foodstuffs that have not been drowned in chemicals whose primary objectives are to preserve color and flavor for a hundred years. As far as meat goes, who knows what a cow eats.

Restaurant Romp

Located at 306 N. 3rd, Deity's Daughter is next door to the Manhattan Health Foods. This makes things easier when one discovers a favorite spice or a new flavor of tea. Sort of like a one-stop shop.

Open from 11 a.m. until 9 p.m., the restaurant offers only one menu. But that one menu is as varied as any in this metropolis.

There are six sandwiches from which to choose, ranging in price from $1.95 to $2.35. They are different. The Taj Mahal is an avocado sandwich with mushrooms, tomatoes, sprouts and cheese. Or for something really different try the Falafil stir-fried chickpea balls stuffed in pita bread and garnished with chopped tomatoes, sprouts and tahini sauce.

TO ADD variety one can choose to eat just soup $2.95 (all you can eat) or for $3.00 the hearty eater can make a meal of the salad bar which includes whole grain dinner rolls and a ticket to the fruit bar.

Being adventurous, my fellow romper and I decided to try the dinners. There are two types of quiche (egg pies) and two types of crepes. The price range for these entrees is $2.75 to $2.85 and if you decide to try the salad bar the price is upped to $3.80 to $3.95.

My companion tried the mushroom quiche. It was her first experience with a quiche and she was more than satisfied. The best thing about it is the mushrooms actually overwhelmed the taste of the dish. Rarely when one orders mushrooms can their flavor be recognized. This is the first.

I tried the vegetable crepe. The crepe is made with whole wheat flour and stuffed with pinto beans, brown rice and a small amount of vegetables topped with plain yogurt. The addition of cumin and coriander spices make this a delicious and unforgettable meal.

In the fluid category there are six varieties of tea and six varieties of juices. But the Deity's Delight is the showcase. Made with milk, pineapple, bananas and an army of other ingredients the delight is guaranteed to make your body smile.

In summary Deity's Daughter is THE best restaurant I have visited in Manhattan. Excellent service, fantastic decor and exceptional food make this the place to bring someone you love. Now if Deity would just have a son.

'Return to sender' on Valentine means it's not official business

A valentine sent through campus mail probably won't reach its destination—and campus mail deliverers are not to blame.

"Campus mail is for the transfer of official University business only," said Paul Young, vice president for university development.

According to Inez Rand, supervisor of the postal center at Anderson Hall, campus mail is put in the campus slot at Anderson and taken out to the specified departments twice a day.

"Campus mail is for business between departments, such as papers distributed by deans of various colleges and any other official University business. Any personal mail found is to be returned to the sender," she said.

CAMPUS mail includes bills sent to dorm residents from housing or other departments.

"These are students who are mostly sending these personal letters," said Donald Roof, Derby Complex supervisor.

"If I see a letter which looks personal, for example, a valentine, I look at the return address, write a note to the individual, have it returned or he can come and get," Roof said.

Campus mail, consisting mostly of housing bills, comes to Roof's office where it is sorted and sent to the Derby Complex dorms, including Moore, Haymaker, West and Ford.

"If there's no return address on a personal letter I pull it and hold it. If the person comes I give him a talk about official University business. If I still have the letter after a period of time such as a semester I'll throw it out," Roof said.

PRESIDENT ACKER gave out a directive last year saying that campus mail is for official University business only, Roof said.

"Acker didn't tell me personally to sort out personal mail—I'm using my own initiative. I think everyone should do it, and if they don't they're in the wrong for not following Ackers directive. I'm not criticizing anyone, I just feel it's necessary to follow the directive," he said.

'Cautious optimism' for Nichols

Doyen's plan to committee

By MIKE NASS
Collegian Reporter

University administrators are expressing "cautious optimism" with a request by State Senator Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) for $50,000 to begin an architectural study of Nichols Gym.

Doyen plans to request the funds in budget hearings before the Senate Ways and Means Committee in late February.

Barry Flinchbaugh, assistant to president Duane Acker, said he was contacted by Doyen and Rep. Bob Arbuthnot (R-Haddan) about the structure.

"They said quite a few legislators were interested in solving the Nichols Gym questions," Flinchbaugh said. "When you have the president of the senate and one of the leading members of the House showing interest with no encouragement from us, it's encouraging."

A PRELIMINARY study is needed to see if it is feasible to do anything with Nichols, Doyen said.

"If it isn't feasible, then Nichols should be gotten out of the way," he said.

"It's time to decide what to do," Doyen said. "I think I have good support. I think it has an excellent chance of getting through (the committee)."

Arbuthnot said there was a lot of sentiment to do something with Nichols, but priorities should be kept in line.

We don't want to hurt the priorities of other buildings that are planned," Arbuthnot said. "We must keep the priorities in line with other buildings."

Arbuthnot said he saw a need to get Nichols cleaned up.

"We would have no problem getting the money to get the lot straightened up and landscaped," Arbuthnot said.

IT WOULD be "a little bit beyond the imagination" to build within the existing walls, though, he said.

However, Doyen has put together five proposals for Nichols, three of which include building within the existing walls:

—Build approximately 60,000 square feet of space within Nichols' walls to consolidate and house the departments of Computer Science and Statistics, the Computing Center, the Data Processing Center and classrooms for the College of Business Administration. Estimated cost is $5 million.

—Build approximately 60,000 square feet of space within Nichols to house an art gallery, visitors center, conference center, Continuing Education, Alumni Association and Endowment Association, also at an estimated cost of $5 million.

—Build approximately 60,000 square feet of space in Nichols to house an art gallery, studio and teaching space for the art department. The estimated cost is $4 million.

—Raze Nichols and build an art gallery and parking for visitors to McCain auditorium—20,000 square feet for approximately $1 million.

Raze Nichols and add additional parking for McCain Auditorium at an estimated cost of 300,000.

must be done again," Young said. "You can't reach a generalization about the building."

"If it gets beyond the preliminary stages, the plans usually begin to move a lot faster," Young said. "I believe Doyen intends to get a resolution one way or another."

Auto crashes rank highest for deaths of nation's youth

WASHINGTON (AP)—Auto accidents are the leading cause of death of America's young people ages one to 24, the government reports.

Information from the National Center for Health Statistics shows that 20,279 persons between the ages of one and 24 died in auto accidents in 1975.

The next leading causes of death in this age group were homicide, which took the lives of 6,195; cancer, which took 5,219 lives; suicide, which took 4,736 lives; and birth defects, which killed 1,883.

A new Census Bureau report for the same year shows that auto accidents accounted for 65 percent of all accidental deaths among youths aged 15 to 24; 48 percent among children five to 14; and 37 percent among children one to four.

WHILE the number of auto fatalities a year has dropped about 14 percent since 1974 when the speed limit was lowered to 55 m.p.h., auto accidents still remain the sixth leading cause of death for persons in all age groups, according to Bobby Boaz, a spokesman at the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration here.

One reason why car accidents are the leading killer of young people, Boaz said, is that persons in this age group are not as susceptible to such problems as heart attacks, strokes and cancer which often hit older people.

Another reason, he added, is that many young people do not know their own tolerance for liquor or realize that if they drink three cans of beer in a two-hour period, they are probably legally drunk.

And a third is that young people are less experienced drivers who sometimes take unnecessary chances.

BOAZ said that an estimated 46,700 persons died in cars in 1977 and that half of all traffic fatalities are in some way alcohol-related.

Although he did not have figures on how many deaths in this age group were alcohol-related, a study done for NHTSA in 1974 of youths aged 14-to-18 showed that half of the teenagers interviewed said they went to at least one drinking party a month and 61 percent of that group said they got drunk at least once a month.

PAUL YOUNG, vice president for university facilities, said a study of Nichols was undertaken in 1975 by an architect in Topeka. The main conclusion of the study was that building within the existing walls was feasible if no loads beyond the original design capacities are added to existing footings.

Under the guidelines of the study, the Eidsons Architects of Manhattan drew up plans for an art gallery and office and classroom space for the art department.

"The plans were a labor of love," Young said. They were not done under any official authorization.

Poor acting, weak dialogue drown ocean adventure show 'The Deep'

EDITOR'S NOTE: "The Deep" will be shown at 7 and 9:30 p.m. today and tomorrow in the Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.25 with a student ID.

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

Ocean lovers may find the "The Deep" one big plop of boredom, leaving them with a stale, salty taste of acting.

An evening with Jacques Cousteau would be more intriguing and rewarding than sitting through this movie.

The movie, directed by Peter Yates, centers around a couple (Jacqueline Bisset as Gail Berke and Nick Nolte as David Sanders) who take off to Bermuda in quest of abandoned treasure which is aboard a sunken Spanish ship wrecked in the 1700s.

In the opening, Bisset and Nolte are frolicking about under the water, exploring caves and the ocean floor for inviting treats and tidbits from the wreckage.

DURING this action, some bright and entertaining shots of ocean life are viewed, but they don't distract from the camera's exploration of Bisset's features clinging to her white t-shirt.

After they collect objects in their nets, they find discover what they believe to be a mysterious Spanish coin and a tiny, slender liquid-filled bottle.

From there, the plot floats, sinks and rises only to be submerged again by some lousy lines and poor scene transitions.

The couple experiences all kinds of conflicts as their escapades take them to Romer Treece (Robert Shaw) who tells them the curious coin is really a medallion and the liquid bottle contains morphine.

SHAW plays his role well at times. His first impressions of the couple are suspicious ones. Later, he begins to like Bisset and Nolte, and stages several treasure hunts with them to find a missing link between the medallion and the fleet.

Shaw does have some better symbolic lines in relation to the treasures of the ocean, however, that takes away his constant referral to the couple as "boy" and "girl".

Meanwhile, a conspiracy is happening. Slake (Dick Anthony Williams), who poses as a collector of rare and unusual glass, has some sinister ideas in mind.

He and his sadistic voodoo trio learn there's more of those potent bottles swarming in the depths, and they go to violent lengths to retrieve them for profit.

THE MOVIE really isn't all that bleak. There are some suspense-filled scenes—just not enough of them.

The music, done by John Barry, and special effects, by Ira Anderson, are most appropriate to varying scenes, especially with the explosive fights and shark battles.

Peter Benchley, who wrote the screenplay, could have used more originality in writing the dialogue.

Yates could have offered more pep to the only love scene between the attractive Bisset and the blue-eyed Nolte. He could have also helped clarify that gurgled underwater language.

Water adventurers, don't despair! Aside from dull acting, "The Deep" might be worth seeing for the intermittent pleasures and frenzies of being below the depths.

NORML under attack for spending too much

TOPEKA (AP)—Opponents of legislation to ease marijuana laws have accused backers of the bill of staging expensive social affairs aimed at getting legislative approval.

But supporters say it isn't true. They said a recent gathering in Lawrence and a fund raiser this weekend in Topeka are legitimate functions organized at a pittance of the cost many other lobbying groups pay.

The Kansas chapter of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws.

NORML has scheduled a fund raising event this Sunday for invited guests at the Topeka private club. Proceeds will go to finance the group's lobbying efforts in the Legislature, organizers say.

SOME opponents of the pending bill recently reported to news media and lawmakers that NORML was spending nearly $1,600 total for the two parties—$600 already spent at the Lawrence club last week and $1,000 for the upcoming Sunday gathering.

However, organizers of the two NORML affairs said Wednesday that's not true.

"We have never had that much money ever," said William Craven, state director for NORML.

Rep. Michael Glover (D-Lawrence), who hosted the Lawrence party, said the cost was about $250 which he paid personally before leaving the club.

KU-K-State clash unusual; game not for league crown

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats will find themselves in a somewhat odd position when they take on the Kansas Jayhawks Saturday at 1:30 in Ahearn Field House.

This game will not be played, as many have in the past, with the idea that the winner will come away with the Big Eight title.

Kansas comes into Saturday's game with a 19-3 record, ranked eighth in the nation and holding onto the Big Eight conference lead with a 9-1 mark.

While the 'Cats, having suffered through a somewhat dismal season in the eyes of many K-State loyalists, come into the game with a 14-8 overall record and a 5-5 mark in the Big Eight, and scrapping to remain in the first division.

BUT IN weighing the advantages and disadvantages of Saturday's game, maybe the comparison of team records and the traditional home court advantage could swing the outcome of the game in favor of the 'Cats.

Even though KU has an outstanding record, the Jayhawks are playing with the added pressure of Nebraska breathing down their necks in second place, and needing a win to remain in sole possession of the league lead.

Sports

K-State is all but mathematically out of the running for the Big Eight championship and a loss would not kill them. But a win could be the spark the 'Cats need to pick up momentum before the post-season tourney.

Advantage: K-State.

THE HOME court advantage has been known to give the home team a couple of points before the game starts, but in the case of these traditional rivals, the home court is worth much more.

Advantage: K-State.

The coaches, Ted Owens for the 'Hawks and Jack Hartman for the Wildcats, have always played a major role in the outcome of the rivalry.

Hartman has compiled a 10-9 record versus the Jayhawks and Owens in 18-15 against the Wildcats and 9-10 versus Hartman. But Owens has only defeated Hartman once in Ahearn.

Advantage: K-State.

STARTING with the backcourts, an evaluation of those playing shows Hartman has had trouble finding a guard to team with Big Eight scoring leader Mike Evans, but has gone with Scott Langton the past few games to give the 'Cats an added defensive punch.

Evans' scoring and Langton's defense will have to offset KU's freshman sensation Darnell Valentine and the defensive pressure applied by Clint Johnson.

Advantage: Toss-up.

Comparing the front lines is definitely the toughest assignment. K-State relies on their front line of Steve Soldner, Rolando Blackman and Curtis Redding, who if he pulls out of his slump, could almost single-handedly beat the Jayhawks as was the case last year when the Jayhawks visited.

KANSAS' front line is big and consistent. Led by 6-10 Ken Koenigs, 7-1 Paul Mokeski and 6-2 sparkplug John Douglas, the Jayhawks have consistently outrebounded opposing teams. Douglas, like Redding, has a past history of performing well against his in-state rival.

Advantage: Because of consistency, KU.

The final and possibly most important position is the bench. Depth has not been one of K-State's high points this season. Although Fred Barton has performed well in a starting role, and Dean Danner, Jerry Black and Brent Murphy have played well at times.

But the bench could be the greatest advantage KU has over any team. The Jayhawks depth has taken its toll on many opponents this year. Donnie Von Moore, Wilmore Fowler and Milt Gibson have repeatedly sparked KU victories.

Advantage KU.

Totalling the advantages shows K-State with three, KU with two, and one toss up.

If games could be won on paper, this total means K-State fans can have a good time in Aggieville Saturday night, but since games can't be won on paper, K-Staters will have to see what happens Saturday.

Tracksters to Oklahoma City

Both K-State's men's and women's track teams will travel to Oklahoma City Friday for the Oklahoma Track Classic.

K-State's women will be running against Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and North Texas State while the men will be competing against teams from 37 other schools including Big Eight foes Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Kansas and Colorado.

Women's coach Barry Anderson plans to do some experimenting Friday, particularly in the sprints, in anticipation of the Big Eight Indoor at Lincoln, February 19.

"They won't be keeping any team scores at Oklahoma," Anderson said. "So we're going to try to see how ready some of our people are for the Big Eight."

"We'll be looking at some new people in different events and trying to make some final decisions in others," Anderson said.

K-STATE'S best bets for individual honors appear to be veteran distance runner Cindy Worcester, who'll be making her first appearance of the year in the mile, freshman Freda Hancock in the 300-yard dash, an event in which she posted a school record 35.6 last weekend, and the mile relay foursome of Wanda Trent, Lorraine Davidson, Carla Nealy and Hancock.

The 'Cats will be without the services of Diane Moeller who strained some ligaments in her right foot in winning the high jump in Columbia.

Men's coach Mike Ross expects the toughest competition to date for his 'Cats.

MILER Ed DeLashmutt and triple jumper Vince Parrette are K-State's best shots at individual honors, but the 'Cats could pick up points from Kevin Sloan in the long jump, Willie Major in the 300-yard dash, and Bill Tanner and Ray Hanf in the quarter-mile.

K-State also could expect a strong showing in the mile relay with the foursome of Major, Hanf, Tanner and Darnell Washington.

What Willie says...

By WILLIE WILDCAT
Collegian Reporter

There is much in store at the K-State-KU ballgame Saturday.

As Willie the Wildcat I can see the game as a match-up between two national powerhouses. Our record may not show we're a powerhouse, but I know it's true.

One of the most determining factors of the game will be the tension put on KU by the K-State fans. That could tell the whole story.

The only game people have talked about for the past week has been the one to be played Saturday. Many people forgot the Wildcats had to face the nationally ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers before they could even think about the Jayhawks.

THE UNIVERSITY of Kansas Jayhawk told me he would not be in Manhattan for the game. He said in past years there has been trouble when he's on the K-State court. I see that as a plus for us.

I have risked my neck several times in Lawrence so I could represent the Wildcats. I have never had problems in Lawrence other than with girls. I find that I portray something that seemingly every girl wants.

Big Eight track men rolling

The 1978 Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships are drawing close (February 24-25) and it would be hard to figure a long-shot favorite from the results established to date.

Always tough Kansas will be challenged from several quarters and the Big Eight track teams have found solid balance a key part of the track and field programs.

Nebraska stunned the conference's track and field faithfuls with an impressive 85-55 win over Kansas two weeks ago. The Cornhuskers have not let up from that performance and last week NU set two team records.

Dean Ross sailed 16 feet, one-half inch in the pole vault for one new mark and the Big Red mile relay team set a new standard of 3:14.1, the fastest in the conference this year. NU won 10 of 16 events for the team title.

Other surprises this week include Iowa State in an upset victory over Missouri in the Missouri Invitational. The Tigers have many outstanding individuals that head several categories this year. But the Cyclones of coach Bill Bergan won the eight team meet demonstrating the ISU thinclads are to be considered for the league's crown.

KANSAS STATE continues to improve under coach Mike Ross and last week the Wildcats beat a fine Oklahoma team. Kansas won a mini-league title over visiting Colorado and Oklahoma State and seems back on the pace following the loss to Nebraska the week before.

The only other team record set last week was by Oklahoma in the mile relay when William Snoddy, Bobby Arnaud, Greg Byram and Randy Wilson, ran to a 3:15.4 clocking.

Mile times have been lowered considerably this week with K-State's Ed DeLashmutt turning in a 4:07.3 and Iowa State's Jeff Myers lowering his season's time to 4:09.3. Four Big Eight milers are under 4:10.

Missouri's Andrew Agbekaku holds the triple jump mark this far into the season with a 53-5 leap but K-State's Vince Parrette keeps moving a little closer each week and has moved to a 52-3 best for the season.

Articles prepare fishermen

We've now reached that time when most hunting seasons are closed and fishing has to be done through a foot of ice. While those, who partake of the sport of ice fishing are more than likely having a field day, many sportsmen are sitting at home.

For those of you who have enough rabbits in the freezer to last a life time, and can't find enough long johns to brave a day on a foot or two of ice with the wind whipping down from the north, don't despair over nothing to do. Now is the time to read up on different methods of fishing in preparation for spring.

Bass: Take Them at Night, Bass: Take Them in the Day, Bass: Take Them After the Thaw, 50 ways that Bass Strike, all of these subjects can be seen in magazines and newspapers.

There are a variety of articles out on how to catch not only bass, but many other fish as well. This time of the year gives anglers a chance to read up on different methods of fishing.

NOT ABL methods are going to work in the particular area a person might be living in. Many articles may contain only a sentence, or a paragraph that will help in increasing your fishing skills.

For those of you who are in my situation, i.e. no bucks to buy magazines, Farrell Library contains many different outdoor magazines. Many issues go back 10 or more years, in case you want to catch up on the ones you missed.

There is much to be gained by reading about different methods of fishing.

Many times those who have written the article have experienced many hours of failure before they have experienced many hours of success. Therefore, you can probably save yourself a few thousand casts by reading about their experiences.

HOWEVER, don't try a new method of fishing only once, just to get skunked and give it up as useless. Often times under different conditions it will be every bit as successful as the author said and sometimes more.

Many people have lost interest in fishing because of not experimenting. A person learns one or two ways of fishing for something and rain or shine, wind or calm they use the same methods. Fishing is like football, when the weather changes the game plan changes.

If a variety of methods are known that apply to a variety of weather conditions, most people will notice an increase in the number of fish on the end of the line, as well as an increase in the enjoyment.

Weather conditions are not the only variables. Different methods apply to fishing in a reservoir and to fishing in a farm pond. If a person knows where he will be fishing he can read articles on that type of fishing.

YOU SHOULD not restrict yourself to the large outdoor hunting and fishing magazines, many times area publications will prove more useful because of the greater similarity between where you will be fishing and where they have been fishing.

Bass fishing in New York is not entirely like bass fishing in Kansas.

When the ponds and lakes open again, if you have done your homework chances are good you will be dropping some jaws when you come home from the lake. Good fishing.

Women go for fifth straight as ISU Cyclones dribble in After defeating Northwest Missouri State Wednesday night for their fourth win in a row the K-State women's basketball team will host the Iowa State Cyclones at 7:30 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

With the 71-69 win over the Bearkittens the 'Cats moved their record to 15-12 on the season.

Iowa State, 10-7 on the year heading into a Tuesday night encounter with William Penn, had a five game winning streak going before dropping decisions to Grand View College, 82-52, and Kansas 75-65, last week.

Iowa State's list of probable starters for tonight's game include 5-6 junior Carol Ruby and 5-7 junior Colleen Peterson at guards, 5-10 sophomore London Reile and 5-10 senior Pat Hodgson at forwards, and 6-0 freshman Karen Wiese at center.

HODGSON is the team's leading scorer averaging 12.9 points a contest while Peterson is adding 11.6. Hodgson also leads the Cyclones in rebounding, averaging 8.8 caroms a game.

Eileen Feeney, 5-10 sophomore, leads the 'Cats in scoring, averaging 13.4 points a game while 6-1 junior Beth Boggs is adding 11.3 points a contest. Boggs is the club's top rebounder, averaging 7.3 grabs an outing.

The Wildcats hold a 4-1 advantage in their series with Iowa State. The teams split in two close meetings last year, with K-State winning, 60-59, in first round action in the Big Eight Tournament at Boulder, and Iowa State avenging that with a 58-57 upset in Ames.

U.S. food chief favors growth in foreign trade

By PHIL ACHTEN
Collegian Reporter

It is important that more countries become involved in the world agricultural market to relieve surplus burdens and equalize the world trade market, according to John Boyle, chief of the Food Policy Division in the U.S. Department of State.

Boyle, who has spent much time examining food policies in foreign countries, spoke on the agricultural and economic problems of the world at a lecture in the Union Thursday.

Maintaining good relations with other countries concerning food issues is very important, Boyle said.

"The hopes of the administration are to hold on to foreign markets and expend in that area if possible," he said.

Raising prices on exported grain should be a last resort because the U.S. farmer relies on export markets for selling goods and a price increase might price the U.S. out of the market, he said.

BOYLE said that another area in which the U.S. is active is participating in talks aimed at international food supply. These talks, held in Geneva and other parts of the world, are designed to get more countries actively involved in the world food market.

One of the United States' goal is to have free agricultural trade in as much of the world as possible.

"A start, would be to remove some of the barriers countries have advertently or inadvertently placed that have hurt trade," Boyle said.

Despite efforts by his department, Boyle said he believes there is a lack of communication as to how complex the entire process of world trade is.

"In general, we have a very favorable agricultural balance," Boyle said.

He praised the actions of farmers, consumers and all of the other groups that are working toward a better agricultural balance on our own country.

Boyle said he had learned much about the agricultural situation in Kansas and hoped what he has learned would be helpful in the future.

THE PARTY'S OVER.

All too often, when the party ends, the trouble begins.

People who shouldn't be doing anything more active than going to sleep are driving a car. Speeding and weaving their way to death.

Before any of your friends drive home from your party, make sure they aren't drunk.

Don't be fooled because they drank only beer or wine. Beer and wine can be just as intoxicating as mixed drinks.

And don't kid yourself because they may have had some black coffee. Black coffee can't sober them up well enough to drive.

FRIENDS DON'T LET FRIENDS DRIVE DRUNK.

If someone gets too drunk to drive, drive him yourself. Or call a cab. Or offer to let him sleep over.

Maybe your friend won't be feeling so good on the morning after, but you're going to feel terrific.

Design studios work on solar airport

By CINDY IZZO
Collegian Reporter

Students of the advanced Architectural and Design Studio classes (III, IV and V) will use the idea of a solar heated and cooled airport terminal as the subject of a class project.

The project, which will use Manhattan airport as a model, will involve six to eight students who will be working with the Manhattan airport committee, the city commission, and airport officials, said Gary Coates, associate professor of architecture.

According to Eugene Kremer, associate professor of architecture, the students will study possible ways solar energy can be incorporated into the new airport terminal facility.

"We, (the students), also will be working on airport efficiency," Coates said. "Before we can initially design this solar energy terminal, we must find out what the terminal can do, with regards to the accommodation of air traffic, and passenger flow."

COATES said they will meet with airport officials in two weeks to discuss the program.

"This is a good experience for our students," Coates said. "It will be a challenging application for the study of solar-energy alternatives."

The project will continue for most of the semester and at least two students will continue to work on the program for their undergraduate thesis after the class has finished, he said.

"We are not competing with private architects," Kremer said. "The students are undertaking this project so as to gain practical knowledge, and to provide community and airport officials with a chance to study student potentials."

KREMER said when enough money is provided, private architects will be hired to take on the job of developing the new airport facility.

"Our students are not licensed architects, and we (the school), do not provide professional services," Kramer said.

"Right now, there is no money for the design studies," Coates said. "The city commissioners have given the airport committee permission to seek funds to hire someone to do planning feasibility studies."

Some commissioners believe however, the solar-powered aspect of the terminal could attract different funding sources because of the uniqueness of the project.

The energy commission could be a source of funding for the construction of the terminal.

The project could be funded by matching federal grants in which the federal agency funding the program would provide 80 percent of the money with the other 20 percent coming from local coffers.

Momaday sees a closing gap between whites and Indians

It's impossible for most white authors to accurately write about the problems of the American Indian culture, according to N. Scott Momaday, a Kiowa Indian and Pulitzer Prize winning author.

Momaday related his experiences as an Indian growing up on reservations in the Southwest during a convocation lecture Thursday at McCain Auditorium.

Momaday said that he doesn't see himself as a model or example to other young Indians because "I just like to write and tell stories."

There is currently a "considerable gap" between whites and Indians, "but I see this gap narrowing in the future," Momaday said.

MOMADAY, a professor of English at Stanford University, said he isn't actively involved in the American Indian Movement (AIM) or other political movements because he doesn't "identify politically very easily."

During his lecture, Momaday read from his Pulitzer Prize winning novel "House Made of Dawn." The book, he said, tells the story of a young Pueblo Indian who returns to the reservation after fighting in World War II.

Momaday said many Indians were "caught up" in the war and returned to find they couldn't cope with their old culture. Many of these veterans became social outcasts.

N 1974, when Momaday spent four months as a guest lecturer at the State University of Moscow, he wrote several poems many dealing with the landscape of the great plains of Oklahoma where he was born.

"There are few Indian writers," Momaday said, "because writing in English is a discipline that is just now coming to the Indians." However, he said, there is a great oral language of story telling which has been handed down through the Indian culture and hasn't been printed.

Momaday, who is a member of the Gourd Dance society, said he returns every summer to Oklahoma to participate in this event.

"This is a way for me to reinstate myself in the Kiowa tradition," he said.

"An Indian is someone who thinks of himself as an Indian," Momaday said. "I think of myself as an Indian."

Wichita slope is no ski joke

By JANE HIGGINS
Staff Writer

Wichita-Shocker Mountain Ski School at Wichita State University took the joke out of "Ski Kansas," by making a plastic artificial ski surface designed to give Kansans what the plains can't offer.

The 177-foot slope is nestled on a specially made ramp under Cessna Stadium on the WSU campus.

Ted Bredehoft, athletic director at WSU, came up with the ski school idea one year ago. By Sept. 26, 1977, skiers were sliding down the artificial surface.

SHOCKER MOUNTAIN is owned and operated by the WSU

Athletic Department, with all profits channelled to an athletic scholarship fund.

WSU's Athletic Department is totally independent of the University so construction of athletic facilities such as Shocker Mountain can proceed without the clearing necessary for the University buildings.

But at K-State, the athletic department is a part of the University, so plans for an artificial ski slope like WSU's would have to be cleared by University Facilities, the Long Range Planning Committee, the Board of Regents and the Kansas Legislature.

Jersey Jermier, K-State's athletic director, said he "wouldn't be at all above looking into it (artificial ski slope.) We are always looking for ways to help our program."

A feasibility study would be the first step in considering the project, Jermier said.

WSU is the first four-year University to start an artificial-surface ski school, said Ed Corcoran, manager of Shocker Mountain. It is also one of only two percent of collegiate athletic departments in the country to make money.

"It is the first time an athletic association has set up something like this strictly to make more money for an athletic fund," he said.

"I can't figure out why we're teaching people to ski this fast," he said.

A ski instructor called Corcoran from Vail, Col., about a man who had four hours of private lessons at Shocker Mountain, and no experience on real snow. They put him in with fifth-day skiers, Corcoran said.

Dura-Snow, the white plastic bristle used at Shocker Mountain, is the finest surface out now, he said. The surface isn't as easy to turn on as snow, but it is better for learning because it is so consistent. When the skier applies an edge, the ski works exactly like it is supposed to, he said.

In a one-hour private lesson at Shocker Mountain, the instructor is always close to the student and tow time is minimal, enabling the student to get one hour of instruction, he said.

"In Colorado, a one-hour private lesson is maybe 20 minutes because the chair is 20 minutes long," Corcoran said.

THE SKI school is offered as a physical education course for one hour of credit and a $65 lab fee. This entitles the students to 16 hours of instruction and 14 hours of open ski time.

Initial cost for the ramp, surface and ski equipment totaled approximately $90,000, he said. Corcoran said WSU students laughed at the idea and alumni were skeptical. But profits last month for the Shocker Mountain topped the $10,000 mark.

The entire marginal cost should be paid off in less than three years, he said. Then the Mountain will begin dropping approximately $40,000 each year into the scholarship fund.

Senate denies student unions right to liquor consumption

TOPEKA (AP)—The Senate, acting swiftly with little debate, killed a bill Thursday that would have allowed groups to serve liquor at gatherings in university student unions.

The measure went down to defeat on an 11-19 standing vote in the upper chamber.

Critics said the state had no business allowing drinking in student unions, contending it would make alcohol more accessible to those under 21 years old. And they charged it would increase the consumption of liquor in Kansas.

"Do you think drinking hard liquor helps increase their education, their seeking of wisdom and knowledge?" asked Sen. John Vermillion (R-Independence).

Saying the student unions were built on public property, Vermillion argued that it was unfair to make taxpayers contribute in any way "to have buildings where people can go in them and, in many cases, make monkeys of themselves."

Sen. John Crofoot (R-Cedar Point), who carried the bill in debate, denied it would increase consumption and said alumni and private groups would be most affected.

The current prohibition forces groups to hold their social hours in one place and then drive to the student union for a banquet or other function, he said. Crofoot called the arrangement both inconvenient and dangerous in the case of a drinking driver.

Answer to yesterday's puzzle.

Firm recommends solutions for city's parking problems

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

The Downtown Redevelopment Committee met Thursday with a Topeka consulting firm to discuss the downtown parking problem and traffic flow around that area.

"There is too much emphasis on parking, particularly on Poyntz," Bill Smith, head of the committee, said.

Smith is a member of the consulting firm of Van Doren, Hazard and Stallings of Topeka. The city hired the firm to explore possible options for a southern artery and solving downtown parking problems.

The firm recommended the southern artery be built on the present Rock Island Railroad line, between Yuma and Pottawatomie streets.

A possible solution to the Poyntz parking problem would be to restrict left turns onto side streets, with a center lane provided. Traffic would be taken off the outside lane and moved to the center lane. This would allow persons parking on Poyntz to enter and leave parking spaces more safely, Smith said.

ACCORDING to the firm's study on downtown, there is a deficit of about 300 parking spaces. There should be about four parking spaces for every 1,000 people in a city, he said. This estimation includes the student population.

The parking solution should help the traffic flow of the downtown area, Smith said.

Smith pointed out another problem with downtown traffic flow.

There is no orientation in driving through downtown, he said. Smith said this lack of uniformity causes confusion and excess traffic in the downtown area.

One possible solution would be to use Fifth Street as an access to the southern artery, which would relieve traffic going west out of downtown on Piere and Houston Streets.

Smith pointed out that these ideas are in the preliminary stages. Next Tuesday the plans for downtown parking and the southern artery will be presented to the City Commission.

Dow Jones suffers setback in gains

NEW YORK (AP)—The stock market drifted lower in a slow session Thursday, erasing some of its gains of the past two trading days.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had risen 14.05 points Tuesday and Wednesday, fell back 4.85 to 777.81.

Losers held a 7-5 advantage over gainers on the New York Stock Exchange, and the NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gave up .24 to 50.11.

Candidates give suggestions for representation problem

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the conclusion of a four-part series dealing with the candidates for student body president and their position on the issues of reapportionment, minorities, parking and the effectiveness of Student Senate.

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

Candidates for student body president agree that Student Senate is not as effective as it could be in representing the K-State student body, but disagree about the causes and remedies of senate ineffectiveness.

Ted Knopp, Bernard Shaw, Cindy Thomas, Stan Watt and Sam Brownback said as student body president they would work with senate to try to increase it effectiveness.

KNOPP SAID senate is not as effective as it could be because senators are not able to identify the students they represent and are not held accountable for the decisions they make.

"Reapportionment is a good step in the right direction because it gets everybody involved," Knopp said.

"Student senators should also sponsor more legislation than they have in the past," he said. "It would help develop leaders."

Knopp said as student body president he would use his influence and involvement in senate to try to help it be more effective by getting senators out to the people they represent.

Shaw said senate is not as effective as it could be because it does not have the variety of people needed to represent the variety of students at K-State.

"I don't think there is minority or black representation and if there is, the number is always looked at as a quota-type positioning," Shaw said.

SHAW SAID a United Nations situation in senate would bring a conglomeration of people to senate and would help student representation and awareness.

"Quality awareness would bring quality participation," he said.

Thomas said senate could be more effective if it was reapportioned, if elections were held once a year and if it would tackle some of the big problems on campus.

"We need to have more time spent on committee work and more legislation coming out of committees, and have them work on the large problems facing students," Thomas said.

"I see the role of student body as acting as an advisor to student senate, giving input when needed and giving the committees ideas on issues that can be worked on," she said.

WATT SAID senate is not as effective as it should be because senators in leadership positions are not given the opportunity to get involved. He said the reason for that was because the large part of legislation is sponsored by the student body president and the student senate chairman.

"We aren't giving the rookie senators the opportunity to develop and to get involved," Watt said.

"I would like to see the student body president take on the role of a director and be accessible and have information he can give to senators," he said. "It's very much a job of cooperation and working together."

BROWNBACK SAID senate is effective on the problems it has worked on but it has not taken action on the big problems on campus.

"Student Senate has done a good job but has not tackled some of the big problems that hve been around for a long time," he said.

Brownback said the student body president should provide information and initiative on the problems that have been around for a long time but have not been solved.

WORKING TOGETHER

I believe Cindy is the most qualified candidate and with her dedication she will get the job done. For these reasons I encourage you to vote for Cindy Thomas on Wednesday.

Scott Langton

Throughout her career at K-State Cindy has demonstrated a sincere interest and concern for students. Her experience in student government is extensive, yet she has maintained her enthusiasm, and continues to approach problems and their solutions in an objective, innovative, manner. I urge you to support Cindy Thomas for Student Body President.

Stacy Norris

Cindy Thomas is a motivator, and that is exactly what we need in a K-State Student Body President. She's done it in the past by turning organizations she has been involved in to effective governing boards. I urge you to help K-State take a positive step forward by supporting Cindy Thomas for Student Body President.

K-Stater hurt in car accident unable to enter city hospital

By CAROL HOLSTEAD
Collegian Reporter

A K-State student injured last week in a car accident was refused treatment at Memorial Hospital because she is a University student.

Cheryl Blake, freshman in political science, was taken to Memorial Hospital by her mother, Doris Blake. The family resides in St. George, 8 miles east of Manhattan.

"Cheryl is a minor, so I took her into Memorial myself," Mrs. Blake said. "They took her whole medical history and then asked if she was a student at K-State, and I said 'yes'. The nurse told me I had to take her to Lafene then. She is even on our Blue-Cross-Blue Shield plan. The nurse said Memorial would not treat her because the doctors in town have an agreement not to treat students at K-State."

Thomas Faulkner, the administrator for Memorial Hospital, said that the hospital can't treat a patient without a doctor's orders.

"It's not that the hospital can't or won't. We just are not supposed to treat patients unless we have a doctor's orders. If it is a life or death matter, or if a patient requires surgery and is referred by Lafene, we will do it," Faulkner said.

"Many students bypass Lafene completely and come straight to Memorial. If a student comes in with a cold or stomachache, our hands are tied," he said.

COLLEEN KILL, senior in family economics, said she too had been refused treatment at Memorial.

"I had been to Lafene before and they had done nothing for me, so I went to Memorial. They told me that because I was a student, I had to go to Lafene. I said they had to admit me. I was throwing up on the floor and dying of pain. Finally, they did admit me, but only after my father called," Kill said.

Although Mrs. Blake said she had heard of similar situations at St. Mary's Hospital, Dan Broyles, the administrator at St. Mary's said he had no knowledge of them.

"You have to understand that the doctor's do prefer that students go through their own student health center, but if they can't make it to Lafene, we

Senators take up sides on question of need for fieldhouse, referendum

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

A referendum to build a new fieldhouse which will raise full-time student fees $5 will be voted on in Wednesday's election, but some student senators disagree about the need for the facility.

The three-part referendum stresses student input at all levels of planning and use of the facility. It would be used by men and women's basketball, for concerts and for students' personal use.

According to the referendum, student activity fees will be raised $5 per semester for full-time students and $2.50 per semester for part-time students, beginning in the fall of 1979.

The fee increase would double the semester before letting of building contracts. The second increase would not be put into effect until Student Senate was sure the additional funds needed to build the fieldhouse were available.

The referendum states the money collected would not be used for maintenance costs, but to pay off 30-year construction bonds. After the bonds are paid off, the increase will be terminated.

THE REFERENDUM also pledges Student Governing Association (SGA) aid in finding additional funds to build and operate the fieldhouse which would be in use by 1983.

The fee increase will be discontinued if other funds needed are unavailable. The money collected up to that time will be allocated by a second referendum in 1981.

Student leaders are divided in approval for the referendum.

"I think that it's the only way that a fieldhouse can be made a reality. We can't afford the luxury of asking the Board of Regents to build one for us," said Terry Matlack, student body president.

Matlack said it would be a luxury because K-State needs new buildings for academics more than it needs a fieldhouse.

SGA would ask for some help from the Board of Regents, but couldn't ask them to pay for it all, Matlack said.

"There is a lot of difference between asking for $10 million and $3 million," he said.

Matlack said the biggest reason for the new fieldhouse was K-State basketball fans.

"I think we have fan support greater than Ahearn can hold," he said.

MATLACK SAID the quality of the new fieldhouse was important. He explained the problem with concerts held in Ahearn showed the need for a new building.

Richard McClanathan, graduate senator, said he was not in favor of the referendum.

Search for BTK killer turns up no suspects

WICHITA (AP)—Police continued their investigation Sunday into the BTK strangler case as detectives followed up on hundreds of telephone tips about a man who claims to have slain seven persons here since 1974.

"We've had literally hundreds of calls, most from very rational, mature thinking individuals," said Police Chief Richard LaMunyon. "We are running down any information that might be of value to the investigation."

Despite the man calls, LaMunyon said police have no concrete leads or suspects, or even a description of the killer.

On Friday, the chief told of a letter sent to KAKE-TV in Wichita by a man who called himself "the BTK strangler" and claimed to have committed seven slayings in Wichita since 1974 and threatened to kill again.

LaMUNYON said the killer indicated in the letter that BTK stood for "Bind, Torture, Kill."

Six of the seven victims were strangled in their homes, LaMunyon said the letter indicated, and the killer did not disclose the identity of the seventh victim. LaMunyon said the police are not sure who that victim was.

In the letter, BTK complained of the lack of publicity his sixth murder, received and wrote: "One little paragraph would have been enough."

THE BTK strangler began the letter with his fifth murder and challenged the police to determine the victim and the method.

Police said they believe they know who the fifth victim was, but declined to reveal the victim's identity until they are certain.

The author of the letter boasted of killing four members of the Jose Otero family in 1974 and three other victims since.

will treat them first and then call over there," Broyles said.

"Where we see a problem is in Lafene treating not only K-State students, but also their spouses and kids. We think Lafene should treat all of them," Broyles said.

DR. GERALD Mowry, president of the Riley County Medical Association, said that there is no agreement or policy among Manhattan doctors not to treat K-State students.

"We regularly treat K-State students. Your problem is in understanding the insurance policy that students purchase when they enroll at K-State. It is under their contract that they be treated by Lafene," Mowry said.

"The town physicians have enough patients in town without having to worry about 20,000 additional students. The hospitals are the same way," Mowry said.

Although there is no written agreement among Manhattan doctors about not treating K-State students, Broyles said there is more of an "understanding."

"I think the doctors kind of feel like we don't treat K-State students and you (Lafene) don't treat the general public," Broyles said.

ROGER BIRNBAUM, assistant to the director of Lafene, said Lafene has no jurisdiction over which Manhattan doctors or hospitals treat or don't treat.

Birnbaum added that although Lafene can't restrict students to use the on-campus medical facilities exclusively, Lafene prefers students use its services because they have already been paid for.

"No doctor here can tell a Manhattan doctor or hospital not to see K-State students. It would be unethical and it doesn't even stand to reason," Birnbaum said.

"We don't limit anyone to where they can be seen in Manhattan. We don't say you have to be seen here or that you have to be seen there. Students are free and private citizens, and if they wish to go to another hospital, they can—that is if they want to pay their (the hospital's) price," Birnbaum said.

To raise tuition or not to raise tuition; that is arena referendum question

"Basically I do not feel that students should pay for athletic facilities," McClanathan said.

McClanathan said it was too early to vote on this issue without knowing whether the needed state funds would be available, pointing out that if Senator Ross Doyen's proposed cigarette tax passes, there would be no need to raise the fees.

"Anything we can do to hold down or reduce fees, I think we should do," he said.

THE POOR facilities at Ahearn are making it harder for recruiters, which could affect the kind of basketball team K-State has in the future, Walton said.

Richard Stumpf, agriculture senator, doesn't support the referendum because the students haven't had time to make a decision about the fieldhouse.

"I think that it was brought up too fast, that there is still work to be done on it," Stumpf said.

One third of the student body must vote on the referendum for it to be valid. The referendum would be passed by a simple majority.

If not enough students vote, the referendum goes back to Student Senate.

Stumpf said senate is unlikely to pass the referendum if it fails with the students.

"If the students don't show overwhelming support, senate isn't going to pass it," he said.

Slapstick suspect slips up officers

NEW FORT RICHEY, Fla. (AP)—It was almost like something from the Keystone Cops—a policeman locked helplessly in the back seat of a runaway patrol car while a wily robbery suspect hot-tailed it away.

The suspect was allowed to ride in the car's passenger seat after claiming a back-seat ride would make him sick.

When they reached an intersection on the way back to the sheriff's department, the suspect jumped from the front seat. Deputy Charles Leonard, who was driving, grabbed the suspect's clothing and was dragged into the street.

Meanwhile, the cruiser took off with Deputy Dave McDonald locked in back.

The car rolled about 300 feet before it stopped on an iron pipe. Passersby freed the deputy.

The suspect, meanwhile, escaped. Both officers were unhurt.

Stan recognizes that a student body president's first responsibility is to represent the students' views to the administration. It is important to note this distinction.

Too many times student body presidents have difficulties breaking their Student Senate ties and thus never completely fulfill this responsibility.

Stan does not have this problem. He has been involved in a variety of student governing positions. He knows the University structure and he has a good working relationship with those involved in it.

Stocking strangler strikes

COLUMBUS, Ga.—An elderly widow was found dead in her home here Sunday, apparently the sixth victim of a strangler who has been terrorizing women in a fashionable neighborhood in this west Georgia town for the past five months.

The body of Mildred Borom, 78, was discovered by a relative shortly before noon, police said. Officers declined to say whether she had been strangled.

"There are similarities between this case and the previous instances involving elderly women," said Police Chief Curtis McClung. He refused further comment.

Four women were strangled with stockings and sexually molested in the Wynnton area during September and October. A fifth was strangled with a scarf but was not sexually molested in December.

Jet crash kills 40

CRANBROOK, British Columbia—The pilot of a jetliner that crashed in flames killing 40 while trying to land in a snowstorm probably was trying to avoid hitting a snowplow on the runway, officials of Pacific Western Airlines said Sunday.

The twin-engine Pacific Western Boeing 737 overshot the runway, slammed into a snowbank and broke apart Saturday. Seven aboard survived—six passengers and a flight attendant, all seated in the plane's tail section. Two were reported in critical condition Sunday at Cranbrook District Hospital.

Begin says U.S. biased

JERUSALEM—Israel declared Sunday that the United States was "taking sides" in Mideast peace negotiations when Secretary of State Cyrus Vance last week condemned Israeli settlements in occupied Arab lands.

The accusation, contained in an Israeli cabinet resolution, was the sharpest one made so far against Washington by Prime Minister Menachem Begin's eight-month-old conservative government.

The resolution, adopted unanimously at the regular weekly cabinet meeting, was read afterward by Begin to reporters.

His government declared its "regret and protest" over Vance's remarks at a news conference Friday. Vance said Israeli settlements in occupied Arab territories "should not exist" and he supported a Palestinian homeland on land now controlled by Israel.

Coal strike continues

WASHINGTON—The bargaining council of the United Mine Workers union overwhelmingly rejected a proposed settlement of the nationwide coal strike Sunday, ordering President Arnold Miller to commence new negotiations with the soft coal industry.

The action came in the 69th day of the strike, one day after the Carter administration ordered that plans be drawn up for emergency movement of coal to areas running critically short of fuel needed to produce electric power.

Actually, Sunday's action was only a reaffirmation of the council's initial rejection of the three-year pact Friday. At the time, the council conducted a straw vote, in which 33 of 36 members voted against the contract. Because Miller was not present for the session, the vote had to be formalized.

The protracted coal strike by some 160,000 miners—the longest in the nation's history—is threatening some midwestern and Appalachian states with critical fuel shortages.

Immaturity

Saturday's basketball game between K-State and Kansas once again demonstrated how agonizingly immature and childish some students can act.

Several students, thinking it might be fun and impressive to show their prankster prowess, threw various projectiles in the direction of the visiting Jayhawks.

Bananas seemed to be the "in" thing, an obvious insult to one member of the Kansas team who has proven himself to be a solid basketball player.

Several students said they threw bananas because Kansas fans threw hot dogs at a member of the K-State team when they played in Lawrence.

But hot dogs were thrown to stymie a player's ego, not insult his physical appearance. For a school that is known for its hospitality and friendliness, these immature students certainly put a dent in that reputation.

Several distinguished members of the sporting world were at the game, including John Wooden, the dean of American basketball coaches, and Chuck Neinas, commissioner of the Big Eight conference.

And if that were not enough, a state-wide and regional television audience, to say nothing about a state-wide radio audience, listened as the game was halted with 30 seconds remaining to clear the floor of debris.

Among the audience were K-State alumni who frequently donate funds for the betterment of K-State athletics and academics.

It would not be surprising nor wrong for them to reassess their positions concerning donations to a school that has shown, because of several immature students, its incapability of acting as responsible adults.

NOR WOULD it be wrong for the members of the Kansas legislature to think twice about allocating funds for a new fieldhouse. It's obvious some K-State fans are not old enough to use it with class and dignity.

It's not certain if the damage done by this embarrassing incident is irreparable. Certainly it has not advanced K-State's reputation.

And it certainly has not helped K-State attain a new facility, nor will it help athletic teams recruit players.

What is certain is that many loyal K-State fans were hurt, disgusted, embarrassed, disappointed and shamed by several fans who are supposed to be the leaders of tomorrow.

Rebuilding an athletic program is one thing; rebuilding a reputation is another. With any luck, the immature and childish students who threw debris won't be able to get tickets next year.

Valentine's Day memories...

I've got some good news and some bad news. The good news is tomorrow is Valentine's Day. The bad news is today is Feb. 13. Taken with a grain of salt, the best thing about today is there are still five more days to sign up for Credit-No Credit.

Being an investigating-type reporter, I came across a dusty notebook of barely discernable memoirs. The author is a gentleman with whom I have had many years of close personal contact.

For continuity's sake, I went through and picked some of his most memorable Valentine's Days. So in honor of the morrow, the following is a brief account of a typical Midwestern natural kind of guy and his close encounters with the Valentine's Game.

Second grade: Dear diary, "We made some shoe boxes into mail boxes today. Today is the day we

Bring back decent image

Editor,

I was one of many K-State fans truly disappointed by the crowd performance at Saturday's KU-K-State basketball game.

Spirit is one thing—but downright poor sportsmanship, obscenity and indecency is another.

The sad fact is this: one episode on the part of 100 banana-throwers and some obscene banners and cheers can do more to destroy an image than 100 successful judging teams, debate teams or ensembles can do to build a positive image.

I hope we can replace Saturday's nonsense with a new sense of decency, a decency that allows constructive spirit and that is more representative of our student body.

Because of the action on Saturday, we're all going to suffer.

The impression made on thousands of viewers, alumni, legislators, regents and would-be K-State supporters cannot be easily erased.

I hope those of us objecting to these actions stand up and apply peer pressure to try to stop these ridiculous antics.

More than just a ball game was lost on Saturday.

give out Valentines to all our friends. But not Tony. He makes bathroom noises. And Jill is getting a dumb card because she always smiles at me. I hate girls who always do their homework. Mom said I have to give all the girls a Valentine. I'd rather eat broccoli.

"I SAW a picture of Cupid today. I could tell because this little guy was red and fat and naked. When he shoots arrows at two people, they get married. That's stupid. Why don't the arrows kill? If I see that Cupid I'm going to hide in the cloak room.

"Mom bought some candy hearts that have words on them. I counted 33 'True Love,' 42 'Be Mine,' 16 'I'm Yours,' and seven 'Homerun.' Diary, why is a baseball word on a valentines heart..."

Seventh grade: "Dear diary, I went to my locker after geography class and I found two envelopes. Boy was I embarrassed. The guys were waiting for me and I had to stuff those Valentines down my shirt. Good thing no one saw me do it.

"Diary, I finally got a chance to read the messages when I got a restroom pass. One card was from Arlene. She is a pretty funny girl. She always sits in the back with us guys and cracks jokes about Mrs. Atkins and Mr. Newly.

"They are both married but they get pretty friendly in the incubation room. Too bad Arlene weighs 200 pounds.

"THE OTHER card was from Jill. She runs track. Jill is as tall as me and half of her is legs. I wonder why she sent me a card? I don't mind. At least she isn't a sissy. Maybe I'll ask her to shoot some baskets..."

High school junior: "Dear diary, I went to the Valentine's Day dance with Jill. We've been going steady for five years. I think this is love. After all, she opens her mouth when we kiss.

"I really freaked out. At the dance, I saw Arlene for the first time. She didn't look too bad. Looks like she has lost about 50 pounds and got a face transplant. Still, she is pretty hefty..."

College junior: "Dear diary, nothing new this Valentine's Day. Jill and I went to the dance and then came over to my house afterwards and fooled around.

"One wierd thing. I got a Valentine from Arlene. I wonder if she still looks like the Titanic..."

TWO YEARS after college: "Dear diary, It has been a while since you were updated. It seems that things have changed around here. Jill ran off with a track-shoe salesman.

"Remember Arlene? It seems that the old girl took a beauty pill and mixed up a love potion. I don't know what happened but I remember saying 'I do,' and the next thing I remember was a honeymoon with the funniest girl in seventh grade. That was two years ago. I wonder what Jill is doing..."

There is a moral to all of this galactic storytelling "Whatever happens on Valentine's Day, just remember everything will be all right in the morning. Unless you open your mail. Then nothing is guaranteed."

'Sixth man' concept tarnished

Editor,

The student Intercollegiate Athletic Council Representatives, in light of one hundred or so disrespectful fans at last Saturday's KU-K-State basketball game, wish that several things be known.

The "loyal K-State fans" that showed their support for their Cats by tossing bananas and other debris enabled a Midwestern television audience to see the most rude and distasteful incident in K-State basketball history.

The outburst from a tiny minority probably also made it more difficult than it already is for K-State to have another NCAA game televised by NBC.

K-State's fans have always been boisterous and fully supportive of their team and—until now—good judgement has been exercised by K-State fans.

As a result of Saturday, the entire Midwest has been made aware that K-State fans are rude, unruly and lack consideration for the safety of the teams competing, including their own Wildcats.

What is even more disturbing, if that is possible, is the effect of the outburst upon the total crowd.

Everyone in Ahearn might as well have thrown something, because that Midwestern TV audience didn't know the good majority of K-State fans from a minority that borders on the "ugly" side.

People didn't see the totally great K-State fans because the minority of rude ones overshadowed them.

Throwing items at the Kansas bench during the game and at the KU team afterwards (with some obvious intent to injure becoming apparent at times) does not exactly hold to true K-State fans' finest hour.

It becomes most unfortunate that Mike Evans, the greatest scorer ever in the Big Eight, and one who has done so much for K-State basketball, was booed as he made his team's request asking that in keeping with K-State basketball tradition and its integrity, that fans refrain from throwing objects onto the court.

Mike was booed by many of the same people who had decided to "help the Cats" by throwing bananas and other debris onto the court.

This incident not only delayed the game, but dulled the excitement and motivation of both crowd and team as well.

Ask Coach Hartman if he thinks all the bananas, the ensuing rudeness and delay that followed—if all that really helped give K-State a better home court and psychological edge over KU.

That remains doubtful. In fact, this probably hurt our team more than most of you realize.

There were approximately 11,500 students, faculty-staff and public on hand in Ahearn Saturday and all but a tiny minority were there for the intent of being K-State's "sixth man" in the game.

These people were trying to give the Cats a vocal and supportive edge over KU.

Many coaches will say plenty about how the K-State sixth man helps the Wildcats, especially in tight spots.

Maybe Saturday that great K-State sixth man didn't help the Wildcats, but hurt them.

That sixth man, that edge, has been tarnished more than mildly.

Now a minority has decided that K-State basketball, rich in tradition and excellence, is not a big enough showcase in itself, so they decided to provide one.

It turned out to be embarrassing and ugly!

It has been said that K-State fans were "justified" in what happened in Ahearn by the "hotdog incident" that took place at KU.

Well, considering the thoughts that K-Staters hold for our counterparts and their actions at KU, it is hard to figure out why we should put ourselves at their level after they had done a great job of dropping below us, and out of sight.

If we at K-State are better, as we say we are, than let's show it!

Mike Evans mentioned integrity—think about it.

Let's keep the integrity of K-State's sixth man... Coach Hartman, his staff and our Wildcats have earned that much!

All fans will suffer

Editor,

As a long standing K-State student, I always thought that if the Big Eight gave out a good sportsmanship award, K-State would receive it.

Unfortunately, after the conduct displayed in Saturday's game, I feel ashamed that I, as a K-State basketball fan, will be classified right along those who put on such a childish show of behavior.

It's ironic that some devoted fans who waited days to get student tickets would show their loyalty and pride by hurling rotten (potentially harmful) bananas at the KU team.

I, for one, wish to apologize to the players and coaches of both teams for the dispicable actions of some of my fellow K-State basketball fans.

Rivalry marred by rudeness

Editor,

Although I enjoy the KU-K-State rivalry as much as anyone else, I was appalled at the behavior of the K-State fans at the game Saturday.

Throwing bananas out on the floor delayed the start of the game while the clean-up was made.

During the game, the banana-tossing destroyed the momentum and concentration of both teams.

Some of the signs displayed were in poor taste. You students who had "— you KU" on the back of your T-shirts—did you know there were gradeschool children sitting behind you?

There is nothing wrong with a good-natured rivalry but does it have to be marred by rudeness and outright vulgarity?

I worry about the impression K-State made on the television audience, recruits and John Wooden. There is only one home game left. Let's close out the season with a hospitable crowd.

Price increase hits dorms, $80 hike to strike next fall

The minimum wage increase and rising costs of repairs and equipment will raise the cost of living at K-State residence halls $80 a year beginning next fall.

Each of the eight rental payments will increase $10 making the total cost of rent for two semesters $1,304, according to Jean Riggs, assistant director of housing.

The price does not include telephone rent which is presently $30 for two semesters and expected to increase.

"Minimum wage went up from $2.30 to 2.65 the first of January," Riggs said. "Since we hire close to 500 students, the rise in minimum wage is costing us."

BESIDES the cost of labor increasing, the costs of repair parts and equipment has tripled in the last few years, Riggs said.

"Everything is going up. We have no other income besides what is paid by hall residents — we get no state subsidies and we have to break even."

There may be a cut-back in labor hired, but Riggs said she hopes there won't be any services cut.

Food costs are increasing six to eight percent a year. Riggs said factors such as the rising costs of transportation and labor are contributing to the higher food prices.

"We lose money when students waste food, there is no big loss but it's still losing money," she said. "We do wish students would take what they eat so there is less food wasted."

Riggs said she doesn't expect fewer people to live in dorms next school year because of the increase in rent.

"I don't think our costs will go up as much as the cost of living outside the dorms," she said.

Oil-rich Shetland Islanders may withdraw from Scotland

LONDON (AP)—The 20,000 people of the remote Shetland Islands, thrust from economic obscurity by the North Sea oil bonanza, are to decide in a unique referendum whether to remain part of Scotland when the British northern region gets limited home rule.

The referendum, scheduled to start by postal ballot Feb. 21, is disrupting progress of Scottish home rule legislation, Britain's most fundamental constitutional change in five centuries, which is expected to become law by the fall.

It has also alarmed Prime Minister James Callaghan. He is expected to visit the tiny, windswept archipelago soon to warn islanders of the dangers of going it alone. Many Shetlanders fear a semi-independent Scotland will grab their newly developed oil wealth.

The local authority for the Shetlands, 100 miles off the Scottish coast and the northernmost part of Britain, says referendum results will be announced March 16 in Lerwick, the islands' picturesque capital.

FOR CENTURIES the islanders, descendants of eighth century Viking raiders, have gleaned a living from fishing and sharecropping. In the next 20-30 years North Sea oil, discovered off their shores six years ago, is expected to earn the islands at least $190 million.

If the Shetlands opt out of devolution, as partial home rule for Scotland is known, anti-Scotland campaigners may seek some form of semi-autonomous or dominion status for the archipelago.

The islanders appears to be split more or less evenly on the constitutional issue.

Proponents of a breakaway, who include most members of the Shetland Island Council, worry that the proposed Edinburgh Assembly—expected to be dominated by Scottish nationalists—will use the Shetland's oil wealth to help economically depressed western Scotland.

More conservative islanders maintain they cannot afford to sever their 500-year old link with Scotland because the oil will eventually run out.

The British Parliament sanctioned the unprecedented referendum last month when the Shetland deputy, former leader of the small Liberal Party, Jo Grimond, cleverly steered through an amendment to the Scotland Bill despite opposition from the minority Labor Party government.

FONE seeks funds from community

By BRUCE DONLEY
Collegian Reporter

The FONE may soon be receiving additional funding from off-campus organizations, according to Jim Bartlett, director of the FONE.

"We're going to find community funding one way or another," Bartlett said. "We're trying to expand to become not just a campus service, but a community service as well."

"We're going to ask that the students maintain their share of it. After all, they are 70 percent of our calls," he said.

The FONE has discussed with the North Central Kansas Guidance Center the possibility of receiving funds from the center. However, no decision has been made, according to Bartlett.

ACCORDING TO Allen Davis, director of the center, any speculation on a final agreement would be premature.

"There is quite a lot of interest on my part," Davis said, "but we need more opportunity to discuss it, then it has to go through our board for a decision."

"There will be future meetings," he added, "but I think it would be premature to talk about it at this point."

A meeting between Bartlett and the center's board of directors has been set for March 20.

Currently, the FONE is dependent upon the Student Governing Association (SGA) for funds.

"I think in the long run we'd start expecting less and less," Bartlett said, regarding SGA allocations to the FONE.

"But we're going to ask for an increase as if we weren't going to get the North Central thing because it's not finalized yet," he said.

BARTLETT said he believes a gradual transition to increased community funding would save SGA a little money now and a lot more in the future.

The Guidance Center plans to incorporate plans to incorporate a 24-hour crisis line into its program, Bartlett explained. It would install an extra telephone in the FONE's office and FONE personnel would answer the line during the 12-hour night shift.

"The two services would be distinct," Bartlett said.

"It should be the goal of the FONE to eventually expand to the level of servicing the campus and the Manhattan community as one larger community," Bartlett said.

Rough surf changes beach into lobster feed free-for-all

BOSTON (AP)—As things return to normal after last week's vicious Northeast storm, a tale of an epic lobster feast is being told in some of the towns along Massachusetts' South Shore.

Last Wednesday, with the lights still out after the storm subsided, Bartlett Webber took a couple of buckets to his neighborhood beach in Marshfield, some 40 miles south of Boston, hoping to find sea clams washed ashore by the storm.

He was amazed to find thousands of lobsters instead.

"There were 50 to 75 people all over the beach, filling their jackets, pails, everything they could think of with lobsters," he said.

Lobsters—which now sell for $4 to $5 a pound—usually stay a few hundred yards off the shore, and the rough surf of the storm evidently carried many small, light ones to the beaches of a number of towns along the shore.

Thousands not gathered by beachcombers died.

The presence of so many lobsters on the beaches prompted state officials to warn beachcombers not to pick up any unless they were certain they were alive. Lobsters must be cooked while still alive, and eating dead lobsters, even after cooking them, can be fatal.

SO, WHILE many other residents slept in shelters because their homes had been flooded or leveled, Webber, his wife Kathy and their neighbors had a lobster party.

They had no lights or electricity.

So they lit candles, poured wine and cooked pot after pot of lobsters on their gas stove.

A couple of miles away in Hull, Paul Reale, who was out for a walk on the beach, spotted about ten people huddled around a fire, also cooking lobsters. Someone was stirring the kettle with a hockey stick. A woman cradled a wounded seagull in her lap.

Reale was invited to join the strangers and learned that one of them, house painter James Corcoran, would be feasting on lobster only a few yards from the rubble of his home.

Webber, a teacher who fished for lobsters in more conventional ways as a boy, sums it up as "astounding, but somewhat tragic."

"Just the idea of all sizes of them laying helplessly along the beach. I didn't feel as if I should really take advantage of it, but they would have died anyway."

Winter takes toll on roses; prices up

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP)—If you're planning to "say it with flowers" on Valentine's Day, you'd better count your words carefully.

That's the advice of western New York florists, who say the harsh winter has taken its toll on the rose industry.

"We have had a very, very dark winter," said Charles White of Medina, whose 12,000 roses have not had enough light because of the bad weather. He says the problem is a national one.

Most upstate florists buy from White or from wholesalers in New Hampshire or California, and those areas are also having problems with this year's crop, White said.

"Very scarce, very hard to get—and getting very expensive," said Shirley Bowden of Queen City Florist in Snyder.

But Andrew Galley, proprietor of Galley Florist in Buffalo, said romanticists can still use roses to express their feelings.

"There's just as much beauty in a small number of roses," he said.

Dear OFF CAMPUS Students,

In campaigning for the office of Student Body President I am concerned with your needs and wants. One plan of mine, for you, is working towards voluntary payment of student health fees, so that those of you who do not use this service would not be burdened with the payment.

I urge you to vote for me on Wed., so that your wishes can become working programs.

ERA advocates still battling to meet ratification deadline

WASHINGTON (AP)—Supporters of the Equal Rights Amendment are looking for a psychological lift following setbacks in South Carolina and Virginia, while opponents are hoping they can stall the ratification process for another year.

Six years after Congress approved the ERA, the amendment is still three states short of the 38 needed for ratification. And with the March 22, 1979, expiration date little more than a year away, the opponents believe time is on their side.

Thirty-five states have approved the amendment since 1972, when it cleared Congress. Idaho, Tennessee and Nebraska have sought to rescind their ratification votes, but the Justice Department has said that rescissions are not binding.

SUPPORTERS of the ERA are conceding they have been disheartened by the developments in South Carolina and Virginia last week. But they are regrouping and vowing to work for the defeat of elected officials who voted against the ERA.

The years-long battle involves a simply-worded proposal which reads: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

So emotional is the issue that two pro-ERA women were arrested after staging a sit-down protest of the actions of a committee in the Virginia House of Delegates, which refused to send the ERA to the House floor. The ERA was defeated, 25-20, in the South Carolina Senate.

AND IN the Kentucky House, a furor arose over the distribution of graphic literature purporting to show that ratification of the amendment would bestow new rights on lesbians. Kentucky ratified the ERA in 1972 and attempts in the last two legislative sessions to rescind were revived this session, but have not met with success.

Proponents of ERA, undaunted by the refusal of the legislatures in the two Southern states to ratify the amendment, say they hope to lay the foundation for pro-amendment activity in other legislatures later this year and in early 1979.

Because of parliamentary procedures and scheduling, however, there won't be many opportunities to vote on the question this year. A vote is likely only in Illinois, where the House last June fell six votes short of the three-fifths majority needed to pass the amendment.

Votes on ERA are likely early next year in Oklahoma, Florida, North Carolina and possible in Arizona, Nevada and Missouri.

Trudeau may call for election; government popularity drops

OTTAWA (AP)—Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, his popularity waning because of Canada's economic and political woes, may call an election by summer before his government loses more popular support.

Trudeau's Liberal Party government is in trouble. According to Gallup polls for 1977, public backing of the Liberals crested at 51 percent in June but dropped to 42 per cent in December, when the last sampling was taken.

By law, Trudeau need not call an election for the 282-seat House of Commons until 1979. But Liberal leaders believe their fortunes could grow worse with time and say they expect a June election.

Inflation and unemployment, the question of separatism posed by the Parti Quebecois in Quebec and a recent wave of embarrassing revelations are dominating the Canadian political scene in 1978.

The prime minister's hand was strengthened last week by his government's disclosure of an alleged Soviet spy ring and the expulsion of 13 Russian diplomats. The action was greeted with cheers by the public and press and even Joe Clark, leader of the opposition Conservative Party, praised "a job well done."

Trudeau has indicated he would not call an election until his popularity increased. Buoyed by the spy success, Trudeau jokingly offered to resign Friday and bring on the election.

Sleepy town jolts into 19th century, shuts electricity off in price protest

WESTWOOD, Calif. (AP)—This is the week lights, heaters and everything else electrical shuts down in this sleepy, snowy lumber town. And most of the 1,800 townspeople are looking forward to going backward.

Angered by rising costs for electricity, the folk of this northeastern California town welcome returning, in part, to 19th century living.

"People will miss their TV sets the most," said Pauline Asmus, a craft shop owner and mother of six. "It's the only source of entertainment here."

"But we won't be in misery. We'll be talking to each other, playing games and doing the sort of things we did to entertain ourselves when I was a kid."

Residents organized the self-inflicted outage, claiming electric bills from the California-Pacific Utilities Co. have tripled during the last year. In some cases, power bills have exceeded house payments, they claim.

CAMP STOVES, flashlight

batteries and candles have been big sellers in local stores, and residents are dusting off old kerosene lamps and gathering extra supplies of wood.

Asmus said her monthly electric bill climbed from $30 to $75 during the last year. One store owner said his bill went from $400 to $1,500.

"We are not fooling ourselves that turning off the power is going to have any impact on the company," said Asmus. "But perhaps it will be an embarrassment and will show them that if we can do it for one week maybe we can do it longer."

The utility company is anguished about the plan.

"It's a terrible situation and I'm really unhappy about it," said executive vice president Bradley Bunnin.

"I wish there was some way I could make things better overnight. But it is a general dilemma caused by everything that has made our costs go up and our inability to absorb them."

But some residents, faced with turning off electric heaters in the middle of winter, look toward the coming week happily.

"We're going to learn how to talk to each other again," said Paulette Benner, a carpet store owner. "It's almost going to be fun."

Guest speakers, discussions on Ag Awareness Day slate

Guest speakers and group discussions will highlight Agriculture Awareness Day Friday in the K-State Union.

"We want people to know what is going on in agriculture" said Alan MacRunnels, a graduate student in sociology who is helping to coordinate the day.

MacRunnels said it would be fitting to have the agriculture day on the 17th because K-State was founded on Feb. 16, 1863.

"It's the 115th anniversary and since we are a land grant institution, we think that it should be special," he said.

MacRunnels said members of the sociology department are putting the program together because they believe they are more concerned with people, whereas the agriculture department is more oriented towards "production and profit."

CORNELIA FLORA, sociology professor and head of the Population Research Laboratory, will present a resolution to Faculty Senate which would result in teachers taking time to discuss agricultural issues in their classes Friday.

Tables will be set up by various farm groups such as the Farmer's Union and National Farm Organization at the Union.

There will be a panel discussion in the Little Theatre at 10:30 a.m. moderated by Paul DeWeese of KSAC radio. At 2:30 p.m., Jim Kramer, the state spokesman for the Agricultural Awareness Movement will give a talk in Forum Hall to be followed by a question-answer session.

The day's activities will start at 9 a.m. with a musical program in the courtyard followed by a social hour with coffee and doughnuts at 9:30 a.m.

Soapbox: Candidates for Student S

College of Agriculture

Tim Bearnese

Yes, I feel that this measure will show student backing for a new fieldhouse without causing a drastic increase in fees.

In the short run, I believe that the shuttle bus would help. In the long run, new parking pots or a parking garage should be considered.

Yes, but it is feasible that better student representation could be obtained. Therefore, reapportionment should be carefully studied as a possible improvement.

Tim Chilen

If we don't start funding a fieldhouse, it would go on the building priority list. Then it's doubtful the legislature could consider it for 10 years.

Appoint a committee to draft proposals investigating the possibilities of limited permits, redesign or construction of lots, or a combination of any worthwhile solutions.

The only students poorly represented are new ones living off campus, particularly freshmen. SGA should find a way to listen to and help them also.

E. J. Compton

As a senator up for re-election, I feel the referendum hasn't been adequately studied. Why build a fieldhouse until we're sure it's needed?

The most feasible solution is to encourage individuals to walk or ride bicycles to campus and discourage students from bringing cars to school.

I believe senators do, but there is a need for improvement. An organized effort to regenerate the senate's visitation program is definitely needed.

Mark Frasier

The referendum is not ideal, but at least it is a start. The sooner we act, the sooner we will have a new facility.

To supply the parking needs of K-State, we should develop storage lots closer to residence halls and make available more spaces on campus.

Lack of communication has severely limited the effectiveness of senate. Students and senators are equally responsible for expressing their views to one another.

Jay Selanders

The referendum being put before the students is a workable and fair one. One thing I might add would be a users tax to put more of the responsibility on those who actually use the facility.

More efficient use of available parking, distributing permits on the basis of need, and a shuttle bus are all possible solutions that need quick and honest consideration.

Student Senate has done a good job of representing the student body, but through honest involvement and dedication, senate can become a more efficient and well-respected representative of K-State students.

Alan Sobba

Alan Sobba

Yes, K-State needs a new fieldhouse. Academics and athletics are strongly interrelated. This referendum seems fair and shows the state and alumni that the students are concerned about the future and are willing to take the initiative.

Make an indepth study of the feasibility of a shuttle bus system; Push for the parking north of Weber and possibly the lot north of Haymaker; encourage the use of bicycles.

Yes, to a degree. I'm optimistic. Student Senate is designed to voice the students' views through a selected group. It takes everyone's input to effectively represent the K-State student body.

College of Arts and Sciences

Helen Burtis

I believe students should support a new fieldhouse. We need a multi-purpose facility and to obtain it we need to make a commitment now.

If commuter traffic trends continue, the answer may lie in an aesthetically pleasing multi-level parking lot. Parking space for long term storage should be increased.

Most student senators try to be representative, yet many times they don't succeed. Senators should make greater efforts to communicate with those students that elect them.

Stacy Cope

The fieldhouse referendum is a definite must if we want a new fieldhouse. Someone has to take the first initiative, why not us?

First of all, the amount of cars on campus must be reduced. We should look into the possibility of a bus shuttle.

Student Senate does represent the student body effectively but more publication of what the senate is doing is needed to arouse student interest.

Dana Foster

I support this referendum. For once, we would have a fee increase that is really worthwhile. We must make the first move in order to wake the alumni and state government up.

I don't have a handy-dandy solution. I would be willing to work on a long range solution. I am against an increase in parking permit fees simply because it won't solve anything.

Generally, I think it has. However, I think it needs to actively seek out student opinions in the future, especially when it considers raising student fees.

Richard Hagen

Fee increases should never be added to student financial problems unless absolutely necessary. However, this university needs a new fieldhouse. I'd support it.

Curing all ills concerning parking is practically impossible. A shuttle system or a lot at Weber would help, but other problems would continually arise.

I believe Student Senate is extremely effective in representing the student body. The programs it initiates are invaluable to the smooth operation of K-State.

Martin McClaskey

Yes, if commitments from other sources are secured and it is large enough for 1979 students to be able to enjoy it after they graduate.

Development of more short-term parking spaces and requiring students who live within four blocks of campus to use alternative transportation to get to school.

To a certain extent, yes, but to improve there must be more input from students and more output from senators. Reapportionment is not a panacea.

Greg Musil

Strong athletic and academic programs are interrelated. A new fieldhouse is needed and this referendum allows the students to take the initiative.

A strong effort must be made to answer this annual question. Temporary lots are only temporary solutions. A shuttle bus system seems most appropriate and achievable.

Although Student Senate is often believed to be more talk than action, it has generally done a good job in representing and responding to students.

Eric Rosenblad

We may want a new fieldhouse, but I don't support taxing students before they are assured that their money will be augmented with funds by the state, etc.

A lot behind Weber can start to ease problems, as well as better use of current lots such as the situation in the West Stadium lot.

Those students who want to be represented are the ones who get out and vote. The Student Senate has effectively represented those students.

College of Business

Steve Anderson

I support this referendum, for it exemplifies the interest of the student, and the amount that each student pays is minimal for what they will be receiving.

Parking is a problem as we all know. A federally financed shuttle bus service is one alternative, but not the only one; as several should be considered.

Student Senators could more effectively represent the student body through reapportionment. I would allow the students to be represented by both living group and by college.

David Hawkins

We as students need to support the new fieldhouse by voting for this referendum so that alumni and others will be more inclined to support it also.

I see no immediate solution to our parking problem. We do need

Candidates for student to the following question to seriously look at all practical proposals to solve this problem.

State student body?

I think Student Senate effectively represents the student body. The senators are conscious of all students regardless of their living group.

Rich Macha

We need a new fieldhouse at K-State. This proposal will produce an incentive for the alumni and legislators to allocate the remaining costs.

Before we can have a solution, the administration needs to realize their responsibility to provide ample student parking. I will strive to do this.

Senate has been effective, but it could be more effective if senators were more responsive, more representative and more accountable to the students.

Bill Manning

As students of K-State we have to make a future commitment. We must take the initiative and support the fieldhouse referendum.

Off-campus storage lots and the shuttle bus service are feasible solutions to the parking problem.

Yes, but I would like to see greater student contact through senate visitation of living groups and other organizations on campus.

Duane Webber

We definitely need a larger fieldhouse. I support the fieldhouse referendum, assuming that the senate will actively pursue funds from other sources in the coming year.

We should fully utilize the less convenient West Stadium lot, increase the short-term parking at the Union, and then re-evaluate the need for a long range proposal.

The senate has "accidentally" accomplished some student goals, without the benefit of direct contact. I feel that increased communication would enhance the effectiveness of student representatives.

Paul Winterman

Yes. For K-State to get a new fieldhouse the students must start the ball rolling. The referendum does this and immediately limits the student's financial involvement.

Many solutions have been suggested, but it's time the administration came up with some ideas instead of just leaving the problem for us to solve.

Senate has done an adequate job as a representative body. But, if students would voice their opinion more often, senate would be able to do a better job.

College of Education

Tim
Phares

Yes, I would definitely support the fieldhouse referendum. I realize, of course, that we all don't want additional fees, yet this is an exceptional issue.

The issue of parking is complex and would require a number of possible solutions such as shuttle buses and garages to alleviate the problem permanently.

No, they haven't. Representation is weak for those in residence halls. I do not feel they have been adequately represented.

College of Engineering

The students need to make the first move for a new fieldhouse. My concern is keeping tabs on this money if a fieldhouse isn't built, otherwise, I support it.

Students need to utilize the parking facilities which are available. However, a serious study and reorganization of current parking must begin as soon as possible.

I personally feel Student Senate needs to be more open. Students get tired of hearing what's going on through rumors. Let's support whoever is elected.

Pam Nicklaus

I am in favor of the fieldhouse referendum. This proposal will give K-State time to see how much alumni and the state legislature are willing to give and yet show the alumni and legislature we as students are willing to take an affirmative action.

There are no simple solutions to the parking problems. I propose to use the $20,000 available to look into the feasibility of a shuttle bus.

I believe senators should make a positive effort to get information back to the students, encourage students to run for office, (a goal of senate this year), and to get involved in senate committees.

Roger Seymour

No
photo
available

Yes. I definitely support the fieldhouse referendum. A new fieldhouse can only enhance the prestige of our teams and ultimately the university.

More efficient and better organized lots are the ultimate solution. However, for immediate relief I would suggest that permits be issued on a priority basis, i.e., handicapped students, distance from campus, etc.

No. That is the reason I am running. I feel that a senator should represent the entire student body, not just the select minority who selects them.

Tim Strobel

I support the fieldhouse referendum because I feel a new fieldhouse would benefit the basketball recruiting as well as generate greater alumni support. It also shows the alumni and state that the students are serious about building a new fieldhouse, therefore this referendum is essential.

The student task force has some good recommendations which I feel would be feasible solutions. The daytime parking lots could be more efficiently used with compact car lots in existing lots and by promoting special car pooling permits.

I feel the senate represents the students effectively. They are coming up with workable solution to the parking problem and represent the students' concerns in the construction of the Rec Complex.

Graduate School

Jeff Labahn

I am basically opposed to the fieldhouse referendum because of the additional incremental fee increases that would be incurred by the student. Present lack of commitment by the state and the need to upgrade existing campus facilities are key considerations.

An alternative approach to the parking problem involves creating a more attractive environment for pedestrian and cyclic activity. Providing better controlled pedestrian crosswalks and giving continued support to the bikeway system should be priority items.

The overall effectiveness of Student Senate should be judged both by the quality of decision-making occurring within the Student Senate and also by the responsibility of the student body to provide essential input.

College of Home Economics

Wes Babcock

We do need a new fieldhouse, but we just started paying for the Rec Complex. If we need anything, it's better classrooms. Academic needs should be at the top of the list.

I think we may have enough parking if people were willing to walk a bit after they parked their cars. I don't see any feasible solutions as yet.

Being on senate I really can't answer that. I feel I've done a good job representing my constituents. The student populace should be the ones to answer this.

Board of Student Publications

Ronald Dickens

I have been a member of the Manhattan Mercury staff for two and a half years and a member of the Board of Student Publications this past year.

I believe my background allows me to look closely at what qualities an editor must have without getting mixed up in personalities.

We have also taken steps to modernize the Collegian newsroom, but much more needs to be done. Further modernizations is necessary and the Royal Purple needs must also be met.

Anthony Seals

I have elected to run for the Board of Student Publications because I believe with my experience, background and exposure to some of the many different student entities on campus, my input will further enhance the progress of the two student publications.

I also believe my input will be valuable in selecting the editor and in making sure that he or she will be the best one to uphold the responsibilities of the position.

Tom Tuckwood

My reason for running for the board is simple. First I don't like idle complaints. I would like to take an active role in giving constructive criticism where I can and advice where it's needed.

I would also be quick to give compliments on things well done. As for qualifications, I am a senior in JMC and have had experience in Student Senate and working closely with university faculty and administration.

Deb Williams

As a junior in agricultural journalism, I feel that I have a perspective into both what the students want and need in a newspaper and also into how a newspaper is run.

Through working with publications as a member of the College of Agriculture Board of Student Publications, I have had experience with budgets and other aspects of the position.

I want to make the publications put out by the students at K-State high quality and respected parts of the university.

Ron Wilson

As a past student senator and orientation leader, I've had experiences beyond a background in journalism. Here at K-State I've had some training in journalism, won a state newswriting award, and been published in campus and state-wide magazines. Currently employed parttime in news and communications, I advocate a free and responsible campus press.

The following students are listed as candidates but did not submit statements to the Collegian.

College of Arts and Sciences: Crystal Chubb.
College of Arts and Sciences: Micah Ross.

K-State student government elections for student body president, student senate, Board of Student Publications and a student referendum calling for an increase in student fees to raise money for a new fieldhouse will be held Wednesday, Feb. 15.

Polls will be located in the K-State Union and in the main lobby of Farrell Library.

Polls will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

Buddy's rich sounds cap off festival

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

Buddy Rich and his band finished off the weekend's jazz festival in grand fashion Sunday night as they played to a half-filled house at McCain Auditorium. The 15-member band played for almost two hours to a very satisfied audience.

Each member of the band showed himself to be quite a musician as they worked their way through several brief numbers during the first half of the show.

During the second half, the band began to explore a little more, and the cuts became longer and the solos more interesting. Especially memorable were a fine sax solo and Rich's drum solo finale. Both brought the crowd to its feet.

RICH IS well-known for his brilliance as a drummer, but never does he allow the performance to become merely Buddy Rich and 14 nobodies. This is a band that plays well together, and as an entire unit, each member contributes greatly to the show.

Besides Rich, the band includes a piano and electric bass in addition to a 12-man horn section. At various times during the show, several members of the horn section also played numerous percussion instruments.

As the band moved through each selection, it changed style and mood with ease. Most of the music was traditional jazz, done in the band's professional yet casual style.

RICH KEEPS a fairly low profile during most of the show, allowing his technique to speak for him. He makes drumming look like child's play—it seems to come so easily to him, and you can sense how much fun he is having.

Rich has a style that's almost unparalleled. While there are probably several drummers who can beat on drums as fast as he can, it's doubtful that anyone can equal his touch with the cymbals. They provided a show by themselves, as he made a few cymbals sound like an entire symphony.

McCain's acoustics were great as always for the performance, and the show was every bit as good, from beginning to end.

If you've already missed Buddy Rich and company and an entire weekend of jazz, be sure to catch him on his next trip through. He's a fantastic drummer, with unequalled technique and an excellent band as well.

THE PARTY'S OVER.

All too often, when the party ends, the trouble begins.

People who shouldn't be doing anything more active than going to sleep are driving a car. Speeding and weaving their way to death.

Before any of your friends drive home from your party, make sure they aren't drunk.

Don't be fooled because they drank only beer or wine. Beer and wine can be just as intoxicating as mixed drinks.

And don't kid yourself because they may have had some black coffee. Black coffee can't sober them up well enough to drive.

FRIENDS DON'T LET FRIENDS DRIVE DRUNK.

If someone gets too drunk to drive, drive him yourself. Or call a cab. Or offer to let him sleep over.

Maybe your friend won't be feeling so good on the morning after, but you're going to feel terrific.

A TASTE OF MIME . . . Tim Settimi, a bundle of energy in the form of a comedian-musician-whiteface mime, expresses some not-so-tongue-in-cheek humor at an informal mime workshop Friday at Ahearn Field House.

A quiet evening with Tim Settimi; master of mime has a lot to say

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Arts Editor

The silence was overpowering, but the message was deafening. Mime Tim Settimi has a lot to say—in his own special way.

Settimi, a one man performing arts company, layed out a myriad of skills for dinner theater audiences Friday and Saturday nights in the Union Catskeller.

Collegian Review

Entitled "A Quiet Evening With Tim Settimi", the act more than made up for a dinner including salad tasting like the inside of a refrigerator and strawberry chiffon a la red dye no. 2.

Beginning the performance with flute, guitar and piano pieces competing with the clink of silverware, Settimi proved his competence as a musician as well as a mime.

"I can't get serious about singing," Settimi said to the indigestion-plagued audience, "because I always have my tongue in my cheek."

DINNER done (and overdone), Settimi snared the attention of the audience with several humorous folk songs. After changing the tempo from light and comical to serene, Settimi left to don his white face, finishing on a particularly beautiful ballad.

Once on stage, greasepaint intact, Settimi explained what mime was all about, without uttering a word.

Mime gets the message across where words fail. A picture may well be worth a thousand words, but in this case, a motion is worth a million.

One piece, entitled "Origins," depicted man and the earth from its meanest beginnings. Aided by pastel spotlights, Settimi turned his hands into a flock of birds, casting multiple shadows on the screen behind him.

THE HIGHLIGHT of the evening came, however, in the form of a skit dedicated to Messrs. George Gershwin and Charlie Chaplin, entitled "City—A Day in the Life." Choreographing motion to sound, Settimi brought together the essence of "nine-to-five" to Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

Dessert came in the form of improvisations, demanded by an enthusiastic audience. After calling for topics to work upon, Settimi conjured up a waterbed and the scenes one might encounter at a carnival. Even in the improvisations, the impact of the unique endings to his skits held true. Throughout the performance, the final motion seemed to bring the entirety of the message to light.

Why a mime?

"Because people pay very close attention to what a mime is saying," Settimi said.

He was not being facetious.

TRIM TIME . . . Mike Bradshaw, director of health education at Lafene Health Center, checks the weight of one of his students in the health center's weight-reduction class.

Weight loss classes stress nutrition, behavior, calories

Weight reduction classes held at Lafene Health Center use nutrition education, behavior modification and the calorie point system to help students lose weight.

"The program is designed for students at least 10 pounds overweight to lose one to two pounds a week," said Martha Olson, dietician at Lafene and the class instructor.

Students often don't understand or realize the importance of eating a well-balanced diet, Olson said.

"If students can learn to choose food for its nutritive value and change their eating behaviors they will lose weight," she said.

THE WEEKLY sessions include a weigh-in, a short discussion about dieting and a question and answer period. There are three sessions during the semester. Two sessions are held for people who want to lose 10 pounds or more and one session for those who are 25 pounds or more overweight.

"The purpose of the use of behavior modification is to help recognize problem areas in eating," she said.

Through successive shaping techniques, students can learn to identify their dietary patterns and change their eating habits.

The calorie point system is also being used in the dining halls on campus.

"You're counting calories, using smaller numbers so it's easier to keep track of (the calories)," Olson said.

Rhodesian life continues on guerilla war front lines

EDITOR'S NOTE—Soldiers are fighting guerrillas and rebels in the wars of Africa, in jungle and desert. But the effects of the mini-wars are reaching the people back home. In these dispatches, Associated Press correspondents in Rhodesia and Somalia tell how war has changed the lives of people at home in a Tale of Three Cities.

UMTALI, Rhodesia (AP)—This army garrison town, its 46,000 people at the frontline of a 5-year-old guerrilla war, is a revealing microcosm of a country at war.

Mud-splattered troop carriers trundle through wide tree-lined streets, originally built broad to allow early settlers to turn around their ox wagons.

Hotels, once crowded with tourists visiting the nearby Vumba Mountains, now are filled with young black and white Rhodesian army soldiers in camouflage uniforms.

THE WINDOWS of shops and offices along Main Street are crisscrossed with adhesive tape—a precaution against flying glass which civil defense experts say causes four-fifths of the casualties in rocket or mortar attacks launched by black guerrillas seeking to topple the white-minority government in Rhodesia.

Real estate agents, reporting a steady exodus of whites, have hundreds of offices, apartments and houses to sell and rent.

Umtali, 150 miles southeast of the capital, Salisbury, is administrative headquarters for Rhodesia's eastern mountain districts—a rich, fertile land of coffee and tea plantations, vast forests and scattered orchards and market gardens.

Exported produce from the area has earned millions of dollars in foreign exchange, vital to a country spending $800,000 a day on the war. The vegetable and fruit farms also make it a veritable breadbasket for this country of seven million people.

UTAMLI is a only few miles from Mozambique, from which most guerrilla offensives into Rhodesia are launched. It has been shelled by rockets and mortars twice from across the frontier in the last 18 months.

"Skilled workers do not want to come here because their wives are reluctant as they fear the security situation," said John Pitt, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

Somalians stiffen their upper lips in efforts to resist Ethiopian war

HARGEISA, Somalia (AP)—Hussein Omar, a 36-year-old teacher, stood in the rubble-strewn courtyard of the primary school here, where an Ethiopian rocket killed four children, two teachers and wounded a score of others in December.

"I was sitting there in the corner on my mat when the rocket fell," he said. "It was dreadful."

"The children! Their limbs were all over the place. Screaming! All of a sudden women were screaming and children crying."

"It was unfortunate for the Ethiopians to attack and do this here, but we will resist. We won't run away. This is our home."

THAT ATTITUDE is typical of the residents of Hargeisa, a city of some 80,000 in northern Somalia, about 130 miles east of the Ogaden battlefield inside neighboring Ethiopia.

It is Somalia's second largest city and thought to be a possible staging point for Somali supplies destined for insurgents fighting in the six-month-old war. It is also along the route which Somalia claims Ethiopian troops will take to invade the country.

Since the Ogaden war between Somali-backed forces and Ethiopian troops erupted in mid-July, residents say Hargeisa has been bombed four times by Ethiopia's air force, but daily life appears to have changed little.

There are no blackouts in the city, city streets are filled with people during daylight and evening hours and there is a noticeable lack of uniformed soldiers on the streets.

But on one night recently wounded soldiers were being loaded onto Somali air force planes at the airport here.

Somalia has acknowledged it sends supplies to the ethnic Somali rebels fighting in the Ogaden under the banner of the Western Somali Liberation Front. This weekend Somalia disclosed it also was sending troops to back the rebels.

IN MOGADISHU, capital of Somalia, the war in Ethiopia's Ogaden region is a long way off. Still, Western diplomats say the most notable effect of Somalia's support for the rebels has been a marked increase in prices for consumer goods—as much as 300 percent for some items.

A kilo (2.2 pounds) of sugar, which once sold for the equivalent of about 75 cents now commands about a dollar. Vegetables have increased threefold in price and bottled cooking gas is practically impossible to get, driving up the cost of charcoal.

"The prices are very bad now," a taxi driver said. "Everything is too expensive, but we must help with the war."

... it seems like a student never comes up with enough money to cover school expenses and have anything left over to just enjoy. If you're one of those people who has to spend too much study time earning school money, read on. Air Force ROTC offers a four, three or two-year scholarship for those who can qualify. The plan pays $100 a month for expenses, plus all tuition, book costs and lab fees.

While you're working on your degree, you're also working toward a commission in the Air Force. After graduation and commissioning, you'll enter active duty, and discover a whole new world.

You'll find challenge, responsibility, a demand for your talents, and a high regard for what you're contributing. There's more. As an officer in the Air Force you'll have an excellent salary with a full slate of benefits. Look into AFROTC scholarships. And while you're at it ask about the Air Force way of life. Organized crime furnishes illegal aliens for U.S. jobs

WASHINGTON (AP)—Smuggling rings operating "almost like travel agencies" are supplying illegal aliens to work in U.S. industries, Immigration Commissioner Leonel Castillo said.

"We don't know if it flows to the Mafia, but it is very clearly organized criminal groups," Castillo said in a copyright interview with U.S. News & World Report, released Sunday.

"There are great big operations," he said. "They have an office in New York, and they can find you 50 workers—complete with phony documents—to work in carwashes in Philadelphia."

Castillo, head of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said aliens may pay a smuggler $200 to get across the border from Mexico, or $1,000 or more to get all the way to the Northeast.

Chalk up one for the 'Hawkers. . .

By BARNEY PARKER

Sports Editor

K-State pride received two blows Saturday.

First, in what began as a prank, K-State fans embarrassed themselves in front of a regional television audience, by pelting the playing floor with more than a hundred bananas as the KU Jayhawks were being introduced.

Then the Jayhawks defeated K-State for the third time this year, 75-63. It was Kansas's first victory in Manhattan in seven years.

Behind the perimeter shooting of Wilmore Fowler and John Douglas, the Jayhawks made 11 of their first 13 shots in the second half and raced from a 36-33 half-time lead to a comfortable 57-43 advantage with 13:46 to play.

Despite requests by Jack Hartman at a pre-game pep rally and Mike Evans prior to the game, K-State fans tossed bananas and one chicken, which failed to reach the court, during the introductions.

WITH K-STATE needing all the support it can get, time will tell what effect the incident has on contributing alumni, Kansas legislators and K-State's national reputation.

The pre-game hoopla was good for something though, as the Wildcats rode the crowd's energy to a 16-5 lead with 12:37 remaining in the first half.

Mike Evans bombed six of those points from long range and Steve Soldner added four as the 'Cats stymied KU with a zone defense.

KU roared back with long range shots as Douglas fired in three bombs from the right side and Fowler hit four from the left. Douglas made 6-of-8 shots in the first half and Fowler was 5-for-5 as the rest of the half turned into racehorse basketball with the lead changing hands seven times.

the second half without Evans, who injured his back, K-State made several runs after the Jayhawk explosion, but could get no closer than 10 points.

Rolando Blackman had 11 points in the second half and Soldner added eight as the Wildcats played most of the half with guard Scott Langton and four big men in the lineup.

K-State did outrebound the Jayhawks, 43-34. Soldner snared 10 boards and Curtis Redding grabbed eight.

Douglas and Fowler finished with 18 points apiece for KU. Blackman and Soldner had 16 apiece for K-State.

K-State falls to fifth in the Big Eight standings while Kansas leads the loop with a 10-1 mark. Oklahoma, 6-5, is fourth. With only three games remaining in the conference schedule, K-State will play Oklahoma State at Stillwater, Wednesday.

Joe Potts, sophomore in fisheries and wildlife biology, shows how the loss settled.

Evans will play at O-State; Wildcats back to page one

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

Though he missed most of the second half Saturday against KU, Mike Evans will probably play Wednesday night at Oklahoma State.

K-State trainer Porky Morgan said the heavy muscles in Evans back were bruised, but he thought he could play Wednesday.

"I caught a knee and an elbow, one after the other," Evans said of the bruised area after the game.

"It kept tightening up to the point that it was almost unbearable. I wanted to play, but he (Coach Jack Hartman) wouldn't let me."

"I talked to him once," Hartman said. "His indication removed any doubt about playing him."

IN HIS post-game interview Hartman said the Wildcats controlled the tempo in the opening minutes of the game.

"The pace of the ballgame in the first 10 minutes is about the only we're going to be effective with them." But Hartman said after that KU started crashing the boards and things speeded up.

Experience, Hartman said, is the main reason why KU is playing well this year and why K-State is struggling.

"I think that's basically the difference," he said. "It's hard to put a statistical value to it."

K-State center Steve Soldner agreed that things got away from K-State after the opening minutes.

"Right after the second half our offense wasn't as smooth as it could have been," he said. "We weren't taking enough time to do what we wanted to do."

Sports

IN THE winners' dressing room Kansas coach Ted Owens talked of a "terrific victory. None of our players playing now have ever won here," he said.

Wilmore Fowler, who made 9-of-12 shots, said the K-State crowd did not intimidate him.

"The crowd got me up for the game," he said. "It's small like our high school."

Like Evans, KU guard Darnell Valentine also finished the game in pain. Valentine added a swollen lip and cheek to the black eye he received last week in Oklahoma.

"Langton was cutting to the basket and hit me in the lip,"

Valentine said. "I've got to watch those heads."

NEEDING wins to earn a home court berth in the Big Eight post-season tournament, the Wildcats will go back to page one of Jack Hartman's book of basketball. Execution, efficiency and intensity were the words Hartman used to describe what K-State must do to win.

If they win the Wildcats will probably have to play Kansas again, and test the old Hartman adage that no team can beat another one four times in a season.

"I'm hard headed," Hartman said. "I'll play them any chance I get."

Ellis to Canada

Former K-State football coach Ellis Rainsberger confirmed Friday that he has accepted a position with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the Canadian Football League.

Rainsberger, who resigned under pressure last November, will be offensive line coach for the Blue Bombers.

"I just can't get away from it," Rainsberger said.

In three seasons at K-State, Rainsberger, who had previously been head coach at Washburn and Southern Illinois, compiled a 5-28 record.

Rainsberger began his duties under head coach Ray Jauch February 1 and will move to Winnipeg March 1. He said his family will join him later.

Women win fifth in a row as I-State falls in overtime

Kristi Short connected on a jump shot with 19 seconds remaining in overtime to give the K-State women's basketball team a 66-64 win, their fifth in a row, over the Iowa State Cyclones Friday night in Ahearn Field House.

After Short hit her jump shot the 'Cats nailed down the victory when Brenda Mauck intercepted a Cyclone pass with seven seconds remaining.

This marked the second time in four nights that the 'Cats had won a game by a two point margin. K-State squeaked by Northwest Missouri State Tuesday night, 71-69.

The 'Cats were down 43-34 at halftime, but a scrappy K-State defense forced 22 Cyclone turnovers in the second half.

AFTER outscoring the Cyclones 11-1 during one five minute stretch the 'Cats took a 49-48 lead for the first time in the second half with 14:11 remaining.

"I felt we came back real well," said Wildcat coach Judy Akers. "We played real good defense the second half."

Eileen Feeney led the 'Cats with a game-high 20 points. Beth Boggs added 14 points and Short had 10. Boggs also led the team in rebounding with 15.

LSU subs do in Kentucky

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP)—A funny thing happened to the Kentucky Wildcats on their way to another Southeastern Conference victory they tripped.

Even more humiliating, the Louisiana State basketball team beat them with their second-stringers.

"It seems as if when the other team really wants a game, we roll over and let them have it," said Kentucky Coach Joe Hall after Saturday night's shocking 95-94 overtime loss to LSU. "This is the second time this year this has happened to us — that we haven't bowed our neck and faced up to the competition."

THE NATION'S top-ranked club, beaten for the first time a couple of weeks ago by Alabama, was theoretically head and shoulders above LSU. However, the Wildcats were only mild cats against their SEC colleagues Saturday night, even after the entire starting five of the Tigers had fouled out. LSU had only reserves playing near the end.

Three track men claim gold

The K-State track team claimed three first place finishes to pace the field at the 38 team Oklahoma Track Classic Friday.

No team scores were kept.

Claiming first places for the 'Cats were Vince Parrette in the triple jump with a leap of 52-4, Ray Hanf in the quarter-mile with a time of 48.8 and Ed DeLashmutt in the mile with a time of 4:09.5

Other Wildcat's placing in the meet were Kevin Sloan's third place finish in the long jump with a leap of 24-8, Doug Knauss's fourth place in the pole vault at 16 feet and Brian Sanchez's fifth place finish in the mile with a time of 4:11.8.

OKLAHOMA also came away from the meet with three first place finishes.

Assistant track coach Jerome Howe said he thought the 'Cats performed well.

"It was a typical track meet," Howe said. "You feel very good about some people's performances and others just had a bad day."

"Overall I think we did fairly well."

Hancock sets dash record

The K-State women's track squad, running against Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and North Texas State, came away with three first place finishes at the Oklahoma Track Classic Friday.

The meet was held on an individual basis with no team scoring.

First place finishers for the 'Cats were Freda Hancock in the 440 with a time of 56.6, a school record, Cindy Worcester in the mile with a time of 5:02.2 and the mile relay team of Wanda Trent, Lorraine Davidson, Carla Nealy and Hancock with a time of 4:00.2.

OTHER 'CATS finishing high were Linda Long in the shot put with a toss of 43-2, Hancock in the 60-yard dash with a time of 7.1 and Trent in the 440 with a time of 58.2.

Head coach Barry Anderson said his team is starting to "show signs of improvement."

"I thought Linda Long threw the shot well and the sprinters are progressing well as Freda and Wanda Trent's performances indicate," Anderson said.

"We are looking forward to the Big Eight meet this weekend."

I have personally visited all of you during the last few weeks. I am seeking the office of Student Body President to become a public servant for you.

One issue that I will be working towards is a lobbying effort with the State Legislature to allow the serving of alcohol in Student Unions. This would allow organized groups, such as yours, to hold formals and other social functions in the Union.

I urge you to support me in the elections on Wed. So that we can work together to accomplish this and other concerns.

AccuDate dating service pairs lonely hearts

By SHARON KALE
Collegian Reporter

It doesn't have a computer and it doesn't offer a guarantee, but for $10 the AccuDate dating service will try to find you a match.

Larry Stevens, freshman in pre-design professions, operates AccuDate, a dating service in which customers fill out forms about themselves and the kind of person they would like to date.

Stevens operates AccuDate from his room in Edwards Hall.

Interested people write to AccuDate to receive a form. When the form is returned with $10, the applicant is entitled to the name of one person of the opposite sex.

ON THE FORM an applicant fills in his age, sex, religion, nationality and is asked to send a picture of himself. He is asked if he smokes or drinks and if he considers himself an introvert or an extrovert. He also describes the kind of person he would like to date.

The description the applicants give of the kind of person they would like to date is primarily how Stevens matches couples.

Stevens said he did not have an extensive background or training in behavioral sciences and doesn't think he needs one. There are no requirements to set up a dating service, a spokesman for the Better Business Bureau said.

"We're not computerized yet," Stevens said, but added if business went well, he would like to use a computer. Stevens said he processes the forms by hand and employs only one person to help him.

Stevens said he doesn't think the name AccuDate is misleading or implies that a computer is used.

ACCUDATE opened for business on January 28. In the first week of business, Stevens said he received 40 forms.

The first applicants have not yet received their dates' names, Stevens said, but he hopes to give each his or her date's name this week.

Stevens doesn't guarantee that his dates will like each other.

"Most dating services don't offer guarantees," Stevens said.

The form the applicant fills out also states that AccuDate doesn't claim responsibility for what may happen on the date. The applicant must sign this agreement.

About 75 percent of the applicants are males with a fairly even number of introverts and extroverts applying, Stevens said.

Because there aren't as many females applying, the males are put on a waiting list. Stevens said he uses the post mark on the forms to determine the order of the waiting list.

Stevens got the idea for AccuDate when he attended Seward County Junior College last fall. At the junior college, he got together with other students and formed a computerized dating service.

The service was well received, Stevens said, so he decided to try it in Manhattan.

"It's something I've been thinking about since the beginning of the school year," Stevens said.

North Carolina versus Bell; legal fists fly in fraud battle

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP)—For nearly three years they've been slugging it out—legal fists flying, and occasionally landing a solid wallop.

Although they've met before, the combatants—the state of North Carolina and Southern Bell Telephone Co.—square off today in a trial courtroom.

Southern Bell, which operates telephone systems in Georgia, Florida and North and South Carolina, faces 25 counts of conspiracy and fraud.

The utility was indicted by a grand jury last August on charges that some officials agreed to "embezzle, abstract and misapply monies" by channeling funds, through falsified expense vouchers, into political contributions and personal use.

Mecklenburg County District Attorney Peter Gilchrist III, a member of the prosecuting team, and John Walker of Charlotte, one of Southern Bell's attorneys, have been reluctant to say much about the case before trial.

BUT STATE Attorney General Rufus Edmisten, assisting in the prosecution, has said: "An individual can't steal from himself but there can be others involved—like stockholders. Then you've got a different situation."

Defense attorneys contend the argument is whether a company can steal from itself, or even conspire to do that.

"I don't think that's an issue," Gilchrist said. "The statute talks in terms of folks falsifying statements."

Last month, Superior Court Judge Lacy Thornburg refused to drop charges against the company, but dismissed indictments against utility company president L.E. Rast and three other company officials.

Thornburg, who will preside over the trial, said they were immune from prosecution because prosecutors interviewed them before they were indicted. He said state law forbids indictments based on information obtained directly from defendants.

However, Thornburg allowed charges to stand against one person—John Ryan of Charlotte, who first blew the whistle on Southern Bell's political contributions.

RYAN, head of the utility's North Carolina operations until he was fired in 1973, told reporters in 1975 that he had operated a political slush fund for Southern Bell. Subsequent publicity about his accounts helped trigger federal and state investigations.

Thornburg threw out 25 counts of fraud, embezzlement and conspiracy against Ryan, 58, but let another 16 counts stand. No trial date has been set for Ryan.

The company admitted in October 1976 that $142,000 had been channeled through falsified expense vouchers from 1971 until 1973. Southern Bell admitted that about 80 executives participated in the scheme, but they thought they were following company policy, and the company assumed responsibility for their actions.

Although Southern Bell admitted to breaking federal laws with corporate contributions, the statute of limitations on those particular violations had expired.

Southern Bell has never said which politicians received its money.

FIELDHOUSE REFERENDUM VOTE THIS WEDNESDAY

REFERENDUM ON A NEW FIELDHOUSE AT K.S.U.
TO BE HELD FEBRUARY 15, 1978

The following shall be adopted as responsibilities of the Student Governing Association of Kansas State University:

Student Governing Association leaders shall request the Kansas State University Administration and the University Long Range Planning Committee, in conjunction with the Intercollegiate Athletic Council, to implement the necessary requirements to construct and operate an indoor basketball, concert, and all-purpose facility. This building is to meet program requirements, in order of priority, for men's and women's basketball, concerts, and other general University needs. It should be operational in approximately 1983. The Student Governing Association shall be involved in the planning and utilization decisions of this facility at every level.

This building is to be partially funded in the following manner:

1. A $5/semester/full-time student and a $2.50/semester/part-time student increase in the present student activity fee to begin in the Fall of 1979. An additional fee increase of $5/semester/full-time student and $2.50/semester/part-time student (to bring the total to $10) to be assessed the semester preceding the date the contracts maybe let for construction of the facility. (Contracts would not be let for construction until all funds are available, either from the State or Alumni, etc.) This increase shall be collected to help defray architectural consultant costs and assist in the retirement of 30-year construction bonds. These monies are not to be used for operating expenses. Upon retirement of these bonds, this assessed increase will be terminated.
2. The officers of the Student Governing Association will petition the Kansas State University Administration to seek the additional resources to build and operate the aforementioned facility.
3. In the event additional funding cannot be committed, as indicated by the University President, (State of Kansas, City of Manhattan, Alumni-Endowment gifts, or a combination of these, etc.) by June 30, 1981, the Student Governing Association shall request this increase to be terminated and will conduct a subsequent referendum in the Fall of 1981 to determine the appropriate allocation for the fees collected to that date.

YES _____ NO _____

Q: What does all this say?

A: It states that beginning in the Fall of 1979 students will be willing to pay $5 (semester/full time student) toward the building of a new basketball—all purpose facility. It also states that if the monies are pledged to fund the remainder of the building, student fee's will increase another $5 to be paid toward the retirement of 30 year bonds. Proceeds from the sale of the bonds will be around $2.75 million, bringing the total student contribution to $3 million.

Q: If the referendum passes, what will be done with Ahearn?

A: It will continue to be used for academics, recreation, and classrooms. The decision will be made by the University.

Q: If a new fieldhouse is built, will the students have to pay operational costs?

A: NO

Q: What will happen if necessary commitments from the state and alumni are not forthcoming?

A: Another referendum would be put before the students in 1981 to decide the expenditure of student funds collected to that date (possibly used to retire rec complex bonds).

Q: Can we have concerts in a new fieldhouse?

A: YES

Q: Will the referendum assure a new fieldhouse?

A: NO

Q: Will the referendum affect the rec complex?

A: NO

Referendum only beginning to fieldhouse construction

By MIKE NASS
Collegian Reporter

If the referendum for a new fieldhouse passes Wednesday, it still has a "long way to go," according to Paul Young, vice president for university facilities.

"There are two more critical points if it passes," he said. "The president must make a recommendation for a fee increase to the Board of Regents and the Regents must make a decision on the increase."

However, this won't guarantee the building of a fieldhouse, Young said.

"The referendum will determine if the students will participate in the financing," he said.

"I read it as a challenge to state and private sources to come up with the rest of the cost," Young said. "The referendum will show if the students are willing to help pay for part of the cost."

SEVERAL factors must be taken into account before outside funding would materialize, he said.

"If the funds came from the state it must be measured in terms of priorities on the campus as well as around the state," Young said.

"If they came from private sources we would need people interested in the project and willing to give money in large quantities."

The University or the state couldn't proceed until funds were in hand or established in some way, according to Vincent Cool, vice president for university development.

"I don't think it (the referendum) would be enough to proceed as a project," Cool said. "If it would be helpful to the president, this office could do the schematics of a project. We could work up a program and its estimated costs."

However, the referendum might provide some inspiration for other groups to proceed in fund raising activities, he said.

"We could look at it this way," Young said. "Many times private institutions will have a donor say, 'I'll give you half of the money if you raise the other half'."

SOMETIMES the other half can be raised quite rapidly, he said.

"If $10 million were made available and no other priorities existed, the fieldhouse would probably be built," Young said.

"There is enough general interest to go that way."

"If the students turn it down overwhelmingly, it doesn't show that they don't want a fee increase to finance the project," Young said.

"However, it might take the steam out of the issue," he said.

Each student must take all things into consideration before voting, he said.

"It's easy to vote in favor of a referendum such as this, especially if the student graduates before it (the fee) becomes effective," Young said. "The student must decide, 'Do I really want it that badly.'"

Schools, roads hibernate under snowfall Monday

By PERYN COMINSKY
Collegian Reporter

By 7 a.m. Monday, eight inches of snow had fallen on Manhattan, causing the municipal airport and schools to close and a snow emergency to be put into effect.

Bruce McCallum, Manhattan's city engineer, declared the snow emergency ordinance to be in effect at 6 a.m. Monday. The ordinance prohibits parking on streets designated as snow emergency streets.

Those streets designated as snow emergency streets are: Third, Juliette, Eleventh, Fourteenth, Seventeenth, Yuma, Poyntz, Anderson, Claflin, Kimball and Casement. Also included are: Browning, Hobbs, College and Bluemont.

The ordinance also provides that any vehicle which becomes disabled and is without snow tires or chains will be ticketed and towed away. The ordinance will remain in effect until the city calls off the snow emergency.

ACCORDING to Bob Chard, superintendent of Manhattan's street department, all of the city's street employees will be working around-the-clock to get the streets cleared.

All of the street department's available equipment, which includes two graders, five plows and a salt truck, began to roll early Monday morning in an effort to clear Manhattan's primary and secondary streets of snow. Chard said as of noon Monday no streets in the city were closed.

The flight service station at the Manhattan Municipal Airport reported that the airport closed Monday and wasn't expected to re-open until at least one of the runways had been cleared. Flight service officials weren't sure when the city's equipment would be available to clear the runways.

According to the Riley County Police Department, 16 accidents were reported between 4:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Sunday when the snow first began to fall.

K-State meteorologist Dean Bark said Monday's snowfall was the heaviest in Manhattan since December 1975 when 7.8 inches of snow fell on the city.

Senate debate to focus on capital punishment Thursday

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas Senate will debate Thursday the emotionally-charged issue of whether to reinstate the death penalty in Kansas.

Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar announced the firm date for the capital punishment debate during a brief Senate session Monday opening the sixth week of the 1978 session.

Both the Senate and the House had one-fifth of their memberships absent for Monday's sessions, most of them travel victims of the massive snowstorm which dumped nearly a foot of snow on Topeka and much of northeastern Kansas.

Thirty-two of the 40-member Senate were on hand, while 100 of the 125 House members were present. Nevertheless, the House debated some bills, while the Senate only took care of a few administrative chores.

GAAR said not debating the death penalty bill until Thursday would push into next week Senate debate on a bill which would legalize use of Laetrile in the treatment of cancer in Kansas.

The death penalty bill has passed the House, but was amended in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee and will have to return to the House for concurrence on those amendments if the Senate approves it as amended.

The bill would restore the death penalty for malicious, premeditated murder and for murders committed in connection with kidnapping, rape, aggravated robbery and aggravated burglary.

A bill aimed at helping solve some of the state's groundwater problems won preliminary approval in the House.

Also gaining tentative approval was a bill designed to provide compensation to the innocent victims of certain crimes involving personal injury or death as the result of criminal acts.

THE GROUNDWATER bill would allow the chief engineer of the Water Resources Division within the state Agriculture Department to designate an intensive groundwater use control area upon the recommendation of a groundwater district.

Following a public hearing, the chief engineer could designate an intensive groundwater use control area if he found:

— Groundwater levels in a defined area were declining or had declined excessively.

— The rate of withdrawal of groundwater within the area in question exceeded the rate of recharge.

— Preventable waste of water was occurring or might occur within the area.

— Other conditions existed within the area which required regulation in the public interest.

The chief engineer then could order one or more of certain corrective measures. These might include closing the area to further appropriation of groundwater, determining the permissible total withdrawal of water each day, month or year, reducing the permissible withdrawal by one or more users, or requiring a system of rotation on groundwater use.

The crime reparations bill would provide that compensation could be awarded for economic loss, loss of earnings, medical expenses and replacement services lost to persons suffering personal injury or death as a result of criminal acts.

The bill would fix a maximum award of $10,000. It is proposed to finance the awards by assessing an additional fee of 25 cents on each civil and criminal case filed in district courts. This would raise an estimated $100,000 annually.

States brace for energy shortages as nationwide coal strike continues

By The Associated Press

The 70-day nationwide coal strike forced Indiana to order mandatory power cutbacks Monday and put other states within days of them. In West Virginia, tens of thousands of workers feared layoffs.

But a split in the United Mine Workers, which had scuttled a proposed settlement, only widened, and President Carter said he still had no plans to seek a court order forcing miners back to work.

The White House also said there were no plans to bring the two sides together in a face-to-face meeting there.

A spokesman for the Bituminous Coal Operators Association said no decision had been made on when bargaining would resume.

The federal government did take steps to help utilities share electricity. Sen. Barry Goldwater, (R-Ariz.), called on Carter to go further and invoke the Taft-Hartley Act to suspend the walkout—the move that Carter later said he was not ready to take.

MEANWHILE, UMW President Arnold Miller and those rebelling against his leadership each said they had rank-and-file support. Some rebels said they were moving to oust Miller.

Even if a settlement were reached immediately, it would take at least 10 days for the union membership to ratify the pact and more time for coal shipments to reach normal levels.

This was the power situation in a belt of states near the Appalachian coalfields which generate much of their power with coal:

—INDIANA: With the state already under a state of emergency, the public service commission announced Monday it had ordered mandatory cutbacks in some areas. Particularly in southern Indiana, the coal stockpiles of some power companies were already down to a 40-day supply by early last week.

—WEST VIRGINIA: In the northern and eastern parts of the state, a 10 percent cutback was in effect—not enough to cause layoffs but a harbinger of more severe measures only days away. Utilities in those areas have a 27-day supply of coal, and the state public service commission is allowing them 10 percent power cutbacks when they reach a 30-day supply, cutbacks of 30 percent to the largest commercial customers when they reach the 25-day mark, and rotating blackouts when they reach 15 days. The 30 percent cutbacks could come as early as Thursday, and the West Virginia Manufacturers Association estimates they could bring layoffs of 20,000 to 25,000 workers.

—OHIO: Utilities report 34- to 60-day stockpiles, and most have already asked customers to take voluntary conservation measures. Mandatory cutbacks are expected soon—when the utilities are down to a 30-day supply. The measures being discussed are cutbacks of 25 to 50 percent or staggered blackouts.

'Right to die' bill would help terminal patients face death

TOPEKA (AP)—The executive director of the Society for the Right to Die said Monday a "death with dignity" bill being considered by the Legislature would strengthen the patient-physician relationship.

Alice Mehling told the Senate Judiciary Committee the proposal would help doctors and terminally ill patients deal honestly with one another about disease and death.

She said that was the effect of a right to die law passed in California last year.

"In a recent survey by the California Medical Association, more than half the physicians stated that the act had been useful to them in their practice," she said.

"Several respondents mentioned that the act provided a mechanism for patients to communicate with their physicians and also has served to bring the subject 'out of the closet' making possible open discussion between patients and their families," she said.

The panel took no action Monday on the bill which would permit patients in advance to write a declaration that physicians not use artificial life-sustaining devices once it becomes apparent that they are merely postponing death.

Airlines say no mail order

WASHINGTON—A computerized program that would have set up one-day mail delivery of airline tickets to those making reservations appears to have been killed by opposition from travel agents.

Postal Service sources, declining to be publicly identified, said tests had proven the feasibility of the program. But they said the airlines, which depend on travel agents to send passengers their way, refused to participate out of fear of alienating the agents.

The sources said the one-day mail service could have lowered costs for airlines, which might have resulted in savings for travelers.

Under the proposed program, a traveler would call the airline to make a reservation, as often happens now. The flight information would then be transmitted electronically to the Post Office, where a ticket would be printed and delivered with the next day's mail.

Merry Christmas, America

WASHINGTON—Still bristling over the star-spangled earmuffs you got for Christmas?

Consider poor Uncle Sam. He's got a room full of, uh, "unique" gifts from foreign dignitaries.

Like the stuffed boar's head that Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev once presented to former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Or the orange, green and black watercolor that Korean President Park Chung-hee gave to former Speaker of the House Carl Albert.

There are 1,200 items logged by the General Services Administration since 1974 when it took charge of handling foreign gifts.

Dozens of watches, silver tea sets, engraved cigarette boxes, silk scarves and carved elephants—and a wooden map of Gabon—are kept in a vault deep in the basement of a downtown government building, normally seen only by an omnipresent electric eye.

Nazis salute Kappler

SOLTAU, West Germany—Nazi salutes by several mourners marked the burial Monday of convicted war criminal Herbert Kappler in the north German town where he died of cancer after fleeing an Italian prison hospital.

At least four men raised their right arms in the banned gesture as they filed past Kappler's grave, lined with pine branches, to scatter dirt or flowers on his brown wood coffin.

Police estimated 100 people filled a cemetery chapel for the funeral. At least another 100 stood outside on the snowy grounds, listening to the service over loudspeakers.

"Be a just judge," Protestant clergyman Ernest Wilm, a Nazi concentration camp victim, prayed for Kappler. "Grant our brother a new life."

Raising the dead

HARRISON, Ark.—The Rev. Daniel Rogers says he's paying $4,300 for an Indonesian faith-healer to visit this town in north Arkansas and raise his mother from the dead.

Gladys Rogers died Feb. 2 at the age of 80. Her son said the body is being kept at below-freezing temperatures at a local funeral home. Funeral home officials, however, said the body was not there.

"They (funeral home) are telling everybody that because they're just trying to protect me and everything," Rogers said Monday. "We're paying for it so I hope it's there.... I told them just to maintain a low profile, but she is there."

Rogers says if his mother is resurrected, "it will bring glory to God. It will cause hundreds of people ... to be saved. That's what we're here for in this world—to get people saved."

Scientist calls for satellites to beam energy to earth

WASHINGTON (AP)—The scientist who first proposed solar-powered satellites called Monday for an international effort to construct 112 satellites to beam solar power to an energy-hungry world by the year 2025.

Peter Glaser told the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science that the solar power satellite (SPS) represents one of the most promising power generation options that could help meet global energy demands.

"With increasing confidence in the technical feasibility and economic promise of the SPS, this option deserves serious consideration as the nations of the world grapple with the challenges that will have to be met during the inevitable transition to renewable sources of energy," he said.

Such a satellite system might provide 25 percent of the world's electric power needs, said Glaser, who is vice president for engineering systems for Arthur Little Inc., a Cambridge, Mass. consulting firm.

A power satellite would be placed in geosynchronous orbit—a kind of parking orbit 22,300 miles high, where it would appear from the ground to be stationary.

Needed: one arena

The question of funding a new all-purpose facility at K-State has been the topic of discussion for several weeks.

The student governing association passed a referendum last week that will allow students to voice their opinions as to their approval or disapproval of the plan.

Numerous questions have arisen. Who will be responsible for its maintenance? How much will it cost? Where will it be located? Who will have top priority in its use?

These questions are not easily answered. Certainly K-State is not yet to the point in the planning stages to answer these questions.

But by approving the referendum, students at K-State will make a commitment, a commitment to both the Kansas legislature and the alumni association that will demonstrate our desire for a new all-purpose facility.

AND THE benefits of a new facility are limitless.

Besides housing both the men's and women's basketball teams, the new facility could help in the recruitment of quality ballplayers that would strengthen both teams.

Coach Jack Hartman has admitted that a new fieldhouse could only enhance his program because athletes do not want to play in antiquated Ahearn Field House. A home such as Hilton Coliseum in Ames is a far more attractive place to play and is one of Iowa State's biggest selling points.

A new fieldhouse could be beneficial because it would also enable top performers to come to K-State and not feel as if they were performing in the Grand Canyon, complete with echos and terrible acoustics.

And it could serve as a convention center for Manhattan that would ultimately give a shot in the arm to a sagging economy.

Admittedly, the question of favoring the referendum was cloudy. Too many uncertainties made the issue difficult to grasp and even harder to accept.

BUT SATURDAY'S escapade during the Kansas basketball game has made it clear that in order to show Kansans our need for a new facility, we must take the first step towards its construction.

The Kansas legislature and the alumni association could conceivably be hesitant to fund the entire project alone.

If the alumni association and the legislature do not raise the funds, the money collected from students to that point could be used to retire the bonds on the recreation complex.

If students want an arena that will seat everyone, the referendum should be passed. Students would be giving a little to receive a great deal.

A just reward

Mobilization on campus these days is something like wading through drifts of bananas in Ahearn Field House.

It's difficult to decide what is the most disgusting—watching several first graders (enrolled as K-State students) throwing symbolic fruit at foes on regional TV or trudging knee-deep in snow to an 8:30 a.m. class to find the instructor didn't make it.

I would have to decide on the latter at this point.

The instructor had an excuse. The students at Saturday's game did not.

In evaluating the incident I viewed in Ahearn Saturday, I would have to conclude that the bananas were more of a prolific symbol of the mentality of the persons hoisting them than the appearance of the opposition.

IT MAKES ME wonder if the "flaw in the Kaw" is actually among us and not up the river as so many die-hards proclaim.

Apparently these people have a complex. So what. Donnie Von Moore may not have a movie-star physique—but he can sure play one hell of a basketball game.

If "looking cute" is what it takes, maybe we should recruit some of the chimps with the bananas.

The thrill of defeating the University of Kansas in any athletic event is great. But when you are defeated before the competition even begins, what's the use of cheering?

Superior intelligence expressed in an articulate manner is the best way to come out ahead in the great KU-K-State rivalry. Insults, jeers and throwing things at the performers was popular in the 16th Century with Shakespearean performances. This behavior should remain there.

IT'S NO WONDER K-State has a reputation for having the best cow chip throwers in the state. Many of our fans get a lot of practice and thus stigmatize the entire university.

What's worse is the retaliation the team will no doubt receive on its next trek up the river. The floor will be covered with pasture pies while the deserving recipients of the awards will be at home sucking on bananas.

I would suggest the culprits responsible for Saturday's embarrassment come forward and get their just reward. I would also suggest the reward be administered by the K-State basketball team and coach Jack Hartman (who all had to take the brunt of the original prank).

I HEARBY ANNOUNCE a contest for the "just reward" beginning today. The winner will have the opportunity to assist in its administration.

Deadline for entries will be 5 p.m. Friday at the Collegian newsroom. All entries must be clearly written or illustrated on a five by seven index card. Entries will be judged on the basis of how well the punishment fits the offense. The winner will be announced Tuesday.

But just remember the mentality of the people you are punishing. Because they are children, this may scar their entire lives.

So while you are digging your car out of a snow bank, cussing up a storm, remember—your wrath could by taken out on someone for a good cause.

And by the way, if you instructor fails to show up this week after you've busted yourself making it to class for a change, just remember, he has an excuse.

Clown abuse in Manhattan

Editor,

Hi there boys and girls! Have you ever gone to a circus and seen all the funny and scary things that go on? Yes? What was your favorite act in the whole circus? Was it the lion tamer or the man that ate fire or the girl on the flying trapeze? No? The clowns? Of course, the clowns!

Everyone loves the clowns. They make you roll with laughter 'til your tummy hurts. They run around and do funny things and they wear the silliest costumes.

But do you know what? There are some people who don't like clowns.

I don't know why; clowns never do anything wrong or bad. They never hurt anybody.

The Collegian welcomes letters from readers.

Letters may be submitted (preferably typed) in Kedzie-103 or the editorial desk in the newsroom.

But some people are just plain mean to clowns.

How do I know? My best friend is a clown and people pick on him when he walks around in Manhattan. Yes, right here in Manhattan.

Clown abuse is a very serious problem.

Wouldn't you be upset if you were a clown and you went out to make people laugh and they yelled rude things at you? It's terrible.

That's why the clowns in Manhattan and all over the world need your help, kids.

Treat them nicely and don't let the bullies be mean to them.

Stand up for them, laugh at them, follow them in a parade, but never be mean to a clown.

Clowns have feelings, too, and all they want is to make you laugh.

Snow blanket doesn't chill attendance at classes here

By KAREN EWING
Collegian Reporter

Attendance at K-State classes averaged 80 percent Monday, despite an eight-inch blanket of snow which covered the University.

The University held classes because most students were able to get to campus despite the storm, according to John Chalmers, vice-president for academic affairs.

"Of course there are some faculty and students who aren't going to make it, but we can't call off classes for some," he said.

"KU got called off Monday morning because they couldn't get students from dorms to classrooms as the shuttle buses couldn't run. Here students can walk from dorms to classrooms and all sidewalks and roads were open," he said.

K-STATE deans and department heads reported varying attendances in Monday classes.

According to Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, out of 150 classes, seven were low in attendance. Overall, there was 95 percent student attendance.

Ben Mahaffey, head of the Department of Forestry, said that department had only two or three absences and forestry students usually don't let bad weather affect their attendance.

"We had more trouble with faculty than with students. We had 60 percent to 70 percent of faculty in attendance and 70 to 80 percent of the students here. We had to cancel 10 to 12 classes," said John Maxwell, head of the Department of Mathematics.

SOME DEANS expressed concern about Monday night exams. William Fately, head of the Department of Chemistry, said he would try to allow students to make up the Chemistry I exam, which he administered Monday night. He reported 70 percent student attendance in chemistry classes.

Security and Traffic reported that road clearing began at midnight Sunday and blowing snow caused the roads to remain in poor condition.

"We've done super on accidents—I guess because people are smart enough to walk," a Security and Traffic official said.

Besides many phone calls and a stranded patrol car, Security and Traffic also reported that they had trouble getting President Duane Acker from Kansas City to Topeka for an important meeting because of hazardous road conditions.

Michael wants to be '1069'; judge refuses number-name

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—Michael Dengler lost his bid to have his name changed to the number "1069" Monday, when a judge said the idea was "an offense to basic human dignity and inherently totalitarian."

Dengler, a former social studies teacher from Fargo, N.D., said the number symbolized his interrelationship with society and reflected his personal and philosophical identity.

In denying the request, Hennepin District Judge Donald Barbeau cited a New Jersey Supreme Court decision which said courts could refuse official recognition to a name that is "bizarre."

Barbeau stayed his order 30 days to allow Dengler time for an appeal.

To grant Dengler's petition, he said, would "hasten that day in which we all become lost in faceless numbers. The coming of that day will not enrich this petitioner, but poor we all will be indeed."

Barbeau also quoted Shakespeare's declaration that "who steals my purse steals trash...but he that filches from me my good name robs me of that which not enriches him, and makes me poor indeed."

Ted Knopp has been encouraging you to compare and evaluate his candidacy. He has been open and straight forward on all issues. His stands are clear and his concerns are sincere. Now we encourage you to vote Wednesday based on your comparison and evaluation.

Thomas proposes changes in advising, tenure systems

By BERNARD NORMAN
Collegian Reporter

A university-college program that would, in effect, change the advising system at K-State has been proposed by Cindy Thomas, candidate for student body president.

"I would like to see K-State implement a university-college program similar to the one at Wichita State University," Thomas said.

"For freshman, it would be like an extended orientation period. The program calls for a separate college with counselors and advisors especially for freshman. This program gives first-year students a better chance of making it through K-State," Thomas said.

Thomas said the program is needed to help students adjust to the cultural shock at a major university such as K-State.

"A majority of the first year students come from a small town or rural background. At times it's hard to make that transition from a small town or rural background to K-State. I think this type of program helps to alleviate that problem," she said.

CHANGES IN the advising system would take effect in the student's sophomore year, Thomas said.

"After the freshman year, sophomores could shop around for an advisor. By picking their own advisors, students can better relate to that person who will help to shape their futures," she said.

Thomas said she would also like to see mandatory teacher evaluation for tenured and non-tenured instructors, to eliminate what she termed "dead weight."

"I think K-State has good instructors and bad instructors, depending on what college you're in. This is what I mean by dead weight," Thomas said.

"I believe that mandatory evaluation for tenured and non-tenured instructors would help the students. This way if there is a poor instructor, the college dean could take the proper action," she said. "More students could also sit on the committees that evaluate and make tenure decisions."

Thomas also proposed to extend the period during which final examinations are taken from the present seven days to ten days.

"This would eliminate the risk of a student having three tests on one day and also gives the student a better chance of making a higher grade," he said.

TOM FOOLERY attacks the issues:

on parking—"I'm all for it!"
on the Rec Complex—"I'm all for it!"
on a new Fieldhouse—"I'm all for it!"
on preserving Ahearn—"I'm all for it!"

Begin softens Sinai position; welcomes talk resumption

JERUSALEM (AP)—Prime Minister Menachem Begin reaffirmed on Monday that the hotly contested issue of Israeli settlements was open for negotiation and he welcomed resumption of U.S. mediation of the Mideast conflict.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, meanwhile, capped his eight-nation bid for international political support with a meeting at the Vatican with Pope Paul VI. The pope urged that international guarantees be provided for Jerusalem's holy places in any future settlement.

Begin was in a conciliatory mood at a news conference Monday after sharply criticizing U.S. Mideast policy on Sunday.

Apparently underlining his willingness to bargain, Begin confirmed a weekend report by Israeli radio that his government has halted its expansion of Sinai settlements. He did not elaborate. Israel was sharply criticized by Egypt for its Jan. 8 decision to "strengthen" existing settlements by increasing their size and population during peace talks.

THE RADIO said Defense Minister Ezer Weizman halted the bulldozers that were leveling ground for new houses at settlements in northeastern Sinai. Begin's confirmation came in answer to a question.

However, the prime minister left the impression Israel will fight any move to disband settlements. He said all Israeli political factions, except the minority Moscow-aligned Communist Party, opposed removal of the outposts.

At its weekly Sunday meeting, Israel's cabinet accused Secretary of State Cyrus Vance of "taking sides" against Israel in Mideast mediation.

Begin said he did "not regret one word" of the unanimously adopted cabinet statement, which was his eight-month-old government's sharpest criticism of the Carter administration.

Vance, speaking at a Washington news conference Friday, called on Israel to disband its settlements and withdraw from Arab lands won in the 1967 war. He also endorsed creation of a Palestinian homeland.

BEGIN told reporters his peace plan includes a demand that Israel retain a score of settlements in Sinai after the peninsula is turned back to Egypt. But he added:

"As I always repeated, my friends, everything is negotiable except the destruction of Israel ... our peace plan is negotiable, with all its details."

Begin said the "differences that have arisen over Mr. Vance's statement have not annulled our positive attitude toward Mr. Atherton's effort ... "He is a desirable guest in Jerusalem."

Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton is due here next week to renew efforts to work out a declaration of peace principles between Israel and Egypt.

Atherton undertook the mediation, shuttling between Jerusalem and Cairo, after Israeli-Egyptian political and military negotiations broke down last month. The U.S. envoy returned to Washington two weeks ago to be on hand for Sadat's meeting with President Carter.

Agreement has been reported on several clauses of the declaration, but Israel and Egypt are believed divided on the question of Palestinian rights and the extent of Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands.

Two Union tables are still missing

It doesn't have the makings of a full-fledge crime wave, but two tables that were stolen from the K-State Union on February 6 still have not been found.

"They were two of these little cocktail tables at the end of the second floor concourse," said Walt Smith, director of the K-State Union.

According to Smith, there are few facts known about the theft. It was reported to Traffic and Security by an unidentified source. The license plate number of the car that the tables were put into was also reported.

"Over the years, we have not had much of a problem. Normally, we get them back."

"This is the first time this year," he said.

According to Smith, the Union occasionally loses cigarette stands, and more silverware has been taken from Food Services this year than in past years.

"Our employees know where everything is located. When a janitor notices something is gone, he reports it," Smith said.

Because of the many exits in the Union, it would be hard for each door to constantly be watched.

"Basically, the students and people using the building are our security," he said.

Every Man A Super Fan

They play in the Magic Palace

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The home court advantage has been around since the Romans and the Christians used to square off in the Coliseum, with the losers (always the Christians) being fed to the lions.

Now, 15 centuries later, the same advantage is found in the confines of K-State's Ahearn Field House, also known as the Magic Palace.

K-State fans cover all areas of the spectrum, ranging from well-dressed alumni to the average student who looks as if he had just come out of a Russian commune.

But whatever their appearance, Wildcat fans have long had a reputation as being one of the most boisterous and enthusiastic crowds in the country.

"We have an atmosphere that is as good, if not the best in the country," said Wildcat coach Jack Hartman.

AHEARN Field House, which has been criticized for its size and appearance over the past few years, remains a thorn in the side of opposing teams.

In past years, the success of visitors trying to win in Ahearn could be compared to trying to

"We try to get recruits to a game to show them how great the atmosphere here is," Hartman said. "It's hard to recreate and tell people how great the atmosphere really is without them seeing it."

STEVE SOLDNER, junior center from Farina, Illinois, made it to a Wildcat game hard to play in front of such a large crowd. It's a tremendous motivator, it psyches you up and you feel like you can do anything for them."

Dean Danner, Manhattan High graduate, also found the transition to be a big one.

"The first time in front of 11,000 fans is really an experience," Danner said. "You CURTIS REDDING, who nonchalantly admits he likes to play in front of the home crowd, said he tries to use it to his benefit.

"I try to let it help me in the right way," Redding said. "I definitely think the home crowd is worth a couple of points."

The Wildcat crowd, believe it or not, can hurt the home team in some situations.

"Our crowd is very inspiring, but sometimes we try too hard to please the crowd," Hartman said. "We get too emotional."

The players agree with Hartman.

"Coach Hartman tells us to concentrate on the game and not on the crowd," Danner said. "It can work for you and against you."

"I mentally try to block them out sometimes," Blackman said. "We try to use the crowd so that it works against them, and for us."

Ahearn Field House is the one place in the world I've been where a fan is a participant and directly affects the outcome of the game.

—Doug Herman, 1975 graduate in business pawn off Curtis Redding as being shy. It's almost an impossible task.

Recruiting, a drawback at K-State because of the size of Ahearn, is sometimes helped by the Purple Pride Freaks (males) and the Lavender Lovelies (females).

during his senior year in high school.

"I came here once on a recruiting trip and the crowd noise was unbelievable," Soldner said. "I saw it empty and full. The difference seemed like night and day."

"Until you get used to it, it's had to experience it the first time to get used to it."

"It's a lot louder here," said Rolando Blackman of the transition. "On every good play the crowd stands up and roars."

"It's not a yell. It's a roar. It really builds you up. It gets my adrenalin flowing," he said.

The bleacher bums in the corner

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

Call them the bleacher bums, sitting so high in the southeast corner of Ahearn Field House they almost need a rope ladder to get there and miner's hats to find their seats.

They're independent students who were too busy going to school to stand in line for good seats when reserve basketball season tickets were sold this fall.

For the Iowa State game, the bleacher bums were Terry Sippel, senior in veterinary medicine; Janice Sidwell, sophomore in architecture; Mark Runge, senior in architecture; Diane Sanders, graduate in education, Roger Vasconsells, senior in engineering technology; Martha Sanders, freshman in general, John Brady, who just received his doctorate in microbiology, and his wife Laraine.

EVEN THOUGH they're serious basketball fans, the humor of sitting in the worst seats in the house isn't lost on these fans.

"You don't have to worry about someone stealing your seat," John Brady said. Brady and his wife have been watching the 'Cats since '74 when they moved here from Southern Illinois University, but "this is the first time we've been (seated) this high."

"We're the only row in the whole place that has a seventh inning stretch," Runge said.

Runge commented on being removed from the sidelights of the game. "I'd like to have the cheerleaders come up here, to see if they're real or they're plastic."

"If things get bad, we can always yell for Iowa State," Sidwell said. "No one would notice."

Sidwell, a native of Syracuse, New York, became acquainted with K-State basketball when Syracuse University played the 'Cats in 1975. The game created a rivalry in her family as her father, a K-State graduate, backed the Wildcats.

BEING good fans, the bleacher bums don't miss many games, so the same faces are up in the corner for every game. All except for the face that sits next to Runge.

"He always brings somebody different," commented the others. "I even brought in a 12-year-old one time" Runge said, "because he was standing outside without a ticket."

"It's better than listening to it on the radio," Vasconsells said of his seat in the corner. "It's a snakepit no matter where you sit."

Can Wildcat fans make a difference in a game's outcome?

"Oh yeah," Vasconsells said. "There's a spirit that's more than just the guys playing."

His weirdness is Purple Pride

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

Before the K-State-KU game Saturday, one fan walked around the fieldhouse and talked basketball with anyone who cared to listen.

Dressed in a lumpy sweater, baggy plaid pants, a khaki green cap, sporting an unkempt gray beard and carrying a K-State flag, this fan wished K-State players good luck, showed people his Beat the Gayhawks button and even talked to UCLA's John Wooden.

This fan was cordially recognized as he meandered around the arena. He's called Einstein or Mr. Purple Pride or Spook.

But most know him as Weird Robert.

In six years he's seen more than 50 K-State football games. He hasn't missed a K-State Big Eight conference football road game since 1973. He's seen every K-State-KU game in person since 1972. And at one time, he was attempting to hitchhike to every K-State Big Eight basketball game while in school.

ROBERT came to K-State in the fall of 1972 after graduating from Farmingdale, a two year agriculture and technical college in New York.

Robert began to gain notoriety as a fan in 1974.

"In '74 I had a lot of difficulty," Robert said. "I had my head up my butt. The bottom fell out. It was bad, very bad."

"In order to escape, I went to home games and wore purple from head to toe. I waved my little flag and became a rabble-rouser."

"I really did act very peculiar. I'm belligerent and rowdy. I like action." The fans enjoyed his antics, Robert said.

"Most of the people are gone now, but still everybody knows me."

Being a notorious fan can have its advantages. For example, Robert, now a non-student working construction in Manhattan, was able to buy a non-reserved student ticket through friends.

IT CAN also have disadvantages.

"It's better than it used to be when a guy acts strange," he said. "When they don't understand somebody, they can say anything they damn well please."

"I'm not weird. I'm not loaded. I'm not a genius walking around."

Robert said he would use any article written about him as a sales pitch to athletic recruits to tell how devoted the crowd is.

"All recruits should think about this, about how much fun it is. Would they feel right playing against us, knowing how much our crowd would cheer for them if they played here?"

Robert considers himself a super fan, but he considers people like Rhode Island (Don Morrison, sophomore in agriculture) and Allen Rogers, senior in construction science, bigger fans than he is.

"They're worth more than I am at home games. I usually just sit there and watch."

Rogers and Robert told of how they slept in their cars at the Big Eight Tournament this year because they couldn't afford to stay anywhere.

To prove he had attended recent basketball games in Boulder, Colorado and Lincoln, Nebraska, Robert pulled out a dilapidated green billfold which bulged with dog-eared tickets.

"I've got four (tickets) from every fieldhouse in the Big Eight," he said.

Before the KU game Robert was incensed by an article that appeared in Sports Illustrated on the Jayhawk tradition.

"I'll admit KU has improved a little bit, but they don't deserve that much," he said.

AFTER the KU game Robert was talking to two boys. He fished two dice out of his pocket and summarized the game.

"When you throw dice there's three ways you can roll craps," he said. "You see this. This is snake eyes. And this (he formed the combination of one and two). And this is boxcars. K-State rolled craps all three ways today."

"First, by throwing bananas on the floor."

"Second, by not playing well."

"And third, by not cheering for our team when they were down."

Weird Robert took the loss to KU better than he thought he would.

Union enforces new policy for using recreation area

By JUDY WELTSCH
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Union began enforcing a new policy last week regarding the use of the Recreation Area by junior high and high school students.

The policy, written by Walt Smith, K-State Union director and Robert Yeeke, Union administrator, will be enforced for at least the remainder of the semester.

According to a statement issued by Smith, the Union's facilities are for K-State students, faculty, staff, alumni, guests and official guests of K-State.

The Union is open to people who are at least 18 years old. Those people under 18 may use the facilities if they are accompanied by their parents or another adult.

CHILDREN of students, faculty or staff may also use the Union if they have a parents' ID, indicating consent of the parents, and another piece of identification to prove the parent-child relationship.

Children with proper identifications may bring one guest.

Loitering and smoking by these children is prohibited in the Union.

The change in policy occurred because of fights between junior high school students at 9 p.m. Friday, Feb. 3. The fights occurred on the west and south sides of the Union.

"We began turning them away about 10 p.m. They weren't allowed in on Saturday or Sunday," Smith said.

IN THE PAST, the Union, especially on weekends, has become a gathering spot for junior high and high school students.

These students have created excessive noise, uncalled-for mess and litter and they have played games throughout the Union, Smith said.

"The last three weekends, the problems have been increasingly difficult to handle. Last weekend was it," he said.

Traffic woes head agenda; city to discuss mass transit

By CINDY IZZO
Collegian Reporter

The development of a downtown benefit district to create more parking space will be one of the proposals discussed at tonight's City Commission work session.

According to Les Rieger, acting city manager, the purpose of the work sessions, which are held the second and fourth week of each month, is to "provide background information to the city commissioners and the interested public."

Barbara Bloomberg, city planner, said the benefit district proposal, if passed by the commission, would tax people living in district to pay for the revenue bonds.

"The commission would create a certain benefit district area, come up with the money for the revenue bonds by taxing these people, then have these taxpayers in the benefit district pay a mil levy (one-tenth of a cent) to pay off the bonds," Bloomberg said.

A STUDY of the feasibility of mass transit for Manhattan by the Urban Mass Transit Authority (UMTA), a federal agency will also be discussed by the commissioners.

"There is a lot of federal money floating around just waiting to be grabbed," said Bloomberg. "I don't know exactly what the commission will discuss, but if the city is interested, they will probably study the mass transit issue."

Bloomberg said if the commissioners approve the mass transit study, they will probably study proposals to UMTA.

Bill Smith, consultant from the engineering firm of Van Doran, Hazard and Stallings, will report on downtown arterial traffic flow throughout Manhattan.

SMITH WILL point out certain traffic flows on the main arteries of the city, and will discuss making the major streets of Manhattan more efficient.

According to a Downtown Redevelopment Committee status report, if the commissioners approve the traffic and parking study, the city will move to acquire the Rock Island Railroad site as a right of way for a proposed southern artery.

According to Smith, the street would be built on the present Rock Island railroad line between Yuma and Pottawatomie Streets.

The commissioners also will consider the reappointment of member of the City's Downtown Redevelopment Advisory Committee.

HELP THESE STUDENTS STAY IN SCHOOL

We pay an ever increasing tuition with our hard-earned cash. But now we must help buy a new field-house for Alumni and other people to watch K-State basketball in, and the money tree is about dead. Don't throw your money away. Vote NO Wed., Feb. 15, in the Union or Library. Bring your fee card.

CINDY THOMAS FOR STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

MY CONCERNS:

- Quality Education: Students need to view themselves as consumers purchasing an education.
- Parking Problem: A comprehensive plan including a possible shuttle bus system is required.
- New Fieldhouse: Students' concerns and opinions about the need for a new field-house should be acted upon.
- Minority Awareness: It takes a new outlook on the part of the administration to help solve the problems of minority students.
- Campus Security: The level of awareness needs to be raised concerning the problem of rape and assault.

"I think that there are definite changes that need to be made to the large problems concerning students on this campus. We, as students, need to view ourselves as consumers purchasing the best educational experience possible. I ask for your support as I campaign for the office of Student Body President."

MY QUALIFICATIONS:

- Senate Chairperson/Student Body Vice-President 1977-78
- Senate Affairs Committee Chairperson (SGA Standing Committee) 1976-77

U.S. military regional finals brings boxing to Fort Riley

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

The crowd buzzed as the house lights dimmed. Two clangs of the bell and the first combatants climbed into the ring.

So started the U.S. Army Forces Command (FORSCOM) western regional boxing finals in King Field House at Fort Riley Friday night.

The finals capped a week of eliminations in which 79 fighters from nine bases west of the Mississippi competed for the chance to qualify for the All-Army team.

Pat Nappi, coach of the Army boxing squad, said 14 of those fighters were chosen from the eastern region, 11 from Europe and two from the U.S. forces in Korea.

WHEN THE team is chosen they will meet boxers from the other armed forces in an inter-service match tentatively scheduled for the beginning of April.

The match was conducted according to Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) rules. Fights consisted of three, three-minute rounds.

In Olympic boxing, which uses the same rules, points are scored by the quality of the punches thrown; not by the damage they inflict on the opponent. The referee can stop the fight at any time if he believes the fighter will be injured seriously.

The first fight in the lightweight division (106 pound class), matched John Emerson, Fort Riley, and Humberto Dominquez, Fort Carson, Colo..

EMERSON was received by the over-capacity crowd with cheers and applause but when the fight started Dominquez dominated.

With 30 seconds to go in the first round Dominquez hit Emerson with a punch that put him on the canvas. Emerson was up almost immediately but according to the rules had to take a mandatory eight count before continuing.

Seconds into the second round Dominquez attacked Emerson with a flurry of lefts and rights that prompted Emerson's corner to throw in the towel, the signal of surrender.

The referee stopped the bout and awarded Dominquez a technical knockout.

The flyweight (112 pound class) final was also short with Lewis

Sports

Jackvony, Fort Lewis, Wash., knocking out Arthur Sojot, Hawaii, in less than one round.

JACKVONY scored a technical knock down early in the round which requires an eight count. He scored two more knock downs in the round and the referee called the fight with two seconds left to avoid further injury to Sojot.

Danny Mendoza, Fort Hood, Texas, faced a member of last year's All-Army team, Dario Medrano, Fort Ord, Calif., in the bantamweight (119 pound class) final.

The closely matched fighters battled for three rounds, both scoring solid punches. At one point Mendoza staggered Medrano with a right cross that drew "oohs and aahs" from the crowd. But Medrano fought back and won by a decision.

The middleweight fight pitted Melvin Douglas, Alaska, against Ronald Causby, Fort Riley.

THE MATCH was characterized by hard punching with Causby, Marciano-style, stubbornly advancing on Douglas. Douglas however stayed Causby's attacks which resulted in furious infighting.

The fight appeared to be even going into the final round, but Douglas then took control and kept Causby away with long reaching jabs. Causby doggedly stalked Douglas but took more punishment than he dealt out.

Causby came out of the fight with a swollen eye and Douglas with the decision.

The finale of the evening featured the big men—the heavyweights — and the crowds murmured in awe when the gargantuans stepped into the ring.

Lucious Kirkley, Fort Lewis, and Frank Washington, Fort Carson, met in the middle of the ring at the bell and slugged hard at each other.

Kirkley was awarded the decision.

The Manhattan Adult Learning Center will be offering a class in English as a second Language for spouses of enrolled University students.

The class is free of charge and will be held Tues. and Thurs. evenings from 7-9.

Young Dickey to join Wildcat pack

K-State announced the signing Monday of blue chip quarterback Darrell Dickey, son of Wildcat head coach Jim Dickey.

Young Dickey, from Chapel Hill (N.C.) High School, inked a Big Eight Conference letter along with fellow North Carolinian, Kenneth Sigmon, a standout linebacker from Sanderson High in Raleigh.

The announcement of Darrell Dickey's decision ended two months of speculation beginning at the time of his father's appointment as K-State's coach.

K-State's defensive coordinator Gary Darnell inked the pair.

Dickey, a 6-2, 180 pounder, gained North Carolina all-state and all-East honors in 1977. He was a co-captain in the recent North-South Carolina all-star game, and twice was an all-conference selection. He was named back of the year in the Big Seven during his senior year.

'Cat women play CMSU

Riding a five-game winning streak, their longest of the season, the K-State's women's basketball team travels to Warrensburg, Missouri tonight to meet Central Missouri State.

The Wildcats boosted their season mark to 16-12 over the weekend, edging the Iowa State Cyclones, 66-64, in overtime.

Eileen Feeney continues to lead the 'Cats in scoring, averaging 14.1 points a game. Beth Boggs stands second in scoring with an 11.5 average and heads K-State's rebounding efforts with a 7.6 average.

TAMI JOHNSON, a 5-7 junior, will return to the starting line-up tonight after missing better than half the season with a knee injury.

Central Missouri State stands 14-8 on the year after beating Wichita State, 71-47, and losing to Kansas, 63-53, during the past week.

The Jennies are led by 5-9 sophomore Kathy Anderson, who leads the team in scoring and rebounding, averaging 13.6 points and 8.7 rebounds an outing. Candy Rangler, a 6-5 senior, is averaging 8.2 rebounds a game.

of his passes for 11 touchdowns and 1,340 yards his junior year at Chapel Hill High. As a senior, he completed 54 percent for 13 touchdowns and 1,460 yards. He also converted all twelve PAT's he attempted.

NBC to televise game

Big Eight Commissioner Chuck Neinas said Monday that the scheduled regional telecast of the game between K-State and Missouri set for Saturday has not been changed as had been rumored.

Reports circulated, after the K-State-Kansas clash Saturday, that NBC officials had insisted they not be held to their agreement to televise the K-State-Missouri game due to the unruly crowd display that disrupted television coverage during the game with the University of Kansas.

"It is scheduled to be televised," Neinas said.

"I think that everyone is embarrassed about what transpired on Saturday," he said.

Regents request fund-hike to improve education quality

TOPEKA (AP)—The chairman of the Kansas Board of Regents asked the Ways and Means committees of the Kansas Legislature Monday to support "the necessary funds to maintain and improve the quality of public higher education."

The statement by Walter Hiersteiner of Kansas City was read to a joint meeting of the House and Senate panels by another regent, M.P. Reeve of Garden City.

John Conard, executive officer for the Regents, said Hiersteiner had been hospitalized for a checkup at the University of Kansas Medical Center after complaining of not feeling well. Reeve said Hiersteiner's statement represented the thoughts of the entire board.

"We have requested funds for what we consider the bare minimum necessary level of salary increases for faculty and other unclassified personnel," Hiersteiner said.

HE SAID the requested 7 percent increase would be awarded by the heads of the state universities on the basis of individual merit.

"With inflation relentlessly taking its toll, 7 percent will do very little, indeed, toward elevating the economic status of our faculties," the Hiersteiner statement said. "Judiciously administered, however, it will surely prevent the loss of many of our most outstanding professors."

The chairman called the attention to two specific requests by the Regents:

—$30,000 to help Fort Hays, Emporia and Pittsburg State universities achieve "a proper ratio" of classified personnel to support faculty and administration.

—$713,351 for a graduate student fee waiver plan for those who are teaching assistants.

Student fee increase of '77 proves vital to Union's $4.4 million budget

By JUDY WELTSCH
Collegian Reporter

The student activity fee increase initiated for the K-State Union during fall 1977 has become a vital part of the total operation of the Union.

The Union is receiving $12.50 from each full-time student and a new fee of $6 from each part-time student per semester.

"We know they've helped. There's no doubt about it," Walt Smith, Union director said.

"Fall and spring semester student fees represented 8.2 percent of total income as compared to 5.3 percent last year when the fee was lower," he said.

THE BUDGET appropriation from fall and spring semester student fees was $361,932.

"Cumulative through the past six months, our income is up more than we anticipated," Smith said. The Union's income is up over

Toll-free number offers information to undergraduates

K-State has installed a toll-free telephone number for students interested in the University's undergraduate program.

The number, 800-432-8270, began operation Jan. 1 and is increasing in use, according to Ellsworth M. Gerritz, dean of admissions and records and coordinator of the answering service.

"We're running about 10 to 15 calls a day," Dick Elkins, director of admissions and records.

Use of the number is expected to increase as the information is received in Kansas communities.

News of the free number has been sent just recently to high schools and community colleges, Elkins said.

The system costs K-State $200 per month for 10 hours of actual use. There is a charge of $18 for each additional hour, Gerritz said.

Staff members answer calls on weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Hours are extended on Tuesdays and Thursdays until 8:30 p.m.

Calls made when no staff member is on duty will be recorded by an automatic answering service. "The queries will be answered with either a personal phone call or letter," Gerritz said.

Although the purpose of the free number is for undergraduate programs, persons have called about veterinary medicine, graduate school and other information. Such calls are noted by the staff members and the information is relayed to appropriate departments.

$150,000 from the estimated budget for the first six months.

Smith said that after paying for the cost of goods sold "our gross profit is up $82,000," Smith said.

"We haven't spent as much on utilities as we anticipated," he said.

According to Smith, through a reduction in labor in the bookstore and food service areas, labor expenses are $34,000 less than the anticipated budget.

Critical expense items for Food Service are labor and food.

"On the average, for every dollar we take in we pay 37 cents for raw food and 46.6 cents for labor, just within Food Service," he said.

"Each department in the Union prepares its own budget on a monthly basis," he said. The budget is for the fiscal year, July through June.

ADJUSTMENTS on the budgets are based on past experience.

During the year of 1975-1976, the Union netted $2,000 and it netted $33,000 from 1976-77.

"Our estimated budget for this year is a $4.4 million for income, $2.2 million for cost of goods sold, $1.3 million for salaries and wages and $900,000 for other operating expenses, with estimated net income of $37,000," Smith said.

Union sales for the month of December were one-third over the budgeted amount.

COMMODITY MERCHANDISING

As Close To The Pits As You Can Get . . .

The trading floor of the Grain Exchange is called the "pit" where fortunes are made and lost every day. The commodity merchandiser works on the fringe of the pits, buying and selling grain and other commodities in the cash and futures markets.

As a Commodity Merchandiser, you deal with millions of dollars every month. You know commodity markets, understand all modes of transportation, know how to hedge. You're decisive, aggressive, autonomous. You're responsible for making a profit. So you're well paid and quickly promoted.

General Mills is a $3 billion dollar corporation. We need Commodity Merchandisers. We're not looking for just anybody. But we might be looking for you. Leadership qualities and entrepreneurial inclinations are a must.

We'll train you on the job and, if you have the ability to learn quickly, a desire to thrive in an environment that's always changing, the willingness to succeed or fail on the basis of your own decisions—you could have a bright career ahead of you. A career that offers the opportunity to advance into levels of management in many areas of the corporation.

So, if you want to be close to the pit, please indicate your interest in this position to the Placement office within the next week. We will be interviewing at Kansas State University March 7, 1978.

Magazines fire up marijuana campaign

TOPEKA (AP)—The debate over decriminalization of marijuana shifted Monday to a bitter squabble over lobbying expenses with each side accusing the other of mounting expensive propaganda campaigns.

Charles Schwep, executive director of the American Council on Marijuana, said the proponents were financed largely by Playboy and High Times, a magazine which reports on drugs and the drug culture.

Schwep said his group had the health of the nation's young people at heart, not the potential sales of illegal drug dealers and paraphernalia merchants. He urged members of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee not to approve a bill that would reduce the penalty for first possession of small amounts of pot.

Keith Stroup, director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), described the accusations as an attempt to cloud the real issues. He told reporters at a news conference later that "there is nothing sinister" in his group getting a $40,000 grant from the Playboy Foundation or $5,000 last year from High Times.

NORML is not related to either group, he said, and has an annual budget of about $450,000, most of it coming from individual contributions. Further, he accused opponents of spending a great deal of money by flying experts into Topeka from New York and Canada to speak against the bill.

Last week, William Craven, Kansas NORML director, denied rumors the organization was spending between $1,000 and $1,600 for social functions aimed at winning legislative approval of the bill. Craven called the state chapter "a shoestring operation, and a very thin shoestring at that."

The organization spent about $250 for a party in Lawrence and made less than $100 on a fund raiser in Topeka, he said. Stroup's expenses in Kansas totaled less than $100, he said.

In contrast, the Kansas Peace Officers Association spent $1,600 in travel expenses and lodging for three experts brought to Topeka for hearings Monday before the committee, according to Topeka Police Chief Fred Howard.

GABRIEL NAHAS, a professor at Columbia University, led the opponents who warned that chronic, long-term marijuana use leads to respiratory problems, inhibited cell division and, possibly, genetically transferred birth defects.

"It is not a harmless drug," he said. "It is a substance that causes a great potential harm, especially to the very future of this country. If the country is to remain sound, if it is to retain its position in the world, it must preserve the integrity of the functioning of the brain and ability to reproduce."

In response to a question, Nahas said he felt regular use of marijuana was more harmful than use of alcohol and tobacco.

Stroup admitted that marijuana may be unhealthy, but quoted a Department of Health, Education and Welfare report saying that it was no more harmful than liquor.

Stroup said he was advocating decriminalization, not legalization, of possession of small amounts of marijuana. He said too much time and money was being spent by authorities on marijuana offenses.

UNDER THE House-passed bill, first-time possession of less than an ounce of the drug would be punishable by a $100 fine. The penalty for subsequent convictions is stiffer. Currently, state law permits a $2,500 fine and one year in prison.

"We don't want the government coming into the privacy of everybody's life and telling them what they can smoke and what they can't smoke," Stroup said.

He challenged the assertion by opponents that their top priority is the health of young people.

"When you are arrested, they don't call in a doctor," he said. "They are not concerned with your health. They lock you up in a cell with people who rob banks and murder and rape people."

Also speaking in favor of a bill was William Albott, director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation. Other opponents included Keith Cowan, former consultant to the Canadian government.

Car ban puts Boston back on snowy feet

BOSTON (AP)—Police blocked highway exit ramps as Boston reopened for post-blizzard business Monday with a unique experiment in urban commuting—a carless rush hour.

All but a few suburban workers were forbidden to drive into the snow-weary city. Stores and offices reopened after the biggest storm in southern New England's history paralyzed the area a week ago.

Downtown streets were free of cars as huge crowds emerged from subway stations. Factory workers and corporate chairmen rubbed elbows on over-stuffed trains and buses during slow, claustrophobic rides into the city.

"It was extremely crowded," said Kenneth Campbell, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority. "The trains were crammed to the gills, shoulder-to-shoulder and belly-to-belly."

Gov. Michael Dukakis banned all but essential traffic in Boston while the city cleaned up from the blizzard that dropped 27 inches of snow.

MEANWHILE, officials worried about another storm approaching from the west. But, the National Weather Service said the Boston area would escape with "a chance of occasional light snow" on Tuesday.

Usually bumper-to-bumper downtown streets were jammed with work-bound pedestrians forced off unshoveled sidewalks. Whistle-blowing Army Military Police tried to keep the pedestrians and bus and taxi traffic separated.

Exit ramps on Boston's major highways were blocked by police who turned back all drivers except those with proper credentials, including doctors, reporters and utility workers.

"Some people gave us a lot of argument," said Raymond DiRusso, a motor vehicles inspector at a downtown roadblock. "Everybody thinks he's got an important job. We told them to get back on the expressway and keep heading south."

Another city hard hit by the storm, Providence, R.I., enforced a similar driving ban Monday. Police there reported that some commuters parked illegally on the highways and walked down the ramps to work.

Driving in other parts of New England was about normal. In Boston, about 500,000 people normally use the state-run trains and buses each day, but a transit official estimated that Monday's load could reach nearly 1 million.

'Beat your wife' billboards generate abuse controversy

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)—The billboards blazed "Beat Your Wife" in huge letters. In smaller letters, the signs added, "Go Bowling."

The Bowling Proprietors Association was trying to catch the eyes of potential bowlers. But what it generated instead was a controversy with the Spouse Abuse Center, which provides shelter and counseling for victims of abuse.

Carole Morse, director of the center at a YWCA, said that when she saw the billboard, "I almost cracked up my car...."

"This is just the sort of humor we have to stop," she said. "I think it is just the kind of mentality that makes this (wife abuse) the largest unreported crime."

L.A. "Sonny" Frantz, president of the bowling association, said, "This has been our first experience with billboards, and it might be our last."

"We meant 'beat' in the competitive sense," he said. "It means take her up to the bowling lanes and show her who's boss."

To appease the protesters, Frantz said sign painters will go from billboard to billboard, crossing out the word "Wife" and scrawling the word "Husband" in its place.

Morse has sent a letter to the bowling association airing her objections to the billboards.

Frantz said in addition to Morse's letter, he has received two telephone calls objecting to the billboards.

He added, though, that there are no plans to retire the dozen billboards spread around Jefferson County sooner than the one month originally planned.

MIKE—THANKS for being the big brother you are. I hope you and the rest of the guys at the Fiji house have a happy Valentine's Day. Love from your little sis, Beth. (98)

PETE—SIX months has gone by fast, but you know the saying "When the going gets tough, the tough get going!" Happy Valentine's Day, I love you. Re-pets. (98)

TO THE guy who's just regular. Be my valentine. I love you bunches. Mary. (98)

N.G. (NEAT Guy)—I think I'm in love! If you'll be my Valentine, I've got an offer you can't refuse! C-squared. (98)

STUCKE-WICZ: CIE la guerre, but Happy Valentine's anyway. (98)

TOMITHY BABY Eyes: There is one part of myself I'm satisfied with—you. Did I forget to thank you for all you've given me? It's more than you realize. P.S. Don't be surprised, I told you I'd do it. (98)

PAM HERTICH: Beautiful memories of the past spill into the present where love now is told, and bring hope for joy as future love unfolds. A lifetime seems so short a time to share, and feelings make these next few years an eternity to bear. Today is yesterday and tomorrow and love is forever. Happy Valentine's Day. My love, Dave. (98)

MANY THANKS, snowballs and screwdrivers to Joker, Mongo, the A-Tent, the Silverware Tent, the Tent I broke the zipper in, the Tent that gave me the Cherry Brandy, Century 21, the Bell Ringer, the Fake Rollcallers and all of the other crazy KSU fans that froze their buns off last week! I loved almost every minute of it! Drunkenly Yours, O.J. (98)

TO AERIAL: Happy Valentine's my Itty Bitty Dickens. Luv Ya. Pooky. (98)

TO MY sweetheart who always gives me a buzz. Happy Valentine's Day. With Love, Juliet. (98)

LITTLE WOMAN: Happy Valentine's Day. I am looking forward to tonight. Don't forget about my 170 points I earned. Your Little Man. (98)

TAMI #12—I was going to give you a personal invitation to our function tonight but I found out that you will probably be out of town. Darn. Why not take a chance and let's do something else, anything sometime? Good luck at CMS. From an admiring fan. TED! (98)

Canada will blast Russia for $1 million in damages

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Canada's foreign minister said Monday his government will ask the Soviet Union to pay more than $1 million as the cost of recovering radioactive debris from a Russian nuclear satellite that fell on the Canadian tundra.

External Affairs Secretary Donald Jamieson also said the Canadians will demand the United Nations adopt "a stronger regime" to prevent space accidents such as the disintegration of the satellite, Cosmos 954, on Jan. 24 over sparsely populated northern Canada.

Jamieson said Canada has officially concluded the radioactive metal objects found in the Northwest Territories were "indeed debris from a Russian satellite" and has so informed the Soviet Union and U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim—the first steps toward demands for compensation.

Since the spy satellite fell from orbit, Canadian and U.S. scientific teams have been searching a 50,000-square mile area for radioactive fragments. Canada has recovered several pieces of the satellite near and east of the Great Slave Lake. A few lightly radioactive chunks were found Sunday near the Indian community of Snowdrift and were being shipped to search headquarters at Namao military base.

JAMIESON told reporters after meeting with Waldheim that Canada has spent more than $1 million in the search so far and the total probably will be "substantially higher when the exercise is completed."

Canada's claim for reimbursement would be the first test of an obscure U.N. treaty which obligates a launching nation to pay the expenses of locating debris from manmade objects that fall from orbit.

The Soviet Union, Canada and the United States are parties to the pact, the 1967 Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space.

Knopp will sponsor proposal for gradual tuition increases

A proposal to gradually raise the tuition each year instead of one large increase every four years is being sponsored by Ted Knopp, student body presidential candidate.

Knopp said the Board of Regents has a policy that students should pay for 25 percent of their education, but only raise the tuition once every four years because that way few students face more than one increase during their college years.

"I propose a tuition lid to limit tuition increase 8 to 10 percent per year," Knopp said.

Knopp said the problem with the system is students are able to absorb the increases gradually, but unable to face a big one that comes as a surprise.

"The whole thrust of this proposal is that students would be able to plan their educational expenses for the next year," Knopp said.

Knopp said last semester's increase was $50 which amounted to a 25 percent increase over last year. Knopp's proposal would provide enough of an increase to cover inflation but wouldn't be over 10 percent a year.

Knopp said he expects the Board of Regents to be receptive to his idea. If they aren't, he plans on enlisting the aid of Student Senate and student body presidents from the regent schools.

"Tuition increases are a part of our life and until we can get the policy of paying 25 percent changed, we have to look for a way to make that 25 percent as painless as possible," Knopp said.

U.S. wraps up Mideast sales pact

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter, in a major policy shift, has decided to allow the sale of warplanes to Egypt for the first time, while supplying Israel with more advanced jet fighters, the State Department announced Tuesday.

An arms package headed for Capitol Hill also tickets some five dozen of the U.S. Air Force's prime fighter, the F-15, for oil-rich Saudi Arabia. Congress, which has 50 days to veto any of the items, is certain to question both the Egyptian and Saudi shipments.

Rep. Lester Wolff (D-N.Y.) immediately announced he will introduce a resolution to veto the sale of F-15s to the Saudis.

In announcing the planned sale, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said they "will not alter the basic military balance in the region." Vance said the sales would be carried out over a period of several years.

HE SAID the U.S. commitment to Israel's security remains firm and that Carter's decision reflected Israel's needs. As for the Egyptian arms sales, he said the United States has a basic interest in responding to Egypt's "legitimate needs."

And Vance paid tribute to Saudi Arabia, noting its "immense importance in promoting a course of moderation" in Middle East affairs and in petroleum policy. "We believe their request is reasonable and in our interest to fulfill," he said.

Meanwhile, a key Israeli legislator argued to U.S. congressmen that their approval of American jetfighters for Egypt would risk destabilizing the Middle East and jeopardizing peace.

Moshe Arens, chairman of the Israeli Parliament's committee on foreign affairs and defense, said the planes would give surrounding Arab countries a commanding air superiority over Israel. Arens made the remarks in a briefing to the House Armed Services Committee.

Egypt, which has fought four wars with Israel in less than 30 years, has never been granted lethal American weapons. In the past it was limited to purchasing such items as cargo planes.

IN DECIDING to sell some 50 F-15s to Egypt, Carter said (See CARTER, page 20)

Closeup of arms sale

WASHINGTON (AP)—The F-16 and F-15 warplanes that President Carter wants to sell to Israel, but not to Egypt, have much longer combat ranges than the F-5Es that are proposed for sale to Egypt.

The Israelis also would have bombing capabilities with the F-16 that the administration proposes selling to Israel, but not to Egypt or Saudi Arabia.

Here is a sketch of the three planes:

F-15 EAGLE: Proposed for sale to Israel and Saudi Arabia, it is designed for dogfights rather than bombing. It has an operations radius of 900 miles when carrying extra fuel, meaning it can fly 1,800 miles roundtrip.

F-16: Proposed for sale only to Israel, it is used for both bombing and aerial combat. It has a combat radius of more than 500 miles, according to official U.S. Air Force figures. However, sources say the plane has an operating radius of 600 to 800 miles, depending upon whether it is on a bombing mission or in aerial combat.

F-5E: Proposed for sale only to Egypt, it is principally a fighter. It can be used in attack missions. The plane has a combat radius of 250 miles for bombing and 300 miles for aerial combat.

Carter adds his presidential weight to coal battle

By The Associated Press
As National Guardsmen assembled to convoy coal in Indiana and automakers warned of layoffs soon, President Carter called for both sides in the nationwide coal strike to negotiate at the White House and warned of "stronger measures" if that doesn't end the strike.

Asked if the "stronger measures" would include invoking the Taft-Hartley Act, Carter said that would be "one of my options." He could order miners back to work for an 80-day cooling off period.

Carter said he wanted "to end the present stalemate" in the 71-day-old strike. "The negotiations at the White House must be viewed as a final opportunity for the bargaining process to work.

"If it does not, I will have no choice but to resort to stronger measures," the president said.

United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller said he is ready "to negotiate at any time—the sooner the better." There was no immediate comment from the industry.

PRIOR to Carter's announcement, Labor Secretary Ray Marshall expressed optimism that bargaining would resume this week. Then Joseph Brennan, president of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, asked the UMW bargaining council to review the contract it rejected last Sunday.

A UMW spokesman said the request, in a letter to Miller, "surprised and shocked the union." He said the coal operators were "playing games."

The miners have ignored three Taft-Hartley court orders since 1948, and Miller said in an interview on the NBC-TV "Today" show that an injunction would not prove effective.

In Indiana, where mandatory power cutbacks have been ordered, Gov. Otis Bowen activated 350 National Guardsmen to help move coal in truck convoys led by riot-trained state troopers.

JAMES SMITH, Bowen's executive assistant for police matters, said three utilities, which he would not name, requested the escorts because of "an alarming amount of violence" in the coal fields.

In northeastern Ohio, Ohio Edison Co. staved off cutbacks for a few days by buying power from outside the state, but still estimated it would have to cut industry power usage 50 percent by Feb. 21.

Mix creates deadly gasses, killing 7 in Chicago tannery

CHICAGO (AP)—A chemical pumped into the wrong vats mixed with acid already in the vats and created a cloud of poisonous gas that swept through a tannery Tuesday, killing seven persons and sickening 28 others, officials said.

Firefighters said they found "an eerie scene" at the plant, with workers keeled over in their work areas.

Authorities said the accident occurred at 8:10 a.m., while shifts were changing at the block-long Horween Leather Co. plant. A total of 176 persons were in the building at the time.

The plant is two miles northwest of downtown Chicago.

Of those taken to hospitals, most suffered nausea and vomiting. Fourteen persons were admitted, four in critical condition.

Conrad Dziewulski, a Chicago Environmental Control official, said a liquid chemical containing sulfur was brought to the tannery in a tank truck and "erroneously pumped" into storage tanks containing acid.

He said the combination created hydrogen sulfide, a flammable, poisonous gas that smells like rotten eggs.

Dziewulski said the chemicals mixed in open-topped wooden storage tanks in the plant's basement and the gas quickly spread.

Firefighters entering the plant had to wear gas masks. Authorities said there apparently was a small explosion in the basement but most or all of the deaths and injuries came from inhaling the gas.

Willie Gates, a worker, said about 10 persons collapsed in his area.

"The foreman told us to get out of there, then he passed out," Gates said.

Slip-up by fans at KU game won't affect future telecasts

By JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

Last Saturday's banana throwing incident during the K-State-KU game will not affect future telecasts of Wildcat games, according to George Gallup, TVS official.

Reports that NBC officials said they would never again televise K-State games appear to be unfounded. Gallup called the stories ridiculous and said the situation had been "blown completely out of proportion."

"I was surprised by the reports that I was angry about the incident," Gallup said when contacted in his New York City office. "I didn't talk to any K-State officials after the game. I was in a hurry to catch a plane and perhaps that was construed as anger."

GALLUP SAID TVS expects a certain amount of trouble when such intense rivals as K-State and KU meet, but expressed confidence K-State officials will do their best to discourage and prevent future disruptive actions.

"It's an intense rivalry and the fans get excited," Gallup said. "But it's an exciting game and generates a lot of interest in that region. I see no reason why we wouldn't televise next year's (K-State-KU) game."

Gallup did say that NBC and TVS were concerned about going fifteen minutes over their allotted time.

"We have regular meetings to discuss problems," Gallup said, "and we try to eliminate them from future telecasts. But we and NBC realize things like that happen in intense rivalries. We just hope it could be controlled in the future."

Commission studies traffic woes, solutions

By KAREN VINING
and PERYN COMINSKY
Collegian Reporters

A representative from the consulting firm studying the southern arterial and the downtown traffic and parking problems presented preliminary plans at Manhattan's City Commission meeting last night.

The Downtown Redevelopment Committee (DRC) has a letter of intent signed by 51 percent of the downtown property owners that "are willing to participate in (the formation of) a special district" for downtown parking, City Planner Gary Stith said.

Stith said the Kansas State Department of Transportation encouraged commissioners to participate in a mass transit study.

"All they need from us is the letter of intent," Stith said.

This would put the city on the department's budget for receiving funds for the study, he said.

Once the grant is offered, that does not mean that the city has to accept it, Stith said.

The reappointment of the members of the DRC was postponed until Stith could check with committee members to see if any wanted to resign or any that should be removed.

The reappointment will be discussed at the March 7 commission meeting.

IN OTHER business, the commission tabled the request to annex 36.93 acres of land north of Kimball and east of Browning and its rezoning until Feb. 28 meeting.

The commission voted to table the issue because opponents of the annexation were not ready to present their case.

The commission also considered amendments to the city's dog control ordinance.

The amendments would raise the license fee for non-neutered dogs from $5 to $10. As an incentive to dog owners to neuter their animals the $2 license fee for neutered animals would be eliminated.

In redrafting the ordinance, City Attorney Ed Horne will add a provision calling for a mandatory second fine for strayed dogs. Commissioner Robert Linder suggested that the fine be levied on the second offense it is occurs within one calendar year of the first.

The amended ordinance also will provide that the provision concerning dogs barking excessively can be enforced all day.

Panama treaty opponents concede a shortage of votes

WASHINGTON (AP)—One of the leading groups trying to defeat the Panama Canal treaty in the Senate conceded Tuesday it lacks the 34 votes needed to reject the pact.

The group, the Conservative Caucus, announced a new campaign directed at 12 undecided senators.

Howard Phillips, executive director of the self-styled "new right" organization, said only 22 senators are likely to vote against the treaty.

Phillips said his group will hold a "Keep Our Canal" dinner in the Canal Zone Feb. 21, followed by rallies there the next day.

The campaign to apply conservative pressure on senators features an "emergency package" mailed last week to 200,000 Conservative Caucus members telling them that "nearly two-thirds of the members of the Senate have concluded that they have more to fear from the vested interests pushing the canal surrender and $80 million per year payoff than they have to fear from you."

THE LETTER asks members to sign a pledge card and mail it to their senators. The card pledges the sender "never again to vote for any elected official who supports the surrender of U.S. sovereign jurisdiction and control over the American Canal and Zone..."

Phillips identified the "doubtful dozen" senators against whom the mail campaign is aimed as: Richard Schweiker (R-Pa.), Malcolm Wallop (R-Wyo.), Richard Lugar (R-Ind.), Jennings Randolph (D-W.Va.), William Roth (R-Del.), Sam Nunn (D-Ga.), Herman Talmadge (D-Ga.), Russell Long (D-La.), Eugene Burdick (D-N.D.), Henry Bellmon (R-Okla.), Howard Cannon (D-Nev.) and J. Bennett Johnston (D-La.).

The 22 senators Phillips said are expected to vote against the treaty were identified as James Allen (D-Ala.), Ted Stevens (D-Alaska), Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), James McClure (R-Idaho), Bob Dole (R-Kan.), Robert Griffin (R-Mich.), James Eastland (D-Miss.), John Stennis (D-Miss.), Carl Curtis (R-Neb.), Paul Laxalt (R-Nev.), Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), Milton Young (R-N.D.), Dewey Bartlett (R-Okla.), Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), John Tower (R-Tex.), Jake Garn (R-Utah), Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), Harry Byrd (I-Va.), William Scott (R-Va.), Clifford Hansen (R-Wyo.), Harrison Schmitt (R-N.M.) and Pete Domenici (R-N.M.).

MOST OF those listed as "doubtful" by the Conservative Caucus termed themselves uncommitted or leaning against ratification in a Senate survey by The Associated Press more than a week ago.

Soviets pitch to Philippines to replace planned U.S. reactor

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—President Ferdinand Marcos' wife said Tuesday the Soviet Union has offered to replace a planned U.S.-built nuclear plant whose design and financing arrangements are now being questioned by the Americans.

Imelda Marcos, one of her husband's chief advisers, made the disclosure as a U.S. scientists' group which leveled the latest blast at the power project, whose main developer is the American firm Westinghouse International.

The Union of Concerned Scientists said the design for the 620-megawatt, $1.1 billion plant 45 miles northwest of Manila is unreliable and probably unsafe. Foundation work has begun on the project, scheduled for completion in the early 1980s.

U.S. news reports last month implied irregularities in the financial arrangements for the plant, saying Marcos' golfing partner Herminio Disini made millions of dollars on the deal as Westinghouse's representative and as owner of several companies with subcontracts.

WESTINGHOUSE and Disini, who is also the husband of a cousin of Mrs. Marcos, denied any wrongdoing.

Mrs. Marcos told The Associated Press on Tuesday that Soviet Ambassador Valerian E. Michaelov offered to replace the Westinghouse plant last month the day after an angry Marcos threatened to cancel the U.S. deal because of the negative reports.

Michaelov offered her "a complete plant, even a reactor, to replace the Westinghouse one. He even offered to help us develop our uranium resources," Mrs. Marcos said.

She said her husband has not decided whether to accept the Russian offer. An aide to Michaelov said the ambassador would have no comment.

Daniel F. Ford, executive director of the Union of Concerned Scientists, said Tuesday that the financial questions about the plant are "all trivial."

"What they should be worried about is whether the thing will work, and whether it will do it safely," Ford said.

Cut-rate licenses no Valentine hit

VIROQUA, Wis. (AP) — Marriage licenses went for half price Tuesday at the Vernon County Courthouse, as they do every Valentine's Day.

"Unprecedented public acceptance and interest again leaves me no choice but to repeat by very popular and eagerly awaited annual bargain event—the February Valentine's Day half-price clearance sale on marriage licenses," said County Clerk Roger Novy.

Novy cut the price for a license from $5 to $2.50, with an additional $1 "doorbuster's special" discount for couples applying between 8:30 a.m. and 9 a.m.

The county clerk, who has been offering the Valentine's Day special for about a dozen years, says only a few couples usually take advantage of the bargain rate.

UN CHIEN ANDALOU

DIRECTORS: SALVADOR DALI AND LUIS BUNUEL 1929

Possibly, the most avant-garde film in history, UN CHIEN ANDALOU was made to satirize the pretensions and formalities of the avant-garde films themselves. The film is an attempt at pre-surrealism, a work of art created entirely from the subconscious. The film is constructed of a string of bizarre and grotesque scenes, including one in which an eye is sliced with a razor and another where corpses of dead donkeys are dragged through a room.

Bunuel also directed the Academy Award winner film "The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie" and the year's foreign film hit "That Obscure Object of Desire."

BLOOD OF A POET

DIRECTED BY JEAN COCTEAU 1930

Considered to be one of the most important examples of the avant-garde school of cinema, 'Poet' was Cocteau's first use of film as a medium of expression, or as he puts it, 'A realistic documentary composed of unreal happenings. Built around the central character of a poet who 'lives what he creates...' the effects, incidents and symbols of 'Blood' were used in Cocteau's later films, among them, 'Orpheus,' so associated did they become with Orpheus.

Mrs. Humphrey undecided

MINNEAPOLIS—U.S. Sen. Muriel Humphrey says she needs more time to decide whether to run for the four years left in the Senate term of her late husband, Hubert Humphrey.

Humphrey told a news conference Tuesday she will decide before the start of congressional district conventions of Minnesota's Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party April 23.

"I want to do what I feel is right. It will take some time ... I need more time for a proper decision," she said. "I've only been there five days. That's much too fast."

Humphrey was appointed to the Senate Jan. 25, 12 days after the death of her husband. The appointment lasts until a special election in November. She was sworn in Feb. 6.

Tuesday's news conference was her first major public statement on her political future and came on her first trip home since taking office.

Goldstein plea-bargains

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Alvin Goldstein, publisher of the tabloids Screw and Smut, and the Justice Department have reportedly agreed to a plea bargain in Goldstein's federal obscenity case.

Goldstein, contacted by the Kansas City Star, confirmed that an agreement had been reached with the Justice Department in the four-year-old case.

Neither side would disclose publicly details of the agreement, but the Star said sources indicated Goldstein's publishing company, Milky Way Productions Inc., would plead guilty to five counts of mailing obscene issues of Smut into Kansas and one count of conspiracy.

The Star said the government would dismiss five obscenity charges against Goldstein's major publication, the tabloid Screw, and all charges against Goldstein and his former partner, Jim Buckley of Stockbridge, Mass.

"That is a safe assumption," Goldstein said when he was asked about details of the reported agreement.

KC nearly loses power

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—A potential power crisis for the metropolitan Kansas City area was averted Tuesday, officials of the Kansas City Power & Light Co. said.

Failure of key generating equipment Monday posed the possibility of a power cutback.

Repair crews worked around the clock for 37 hours to return the large LaCygne generating station to operational status, according to Donald McPhee, vice president for production.

"We think we set a world's record," said McPhee of the repair work. KCP&L officials had warned Monday that failure in the generating equipment could hamper the company's power production capabilities for a period of time this week. This would have forced the company to ask its 328,000 customers to reduce their use of electricity.

Watch out for 'Baby Sitter'

BIRMINGHAM, Mich.—Exactly two years ago, a killer with the macabre tag of "The Baby Sitter" claimed the first of his four victims in the prosperous suburbs north of Detroit.

And although warnings continue through 13 communities, some say that time may be soothing fears that the killer will claim a fifth victim.

Some of the warnings issued in the last year are becoming part of daily life.

The warnings appear throughout Oakland County. A fast food chain prints them on placemats; they are on the sides of milk cartons sold in supermarkets; thousands of T-shirts with special slogans have been sold, and social workers and psychologists visit school classrooms.

Insurance men's education issue splits legislature

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas House and Senate were in sharp disagreement Tuesday on what to do with legislation aimed at exempting most life insurance salesmen from meeting minimum education requirements.

The House gave tentative approval to the bill requiring life insurance salesmen licensed five years or less to take a required number of education courses. Presently, all life insurance agents with less than 20 years experience must meet the requirements.

However, the Senate killed an identical proposal, 17-8, on standing vote, and struck the bill from its calendar.

The House also gave its final approval, 103-19, and sent to the Senate a bill creating a crime reparations system for Kansas. Also passed by the House, 120-2, and forwarded to the Senate, was a bill which would attempt to save the state's scarce groundwater by giving greater regulation of its use to the state Water Resources Division.

OFF THE FLOOR, biggest news came in the House Assessment and Taxation Committee, which recommended for passage a bill to implement the use value appraisal of farmland constitutional amendment approved by voters in 1976.

Leading opposition to the insurance salesmen's bill was Sen. James Parrish (D-Topeka). He said he felt it was necessary for insurance agents to have learned a minimum amount about their business before selling policies to the public.

Sen. Edward Reilly Jr. (R-Leavenworth) accused the 1976 Legislature of "over-reacting" by adopting the 20-year requirement, and chastised his colleagues for passing "this kind of crazy legislation which hasn't helped anybody by putting people out of business."

'Catcher in the Rye' not 'junk'

J.D. Salinger's book, "The Catcher in the Rye," has long been considered an American classic by most people—but not by all.

The book was taken from a class of ninth-grade English students at Bishop Carroll High School, Wichita, on Thursday morning because the principal said he was concerned about exposing them to "vulgar" language.

The principal of the Catholic school, Lawrence Sanchez, said he decided to get rid of the book after consulting with the head of the school's religion department.

In a Wichita Eagle-Beacon interview, Sanchez said, "I don't have to keep a bunch of junk before their (students') eyes. They see and hear enough as it is."

THIS IS true, Mr. Sanchez. They do see and they do hear, but do they understand?

The book deals with frustrations, "phoniness" and difficulties in communication.

It gives a "handle" to some of the problems that young individuals could not isolate in their minds before, and can now try to solve.

As for the authenticity of the book's language, it has been confirmed by reviewers in some of the world's most reputable newspapers, including the London Times Literary Supplement, the New York Times, the New Yorker, the Chicago Sunday Tribune, to name a few.

IT MAY be significant to note that the writers of both Catholic World and the Christian Science Monitor denied the authenticity of the book's language.

Both of these are religious journals which refused to believe that the obscenities used in the book could be realistic.

Prepare for a shock, Mr. Sanchez, if you visit K-State—there are copies of this "vulgar" book in libraries all over campus.

Snow is for heroes

Say, did you notice it snowed a whole bunch Monday? If you're lucky like me, you noticed it just in time to cancel any outdoor movement for the day.

Where I come from, people respect a well-organized snow for what it is—a damn good excuse to loaf. None of this "let's get out and get productive" crap.

Our feathered friends up the Kaw River certainly know a good thing when it's dumped, so to speak, on their doorsteps. Of course, they got 10 whole inches and we only got eight. Some people have all the luck.

I read in yesterday's Collegian that a higher percentage of students made it to class Monday than faculty members. There's a lesson to be learned here—I think.

ENOUGH OF this scolding. What I should be doing is telling you what to do (or not to do) when it snows eight or more inches.

Maybe next time the other 80 percent of you will think twice before trying to prove you're the King of the Yukon.

First things first. Always check the depth of any new white fluffy stuff before doing anything drastic. Remember, it's probably deeper than it looks.

Here's a general rule I swear by—and sometimes at. Chances are you can apply it to your own backyard.

Just remember: If you're wearing high-topped boots and your socks are getting wet, it's time to call it a day and stay home.

It's a proven fact that wet socks lead to broken homes and unproductive careers.

AN EXCEPTION to the rule of "sock": If you're wearing low top shoes and no rubber golashees, you're probably a little less than sane and might as well be walking in the snow. You also have a slightly lower chance of career success and a happy home.

Second on the list of "what to dos" concerns the element of time. Contrary to popular belief, most sidewalks and streets aren't going to be cleared 15 minutes after the snow stops. Unless you're about to have a baby, or are running drastically low on groceries or liquor, wait until the next day.

Better yet, wait until spring when it all melts.

So now that you've followed my suggestions and are trapped in your own home until May, you need something to do, right?

Dependable Dusty has the answers.

If you're the gambling type, try betting with your roommates on how much of her walk the old lady next door will get scooped off before she has a stroke.

I lost a dollar Monday when I bet one of my roommates that the healthy old gal next door would make it all the way to the street.

Eight inches of snow was just too much for her—she barely made it off the porch.

IF YOU'RE not the gambling type but are the drinking type, try draining your liquor supply on the next cold, snowed-in day you encounter. You may not accomplish much, but believe me, after a while all that snow actually starts to make sense.

Someone suggested I tell everyone to catch up on their studies on days when they're snowed-in, but to me that defeats the purpose of a day off.

Forget I even mentioned it.

As the sweet, motherly-figured lady on the Noon Day Report said Monday, "Please don't get out unless it's an emergency." Well, you know me—the last thing I want to do is upset someone who looks like my mom.

Union intended for K-Staters, not high school hordes

Editor,

I'd like to commend the action taken by the K-State Student Union on Friday night, Feb. 3.

This is in reference to their effort to clear the Union recreational facilities (pool tables, foosball tables, etc.) of junior high and high school-aged kids, by requesting them to leave if they could not produce a K-State I.D.

I personally have nothing against these kids using our recreational facilities, but when they come in flocks and overrun our Union it is a different story.

This problem has gone on for long enough—this is the first action that has been taken.

Waiting 45 minutes for a pool table on weekends while five of the tables are being used by these high school kids is quite disheartening.

After all, we the students here at K-State, pay for the Union and should not have to be hampered by these high school and junior high kids who congregate there on the weekends.

It's about time that some action was taken to return the Union to the K-State students.

Hoss column 'excellent'

Editor,

I don't have to be agreed with, but if you think anyone might, then please allow me to say "hats off" to excellence and Jolene Hoss.

Her Feb. 8 column, "The deadly crosswalk boogie," was stylish, humorous and interesting. Jolene has attained a level of competence which some have come to believe your staff is bereft of.

It would, therefore, be wise for the Collegian to look out for the safety of Jolene, who now values more than "a mere five points," according to the latest edition of "Anderson Avenue Journal."

Besides being well-written, the column is demonstrative of the Collegian's interest in public welfare. Thank you.

Parking ignorance no excuse

Editor,

Why should a minority of careless drivers be allowed to take a majority of our precious parking places?

On Thursday, at 8:15 a.m. in a parking lot on the northern side of campus, it was the same, repetitious story.

It looked as if anyplace was fair game for parking, including any angle and direction.

I was driving a foreign car, found a spot completely legal within all yellow boundaries of which parts could easily be seen.

I was encouraged to move out by an arrogant, jealous student who would have taken the spot if he had gotten there first, or if I would have followed his dictations.

Even though legal, my car posed a very dangerous situation as it practically sealed off traffic (because of other cars parked in disarray).

I later moved to a safer spot, agreeing with the Campus Police that my right didn't correct the wrongs.

The new spot I picked was legal, but it looked as if I had parked in the traffic lane—the rows were that far out of place.

It isn't hard to find the light poles for alignment of parking to set a guide for others to try to follow.

The bottleneck that started all this was three cars parked 90 degrees counterclockwise (cross-wise) in the parking spaces that five cars otherwise would have occupied, causing two others to park wrong, and preventing the use of another.

I confronted the Campus Police hoping to have the three cars towed away.

They said that if a ticket was issued it probably be voided by the Review Board on the grounds of a snow-covered parking lot with no marks to show space locations or directions.

As for the towing, they said they could only have a car towed away that was blocking another from leaving, even if the blocking car is legally parked.

They may issue a ticket to both, which again the Review Board may void and the innocent owner is still charged for a towing fee and maybe storage fees.

It is apparent that the Review Board must believe that ignorance to the law and parking order is a valid excuse for incorrectly parking. They should ask if ignorance to the law is accepted by courts of law as valid excuses.

I don't live on campus or in group housing, therefore it is a necessity that I drive to school.

To the Review Board: possibly the parking situation could be alleviated to some degree if the Campus Police were allowed to enforce parking laws and if the penalties had more bite.

After all, who knows better if a car is parked wrong, and they shouldn't have to take pictures as evidence for you to judge guilt or innocence.

If people can't park their cars in line with a lighting pole, why not have the ROTC stretch bright-colored rope between the poles after a snow storm to aid people with their parking?

To prevent theft of the rope, tie one ROTC member to each end in a brightly-colored green uniform.

In spite of all the hassle, the Campus Police are to be thanked for the job they at least try to do, even though their hands are often tied by the Review Board.

Consider advantages of Ahearn

Editor,

Aside from the fact that Kansas State University has many more urgent needs than a new fieldhouse, it is important to consider the advantages of Ahearn.

Opposing teams dislike playing in Ahearn, and that should cause us to reflect on the reasons.

New fieldhouses are much larger than Ahearn without significant increase in seating capacity. Circulation requirements and greater seating comfort keep viewers elsewhere relaxed and more removed from the game.

Newer facilities are for spectators while Ahearn almost makes participants out of the fans.

The sound characteristics in Ahearn are ideal for the home team and the closeness to the action is unmatched.

There are ways to make student attendance more exuitable.

Meanwhile, let's hold on to Ahearn, our very effective "secret weapon."

Acker's budget request stresses salary hike, engineering expansion

TOPEKA (AP)—K-State President Duane Acker stressed the need for salary increases among non-faculty workers and expansion of the engineering program in outlining the University's budget requests to the legislature Thursday.

Acker, President Clark Ahlberg of Wichita State and other heads of state Board of Regents institutions appeared before a joint hearing of the House and Senate Ways and Means Committees to present their schools' budget requests to the legislature.

In most cases, the university presidents appealed amounts trimmed by Gov. Robert Bennett in preparation of his recommended budget given the lawmakers a month ago.

As did Chancellor Archie Dykes of the University of Kansas in his appearance Monday, Acker emphasized the need for adequate salaries to retain key faculty members at K-State.

BUT ACKER also put special emphasis on the need for salary improvements for K-State's classified Civil Service employees as well.

"The classified non-faculty personnel are very important to Group opposes removing controls on liquor prices

TOPEKA (AP)—The attorney for the Alcohol Beverage Control Division warned lawmakers Tuesday that removing state price controls on liquor would force hundreds of retail stores to close and invite crime to move into the industry.

Bill Schutte told members of the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee that permitting Kansas wholesalers and retailers to set their own price would turn the state's controlled and orderly market into a competitive jungle.

"Experience has shown that when wholesaler and retail operations become marginal, some will resort to illegal practices," Schutte said.

THE MEASURE under consideration by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee would eliminate minimum guaranteed markups currently set by the ABC for liquor sold at wholesale and retail.

Gary Kirshner, lobbyist for the Kansas Wine and Spirits Wholesalers Association, said his organization was strongly opposed the bill. He said it would cause substantial changes in the marketing system which his members don't want.

Kansas State and we want them to be upgraded, too," Acker said.

K-State asked for $391,937 next fiscal year to provide merit pay increases for its classified employees, but the regents reduced this to $310,090, and the governor further trimmed it to $141,629.

Bennett's recommendation assumes turnover in K-State classified personnel will drastically reduce the amount needed to provide the merit pay raises of veteran personnel.

Acker also said K-State needs more money than is being recommended to meet the regents' mandate to beef up its engineering program.

"The regents have charged Kansas State with developing engineering to the fullest," Acker said. "So I am asking for money to do that."

HE SAID the K-State engineering program is growing at the rate of about 10 percent a year, and physical expansion of the school's facilities is vital to meet the increased enrollment.

Acker asked for restoration of $79,137 for preliminary planning of the second phase of the new engineering complex at the Manhattan campus.

Acker said K-State has scaled down its request for relocating headquarters of its Southeast Kansas Branch Experiment Station from Mound Valley to Parsons from $450,000 to $240,000.

Home-brewed beer illegal but cheap; taste, color differs with ingredients

By BRUCE DONLEY
Collegian Reporter

Illegal as it may be, home beer-making can be a rewarding hobby.

Home-brewed beer seems to have acquired an evil reputation in this country during the prohibition period when it was one of the only forms of alcohol people had to drink, according to Fred Eckhardt in his book "A Treatise on Lager Beers".

Federal statutes state that brewing beer without a commercial brewer's license is illegal. However, Kansas statutes have no provisions concerning home-brewed beer.

According to Kansas liquor authorities, the legality of home-brewed beer is assumed to be the same as home-made wine, which can be brewed legally for personal consumption only.

"The laws are conflicting, but there's nothing we can do about it," said Jim Bartlett, area supervisor for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. "The federal laws may be changed in the future, but it takes time."

ACCORDING TO Eckhardt's book, if the brew is left at home and not given to minors or sold, the Bureau of Internal Revenue usually won't bother the brewer.

Like many other home-brewers, Ralph and Keith, two anonymous K-State students, are relatively unconcerned about the illegality of their beer-brewing.

Ralph has been brewing his own beer for about four years now.

"I do it because it's less expensive. I prefer the taste," he said.

According to Ralph, his homebrewed beer is "heavier" than most commercial, American beers and has a higher alcohol content. In his opinion, this is why his home brew tastes better.

Keith also prefers his own brew over most commercial beer.

"The big breweries try to appeal to the common palate, thereby losing the true beer taste," Keith said.

BESIDES TASTE, Ralph and Keith both agree that cost is a major advantage in home-brewing.

"The cost-per-bottle will average anywhere from five to ten cents, depending on the recipe and types of ingredients used," Keith said.

The basic ingredients used in any beer are malt extract (or hops flavored malt), yeast, sugar and water.

But according to Keith, there are many different kinds of beers, recipes, processes and variations of ingredients used.

"The brewer should experiment to see what best suits his taste and his checkbook," he said, "but any way you look at it, it's going to be cheaper than store-bought beer."

The home brewer must, however, make an initial investment for necessary equipment.

"I use a 16-gallon plastic trash barrel to brew the beer in," he said. Other essentials include a hydrometer, bottle-caps and a bottle capper.

"If you know somebody with a bottle-capper it'll save you some bucks," Keith said.

WITH A marginal amount of care, the hops-flavored malt extract is mixed into the sugar and water solution and the yeast is added, Keith said.

It takes 10 days for the yeast to "do its thing". In the meantime, the brewer needs to check the gradually-sinking hydrometer periodically as it bobs up and down in the solution.

After 10 days the hydrometer hits zero. The beer is bottled, capped and stored for one to two weeks for aging.

It is during this phase that mishaps, if any, may occur.

"I've had a few bottles explode," Ralph said, "but that should only happen if the beer is bottled too soon."

The beer is sufficiently aged and an unlabeled bottle is held up to the light for inspection. It seems to be a bit murky, but nevertheless, is anxiously sampled, Keith said.

The wine-like taste is not one that everyone would enjoy, but Ralph and Keith don't want their brews to taste like commercial beers.

"It's my hobby and I don't make it to please the common palate. When my product is good, I'm always proud of it," Keith said.

Revenue sharing proposal would ease taxpayer's load

TOPEKA (AP)—A revenue sharing proposal in which the state funnels money to local units of government would not only provide financial relief on the local level, but also help curb state spending, a Senate committee was told Tuesday.

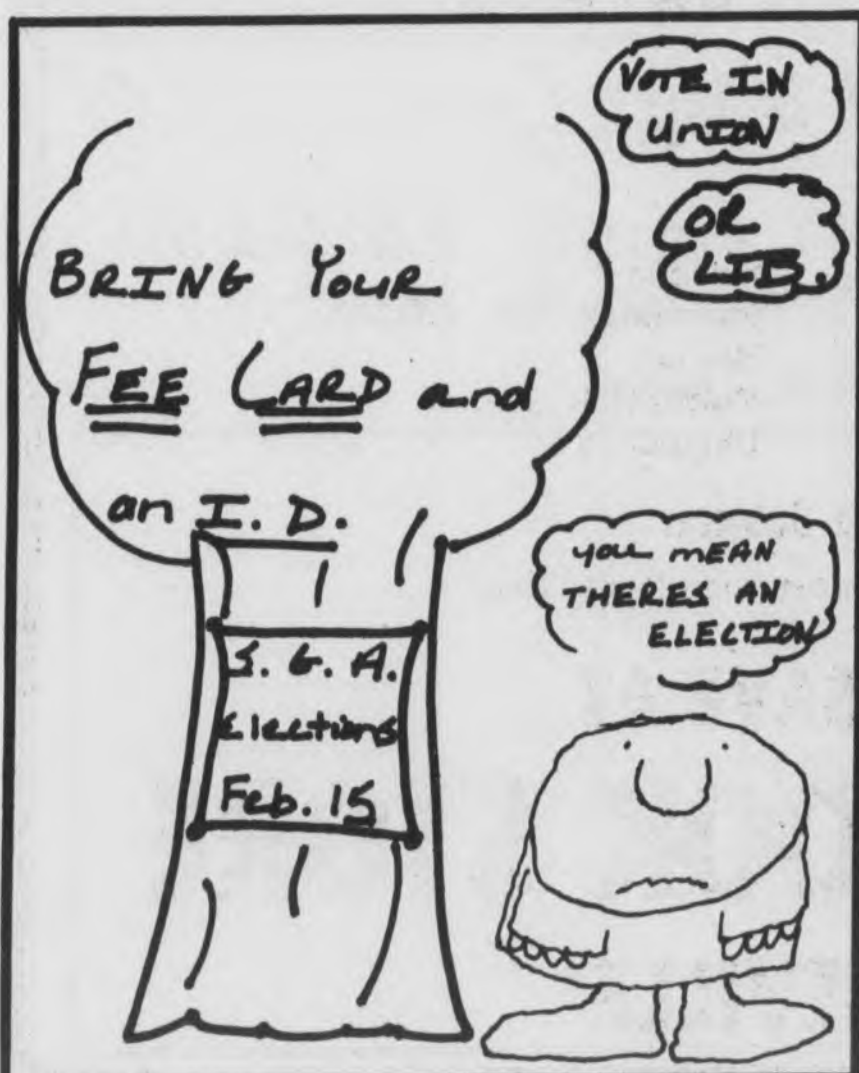

Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City) told the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee that local taxing units have pushed the property tax "as far as it can be pushed."

"Property owners all over the country are protesting tax increases that border on being confiscatory," Steineger said.

The Kansas City Democrat was speaking in support of a Democrat sponsored bill designed to limit local taxing and provide for a sharing of state revenues.

Steineger said state financial surpluses provide the means for such a local revenue sharing plan.

Steineger said local property taxes increased by 11.6 percent in 1977, 9.8 percent in 1976 and 10 percent in 1975.

Crews still shoveling walks after Sunday's 8-inch snow

By CLIFF BERNATH
Collegian Reporter

Hills of snow and icy sidewalks still abound on campus, and Physical Plant personnel are yet working to clean up the remains of Sunday's eight-inch snowfall.

"Our crews operated continuously from 11 p.m. Sunday evening until around 2 or 3 p.m. the following day," said Case Bonebrake, Physical Plant director.

"We think 16 hours is long enough to have anybody operating power equipment because of fatigue and the possibility of errors. It's a safety factor as well as a humane factor," he said.

The Physical Plant, which contains a maintenance section and a grounds section, has responsibility for snow removal on campus.

THE PLANT has sufficient equipment and personnel to take care of normal situations, but not for extreme circumstances such as the latest snowstorm, Bonebrake said.

"I don't think it's feasible to have sufficient equipment around to take care of a once-in-20 year snowfall and let it sit the other 20 years. It's a matter of inconvenience that has to be put up with as an economical fact," he said.

There is no priority plan which details which part of the campus will be cleared first, he said. Most attention is paid to those walkways which handle the greatest amount of pedestrian traffic.

"It's different to prioritize one walk over another. To the person who is walking on an uncleared walk, that is the highest priority to him," Bonebrake said.

THE GROUNDS section has responsibility for clearing the sidewalks. It has a plan for getting the main walks first and then the lateral walks. The main walks, according to Bonebrake, are those leading to the dorms and through the center of campus.

Most of the approximately 25 employees of the maintenance and grounds crews are utilized to operate the vehicles used in snow clearing and removal. The remainder use shovels to clear building entrances and stairways.

"We don't have adequate positions to do the work,"

Bonebrake said. "We can't take care of the variable work load with a constant work force."

One method of making the work force more flexible is the use of part-time student labor. The pay is $2.65 per hour up to a maximum of 30 hours per week.

STUDENTS CAN apply for work at the maintenance office in the Power Plant, Bonebrake said, "however, we don't exactly have anyone beating on our door to do that kind of work."

The Physical Plant operates a minor repairs and emergency telephone line (2-6389) which is manned 24 hours a day. It can be used to report potentially dangerous areas.

"So long as we have individuals and people working for us, we're going to have some oversights or errors," he said. "If they're called to our attention, we'll rectify them as quickly as we can."

"We've been working the available people and the available equipment we have to about the extent of the human capability."

"We'll keep working until either the normal weather melts the snow or we get it all hauled off," he said.

Congressional bill will create new judge post for Kansas

TOPEKA (AP)—At least seven persons are actively seeking the new federal district judgeship soon to be created for Kansas.

The state would get a fifth U.S. District Court judge under the bill now in conference committee in Congress. Differences between the House and Senate do not involve the Kansas judgeship, so it is expected to be included.

The decision will be made later where to locate the new judge, but the four judges now sitting are expected to recommend that the new judge be located in Kansas City, Kan.

Kansas City and Topeka both have the physical room for another judge's quarters and the court room in their federal buildings. But Kansas City has the greater caseload, especially on criminal cases.

Wichita already has two federal judges working there; Kansas City and Topeka have one each, but there are judges on senior status still working in those two cities, helping some with the caseload.

Fertility decline good news for world population growth

WASHINGTON (AP)—The rate of the world's population growth has unexpectedly peaked and is now actually declining, according to reports from population experts Tuesday.

The decline was attributed mainly to "a sizable and generally unexpected decline in fertility in the poor countries of the world," according to Nick Eberstadt, an associate at the Harvard Center for Population Studies.

"This fertility decline is good news for the world—especially the poor world," Eberstadt told the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Eberstadt reported that the rate of world population growth had reached a peak of 1.9 percent per year "somewhere around 1970" and was down to 1.7 percent in 1977.

Religions register or face banning in Catholic nation

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP)—All religions except Roman Catholicism must register with the state or be banned in Argentina, the military government declared in a decree published by newspapers Tuesday.

The decree says registration can be refused, providing effectively for more religious bannings by the two-year-old government of this 90 percent Catholic country which has already outlawed three sects.

The law, partially reproduced by the newspapers, will take effect in a month's time when it is published in the government's official bulletin, the newspapers reported.

RELIGIOUS SECTS sects will then have 90 days to register on an official list to be run by the foreign ministry, the decree said.

Religious organizations considered "injurious to the public order, national security, morality or good habits" can be kept out of the register.

The Catholic Church, the official religion in this South American nation of 25 million persons, was not affected, the decree said.

Argentina and the Vatican signed an accord in 1966 reaffirming the church's right to function here.

Last year President Jorge Videla's military regime, which seized power in a 1976 coup, banned Jehovah's Witnesses and two Indian-orientated sects, the Divine Light Mission and Hare Khrisna.

THE WITNESSES, whose beliefs forbid them to salute national flags or do military service, have been banned or jailed in a number of African countries.

Newspapers published the new law without comment, their usual practice when handling any potentially controversial government measure.

Diplomats said they were puzzled by the move, and it appeared to take religious leaders by surprise.

"We don't know anything about it," said Mormon churchman Rudolph Vallis. Other religious representatives were not immediately available for comment.

The foreign ministry has had a list of religions since 1950, but the law said faiths already registered must register again. It said the move was to establish "effective control" by the authorities over non-Catholic religions.

The Witnesses, who have been trying unsuccessfully to get their ban overruled by the courts, said they now plan to try to register under the new law.

"The drop in fertility means that world population will stabilize sooner and at a lower level than previously expected," according to the Eberstadt report.

By the year 2000, Eberstadt said, the world's population may rise from its present 4.1 billion to between 5.5 billion and 5.8 billion. Previous United Nations population projections estimated the world's population for that year of 6.5 billion.

IN ANOTHER report, Parker Mauldin of the Population Council in New York, said the decline in the birth rate has been accelerating. The drop in birth rates between 1970 and 1977 in less developed countries was three times as great as the drop between 1950 and 1970.

However, total growth in population will continue well into the next century, with the figure reaching perhaps 10 billion before the year 2100, Mauldin told a news conference. He noted that there had been no declines in the growth rate in Bangladesh, Pakistan, Nigeria and nearly all of Africa.

Another report suggested that greater equality in income distribution had a significant effect on the birth rate. And in still another report it was argued that birth control programs played only a minor role in most poor nations.

But there was disagreement on this point among the experts. Birth control programs were said to be successful in Mexico and Columbia.

Robert Repetto, of the Department of Population Sciences at the Harvard School of Public Health, said there is evidence that income distribution became more equal in countries where birth rates dropped dramatically over the past two decades—China, Taiwan, South Korea, Sri Lanka and Malaysia.

Clowns: shy souls behind greasepaint

By KRIS TILSON
Staff Writer

McPHERSON—In real life they're introverts—shy, bashful and reserved.

But when they put on their makeup and costumes, they are different.

They were married clown and clown in comedy and tragedy. They agreed never to perform without the other.

Now, Waldo and Flora have just had the first clown baby in the world, Giggles.

Larry and Susan Birdsell (Waldo and Flora) met at a K-State University For Man (UFM) class on clowning. Susan said she fell in love with Larry's big blue eyes. Larry asked Susan to a party and their relationship clicked.

CLOWNING around, she said, affects their personalities.

"We get in makeup and we're completely different people," Susan said. "I always wanted to be a big flirt. The first time I was Flora, I was sitting on all the guys laps and batting my great big eyelashes at them."

The former Manhattan residents operate a clown college in McPherson where they now live. The tuition is $50 for as long as a student needs tutoring, Susan said. They help a clown develop character by suggesting a costume and providing a small supply of makeup.

"We teach him how to be uninhibited as a clown," she said.

They take the students out into public and teach them to use "walk-arounds" (props like a giant toothbrush, scissors, or comb). They also teach their students how to handle people and how to approach children who are scared of clowns.

The Birdsells perform and teach impromptu theater. Susan said they always have an idea what they're going to do in an act, but are not always sure how it will be done.

"We never rehearse anything because when you rehearse you forget things and then you get confused," she said.

ALTHOUGH the Birdsells don't believe in rehearsing, they do place importance on makeup. Susan said makeup is essential to a clown's character.

Audiences notice if eyebrows or mouths are higher or lower than normal, she said.

For instance, sad clowns like Waldo aren't supposed to smile, she said, but since Waldo has met Flora her character has made it harder for Waldo not to smile. Because of this, Larry has made seven or eight changes in Waldo's face in the past four years. He has straightened his mouth so now he can smile at Flora and Giggles.

The Birdsells use grease paint makeup over baby oil. The makeup must follow the natural lines of one's face to look right, she said.

Susan said true clowns don't have any flesh showing on their necks, arms, or hands. That's why when she is Flora she wears gloves and white hose.

SUSAN said there are three types of clowns: hobo, white face, and august. Their act includes all three. The hobo uses mime. The white face acts as an interpreter. And, august is used on small children who tend to scratch, rub or smear makeup. Waldo is hobo; Flora, white face; and Giggles, august.

Susan said hobo makeup is the hardest. Larry puts on seven layers of makeup, starting with a flesh color, red cheeks, then adds white and blue make up on his eyes.

Since the Birdsells met as clowns, Larry and Susan decided the clowns should be married, too.

Flora and Waldo were married last summer at the Fourth of July Manhattan Jaycees fireworks display, two weeks after the Birdsells' wedding ceremony. They were married by Mark Viets, a clown minister from Wamego.

They knew Viets from their clown class.

The Birdsells have included one more clown in their act.

Giggles, (Mindy) the Birdsell's first child, was born Jan. 5 and left the hospital in clown makeup and costume with Waldo and Flora.

Susan said Mindy doesn't really do anything but lie there.

According to Susan each clown character has its own personality. Since Mindy moved in there are now six people living in the Birdsell home: Mindy, Waldo, Flora and Giggles, Larry and Susan.

NOSE TO NOSE...Larry Birdsell's new face lets him and Mindy exchange smiles.

CLOWN COLLEGE...School isn't what it used to be as Joey Roberson, age 3, of 1320 Eastmoor, McPherson, showed both delight and fright after meeting Flora while he and his parents attended the art fair at McPherson's community center.

Flood Control seeds clouds; floods bombard California

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Hours before a rain storm that devastated the Los Angeles area last week, the county Flood Control Department was seeding clouds to increase rainfall, officials said Tuesday.

County officials denied that seeding caused the floods, but National Weather Service officials said their investigation of the storm would consider the possibility that flooding was intensified by the seeding.

The effects of the seeding extended to 10 miles from the Tujunga Canyon, where some of the most devastating flooding took place, county flood officials said. They said the canyon was outside the area the seeding normally would affect by at least that distance.

HANK MARTIN, an engineer for the Flood Control District, said the seeding, which officials say increases natural rainfall as much as 15 percent but does not start storms, was conducted from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursday, when rain from the storm was already falling heavily in some areas.

Don Nichols, assistant chief of the flood control district's hydraulic division, had told The Associated Press last Wednesday that he didn't expect there would be any seeding Thursday because the coming storm looked like a "tiger." There had also been two rain storms earlier in the week.

Martin said one reason seeding continued despite the forecast was that the flood control district does not always believe the weather forecasts. Martin also said people in the office may not have heard the rain warning.

The seeding has been done to raise ground water levels, which had been severely depleted by a two-year drought that was declared over Jan. 16.

THE THIRD storm turned out to be one of the worst in Southern California history, causing at least $43 million in damage and claiming at least 10 lives, including one confirmed death in the Big Tujunga Canyon area near where the clouds were seeded. Ten other persons are missing and presumed dead from Hidden Springs, a small hamlet in the canyon that was washed away.

"It seems a little strange they were seeding clouds with such a big storm coming in, if the purpose of seeding is to produce more rainfall," said Oscar Nichols, a forecaster for the National Weather Service. "There were some heavy rains during the day Thursday."

Flood control officials say the effect of seeding is limited to a 200-square-mile area and the Tujunga Canyon would be outside this area.

But Oscar Nichols said strong winds could blow silver iodide, used in the seeding, to nearby areas. The winds Thursday were about 20 mph, blowing erratically.

Weatherman knows snow; he's up to his waist in it

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Don't ask Byron Louis how the weather is. He's likely to tell you.

Louis, 21, a National Weather Service meteorological technician, reported to duty in a small mobile home at the south end of Kansas City International Airport at 4 p.m. Sunday.

He's been there ever since.

"I felt like I was on top of a mountain in Alaska someplace," said the snowbound Louis from his weather service post. He said snow drifts snuggle against the door handles of his car, and the winding three-mile road back to civilization is impassable.

There's no indication when hard-pressed city and county road crews will be able to plow it clear.

A fellow weather observer, William Runyon, 24, grabbed some provisions Monday and trudged the one-eighth of a mile to the observation post.

The two men, armed with a deck of cards, a radio and provisions to last through Wednesday, are working four-hour shifts.

Ben Franklin offers personal advice: older women make superior lovers

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—When selecting a mistress, choose the older over the younger. She will be more discreet and as physically attractive as the younger one.

One of America's foremost aphorists—Ben Franklin, author of "Poor Richard's Almanack," signer of the Declaration of Independence and lifelong admirer of beautiful women, formed that advice and apparently lived by it.

In a spicy letter written in language that would make today's feminists bristle, Franklin sang the praises of older women.

FRANKLIN wrote the letter in 1745, 15 years after the 24-year-old

Philadelphian had married his landlady's daughter. She was about his own age.

Franklin's letter is included in an exhibit of historic love letters and oldtime valentine cards on exhibit at a private museum that specializes in antique and rare books.

Walter Johnson, a curator at the Rosenbach Museum, said Monday that it is unclear to whom Franklin wrote the letter. It is addressed only to "My Dear Friend" and dated June 25, 1745.

Johnson said that because of its indelicate contents, it was not put on public display until sometime in the 20th century.

FRANKLIN opened his letter by saying older women "have more knowledge of the world ... and their conversation is more improving and more lastingly agreeable (sic)."

He wrote "they are more prudent and discreet conducting an intrigue...and there is no hazard of children."

Older mistresses are more desirable than younger ones, he said, "because the sin is less—the debauching of a virgin may be her ruin, and make her for life unhappy."

Franklin also noted:

"And as in the dark all cats are grey, the pleasure of corporal enjoyment with an old woman is at least equal, and frequently superior."

Bill would double water user charge

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill which would double the annual water user charge that groundwater management districts may bill their members was recommended for passage Tuesday by a Senate committee.

The bill endorsed by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee would raise the maximum annual fee from 30 cents to 60 cents for each 326,000 gallons of water a landowner is permitted to use.

Groundwater management districts would continue to charge an assessment of up to five cents for each acre of land owned within the boundary of the district.

The figure of 60 cents per 326,000 gallons—an acre foot—was a compromise between the current level and the $1.20 included in a bill introduced on behalf of an interim water task force.

Key to preventing grain explosions is maintenance

Recent grain dust explosions in grain elevators across the United States are causing owners and supervisors of grain elevators to seek more education on the problem.

Grain explosions occur when a spark ignites grain dust suspended in the air. Most explosions are caused by human error, according to Robert Schoeff, K-State professor of grain science and milling.

"We try to make everyone understand what grain dust will do," Schoeff said. "It will ignite easier and explode with more force than 80-octane gas."

"The devastation is greater than dynamite," he said.

SCHOEFF HAS been promoting safety with the K-State Extension Service since 1962, when a formula feeds marketing section was organized within the extension services.

"To prevent explosions the industry must get back to the basics," Schoeff said.

The most important basic of explosion prevention is good maintenance within the elevators, Schoeff said.

"Good maintenance will remove many potential hazards such as hot bearings or malfunctioning equipment that might possibly ignite the dust," Schoeff said. "Maintenance also can keep some of the dust out of the air by preventing it from leaking out of grinding equipment, fans and air pressure ducts."

Schoeff also stresses the use of dust-tight equipment, ventilators, dust control systems, appropriate light and light fixtures and elimination of foreign material that might cause sparking.

Coors boycott topic of UFM class, teachers hope for local campaign

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

The nationwide boycott on Coors beer may reach Manhattan soon.

Two K-State students, Walter Lane, senior in political science and Ivan Brown, graduate in sociology, will be teaching a course through University for Man (UFM) advocating the boycott by Coors brewery workers started after going on strike last April.

The course, which begins Feb. 22, will examine the issues behind the strike was initiated, about 65 percent of the over 1400 workers that walked out were back on the job," Bramlage said.

"At the last report, 94 percent are back on the job," he said.

"Now, if the case is that Coors is anti-union, why are these men back to work?" he said.

"The second reason the boycott was started was because the San Francisco judge Gerald Shapire dismissed the unfair labor complaint filed against Coors by the

He said the Union believes open shop was proposed to insure a strike and a continuation of the strike in the hopes of eventually bankrupting Local 366.

The Union believes this is an overall plan by the company to get rid of the the Union, he said.

Marcouillier said that out of the 1,472 workers in the bargaining units 1,152 of them voted to strike and about 550 of them remain on strike.

On April 11, 1977, the American Federation of Labor-Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) sanctioned a national boycott on Coors beer.

The boycott campaign didn't really go into full force until late June or early July, but is hurting Coors sales, especially in California and Texas, Marcouillier said.

Coors sales has dropped 25 to 27 percent in Texas and about 25 percent in California, according to Marcouillier.

"This is significant because about 40 percent of Coors beer is sold in California alone," he said.

"The boycott has been progressing very rapidly," he said.

The American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) hasn't taken a position on the strike or the boycott, an official of the ACLU of Colorado said.

However, the ACLU is opposed to the use of polygraph testing on employees by an employer, he said.

National Labor Relations Board," he said.

THE COMPLAINT was filed against Coors on behalf of the striking brewery workers, he said.

"Boycotts are generally designed to get a company back to the bargaining table, but this boycott appears only to be designed to hurt the company itself," Bramlage said.

He said the Union allegations are unverified.

"Most of them are just underhanded statements that hold no truth," he said.

"Things like the beer not being safe because it's unpasteurized. Absolutely untrue. And they know it's untrue," he said.

"The beer is unpasteurized, but it's run through a sterile filtering process that is unique itself to the brewing industry and probably one of the most sophisticated filtering systems in the world today," Bramlage said.

Bramlage said a drop in sales as a result of the boycott is possible.

"It has to have some sort of adverse effect," he said.

Ray Marcouillier, a striker and volunteer boycott coordinator for the Brewery Bottling, Can and Allied Industrial Union, Local No. 366 in Golden, Colo. said the union went on strike on April 5, 1977, after negotiations broke down, following 22 negotiation sessions.

"They give us a very regressive contract package and they were really stripping away much of our grievance and arbitration protection," he said.

Marcouillier said the company was trying to infringe on some of their seniority rights and wanted extended use of polygraph testing of employees.

THE COMPANY also proposed an "open shop" which would allow the employment of non-union workers, which Marcouillier said would destroy the "union security" they have had for 42 years.

the strike, such as discriminatory labor practices and why the boycott was organized, Lane said.

Lane said he and Brown are interested in labor relations and have friends in Denver who are supporting the strike and boycott.

Lane said he hopes the class members will become interested in the boycott and help kick-off the boycott campaign in Manhattan.

"Mostly it's just going to be an educational thing to begin with," he said.

"We're going to see what kind of student and community response we're going to get. And then, depending on what that is, we'll go talk to bar owners and liquor store owners," Lane said.

THEY ALSO plan to distribute boycott leaflets in Aggieville, he said.

Local tavern owners don't seem to be concerned about the strike or boycott.

Terry Ray, Aggieville tavern owner, said he has plenty of problems here in Manhattan to worry about without the problems of the Coors brewery.

"I'm just happy they can get the beer to me," he said.

"That's what America's all about, people being able to boycott and do whatever they like...and more power to them if they succeed. Things have been changed that way before," he said.

"I can run a business for profit, hopefully...if I can't make the profit, I can't stay in business, but that's what America's all about," he said.

Another Aggieville tavern owner, Fred Lechner, said it will probably be some time before the boycott has any effect in Manhattan.

"I think we'll make our decision as to what course of action we would take and how it will affect us here in Manhattan at that time," he said.

LANE AND Brown are working with a group of people in Manhattan to publish a monthly newspaper entitled "Common Ground." The paper will be distributed locally and deal with the Coors boycott along with other political issues, Lane said.

Robert Bramlage, part owner and manager of the Junction City Distributing Co., which distributes Coors, said he has considered attending the class to see what Lane and Brown have to say.

"Chances are they haven't heard what Coors has to say about it," Bramlage said.

He said he has received a great deal of correspondence on the strike from the Coors brewery.

"In my opinion, anyone who would support such an unfair boycott should know why the boycott started in the first place," he said.

"The reasons it was started are simply because the Union was unsuccessful in the strike attempt at the brewery, and by unsuccessful I mean that within two weeks after

'That's what America's all about, people being able to boycott and do whatever they like... and more power to them if they succeed.'

Warmer weather will clear Riley County job forecast

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

The unemployment rate in Riley County stands at 3.7 percent, but warmer weather is expected to add different jobs to the market.

Mike Pritchard, director of Manhattan's Job Service said no specific category of job dominated the market.

"There are all kinds of jobs available, temporary as well as permanent," Pritchard said.

The three categories of jobs available are professional, him arrange something with the employer, Pritchard said.

If there are no jobs available, he can fill out an application that puts him in the files, he said.

"We review the application about every 30 days to see if there is anything that would interest the applicant," Pritchard said.

This also keeps the application from dying in the filing cabinet, he added.

THE APPLICATION has the usual questions about the address, phone number, birthdate and the find jobs for our people," Hauser said.

This is because it's a job training program. The people are provided with on-the-job training. The employer pays half of the salary and CETA pays the other half.

CETA IS funded through state and federal funds. The state money comes from the Kansas State Department of Human Resources.

There is no charge for the Kansas Job Service. The service is funded by the Department of Labor in Washington with the money coming from the Kansas State Department of Human Resources.

"We serve about 250 to 300 people a week," Pritchard said. "We get jobs for about 40 to 45 percent of them."

The only people they have trouble placing are the aliens and the military retirees, he said.

The aliens usually come from the University, and have to have a work visa before they can get a job.

Retirees from Fort Riley had good pay and a good position in the military, Pritchard said. When they retire, they want to find a comparable job in civilian life. They will limit themselves to the type of job they will accept, he said.

Most of the time, employers do not feel their experience is enough to hold the same type of job in civilian life as they did in the military, Pritchard said.

When the weather gets warmer, tree farms around Manhattan will start hiring more people.

Outdoor jobs in general will become more available with the coming of spring, he said.

ANYONE NEEDING a job can get free help from the Kansas Job Service.

There are no special qualifications that a person needs, Pritchard said, a person need only walk in. There are three viewers that have the jobs listed on them. The person can look the jobs over, and if there is anything that interests him, the service will help amount of education the applicant has had. A report of the family's income also is required, which determines the person's need, Pritchard said.

The people whose income is less than a certain level are referred to the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) office.

CETA officials cannot give out how low the income level is because more people would apply than are eligible, said Ann Hauser, CETA counselor.

CETA is operated differently than the Kansas Job Service.

"People are usually referred to us. The Kansas Job Service has employers in need of help calling them; but CETA has to go out and

Doctors don't money around in efforts to save a chimpanzee from cancer

NEW YORK (AP)—"One live chimpanzee. Please keep in a warm place. Please do not open the cage. Please be nice to her. Her name is Judy and she is very sick."

With those words typed on her documents, "Judy Chimp No. 76," who is important to medical research, arrived Tuesday from Africa to undergo emergency cancer surgery on her mouth.

Deep in a chemical sleep, the 2½-year-old, 10½-pound chimpanzee arrived at Kennedy Airport in a small, anonymous wooden box after a 10-hour flight from Robertsfield, Liberia.

Snug in her crate and oblivious to alien snow and jarring potholes, Judy Chimp snoozed peacefully as her station wagon carried her to The New York Hospital.

JUDY IS essential to the trial of a hepatitis B vaccine at the New York Blood Center's Vilab II project at the Liberian Institute of Biomedical Research near Monrovia.

But last November, her handler noticed that her mouth was swollen, and the condition worsened. Doctors believe she has a rare form of juvenile paget's disease, a low-grade cancer.

It is not painful, but both jaws and gums are severely distended. She cannot close her mouth and must be coaxed to eat.

"She is a very key element in our research, and without the surgery she will live only a few weeks. She will starve to death," said Dr. Alfred Prince, director of Vilab II and head of the Laboratory of Virology at the New York Blood Center.

Judy and four other chimps were immunized almost two years ago with the Purcell-Gerin N.I.H. Hepatitis B vaccine. In July they will be inoculated with the live virus.

"If she resists the challenge, she will tell us that the immunity lasts for two years," Prince said. He added that her chances of survival are excellent because at worst, she would only develop a mild form of the disease.

High school officials meet freshmen to air problems

By CLIFF BERNATH
Collegian Reporter

Approximately 400 principals and counselors from 189 Kansas high schools will attend a conference today to discuss the transition problems of K-State freshmen from high school to college.

The purpose of the 27th Annual Principal-Counselor-Student Conference is to give Kansas high school graduates at K-State the chance to tell their former principals and counselors the problems they experienced in adjusting to college life. Students attending will also be able to suggest solutions which would ease these problems for future college freshmen, said Cyndy Broadie, assistant director of admissions.

In preparation for the conference, Broadie said that 4,700 questionnaires were sent to university freshmen to survey the problems they encountered in adjusting to college life.

"The principals and counselors will first have a chance to read the questionnaires. Then they'll talk to their former students. Everyone usually has a very positive attitude," she said.

RETURNED questionnaires have shown three major areas of concern among K-State freshmen, Broadie said.

Some students who returned questionnaires expressed a concern for more adequate preparation in grammar and composition skills, Broadie said.

One questionnaire read "revise the current high school English departments to include required courses in grammar and composition."

Another concern expressed is that many high school graduates believed that their high school had failed to develop proper study habits and attitudes required for success in college.

"I think more high school guidance is needed in preparing a student to learn the right way to study and budget time," one freshman wrote on a questionnaire.

A third area of concern pertains to freshmen facing the realities of college life, Broadie said.

"We learn fast to trade in our party hats for $30 books and 36-hour days," one student wrote.

THE CONFERENCE will begin at 9:45 a.m. in the Union Forum Hall with introductions by Richard Elkins, director of admissions, John Chalmers, vice president for academic affairs, and Student Body President Terry Matlack.

Other events of the morning will be a panel discussion at 10:00 when students will explain the difficulties encountered by students entering college and recommend solutions.

K-State President Duane Acker will present a state of the University message at a luncheon at 12:45.

Drop-add forms surpass problems, provide advantage

The advantages of the new drop-add forms used this semester surpass problems encountered from the change, according to Doug Hurley, assistant director of admissions and records.

"The change went over much more smoothly than we anticipated," Hurley said. "We had expected more difficulty than we actually had."

Hurley said problems could obviously be expected with using any new form. This semester was basically a trial run for the computer readable forms. Minor changes will appear as any need indicates before new forms will be ordered next year.

THE UNIVERSITY will continue to use this type of drop-add form, Hurley said, as it proved to be "fast, effective and cost-efficient."

"We were always current this semester in terms of getting the necessary information into the computer," Hurley said.

The old system, which involved an extra step of keypunching, often fell three or four days behind in the 68,000 drop-add transactions processed last semester.

The potential source of error in the handwritten and keypunched forms, Hurley said, was reduced with the information going directly into the computer. The blame can't be shifted in so many areas with the new procedure.

"The information that goes into the computer is the responsibility of the person who fills it (the form) out," Hurley said. "This will bring about an attitudinal change in the future, where mistakes will be nobody's fault but your own for filling out the form incorrectly."

HURLEY INDICATED that most transactions with student records such as credit-no credit, address changes and enrollment forms would be handled with similar computer forms in the near future.

The cost of the new form was slightly higher than the old form plus the keypunch cost, Hurley said. But gaining the speed and accuracy of information was a balancing factor.

"A lack of understanding was the main problem with the new forms," he said.

Hurley said he realized the old forms were easy to misinterpret when processing, and feels the new drop-add form eliminates this problem.

"We can't mess this one up," he said.

'Cats basketball recruiting program fills void left by graduating seniors

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

K-State has developed a winning tradition in basketball. The nucleus of that tradition is the newcomers — the outstanding players that are annually fed into the program. These young men step in and fill the void left by graduating seniors.

One of the main functions of the assistant coaches is recruiting. Coaches Mark Reiner, Jim Eads and Lon Kruger travel and recruit for the Wildcats.

GENERALLY, Reiner recruits in the East, Eads recruits in the West and Kruger recruits throughout the Midwest.

Sports

Kruger said his trips usually last a day or two while the other coaches are usually on the road for two weeks and then back in Manhattan for a few weeks. He estimated Reiner and Eads spend about half of their time on trips because of the distance and area involved.

Most of the time the coaches have a specific player in mind when they recruit, although sometimes they go to see one player and find others they become interested in, Kruger said.

There are several national rating services that give the coaches good leads toward finding the best players across the nation, Kruger said. The coaches also talk to other coaches and contacts around the country.

EACH COACH draws up a proposal before a trip to present to Head Coach Jack Hartman," Kruger said. It includes the places the coach plans to go, how long he plans to be gone and the names of the players he plans to look at. Hartman looks over the proposal and adds or subtracts whatever he feels is necessary to fit the situation. He may need the coach back on a certain day or want him to see a specific player, Kruger said.

"Coach Hartman has final say. His decision is the bottom line," he said.

Spinks chomping at bit for sphinx Ali

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Muhammad Ali and Leon Spinks, who won gold medals as Olympic light heavyweights 16 years apart, meet Wednesday night in what will be Ali's 23rd heavyweight title fight and Spinks' eighth pro bout.

The 36-year-old Ali, is a prohibitive favorite over his 24-year-old challenger. Ali is getting $3.7 million and Spinks $300,000.

CBS will televise the action at the 4,500-seat Hilton Pavilion starting at 8 p.m. EST, with the Ali fight to start about 10:15 p.m. EST.

Ali, who has refused to talk about the fight, did say when someone wished him luck: "Don't need no luck to beat the Duck."

"The Duck" is a former Marine from St. Louis who is delighted about his quick shot at the championship and not upset about criticism that he has not earned a title match.

"If I had Spinks and the position was reversed, I'd fight Ali," said Angelo Dundee, the champion's trainer. "Why not? Why not jump at it."

WITH AGE in his favor, the big obstacles Spinks would have overcome to achieve a stunning upset are Ali's vast experience, Ali's size and the distance.

"I think he's a well-conditioned kid but I think he'll run out of gas," said Dundee. "Ali is in the best condition he's been in for seven years."

Ali weighed in officially Tuesday at 224½ pounds for his 58th pro fight. His record is 55-2 and 21-1 in title competition, where he lost only to Joe Frazier in the roll of challenger in 1971.

Ten times Ali has had to go 15 rounds. In fact, his last three fights have gone the distance.

On recruiting trips, the coaches usually talk to the player's high school coach and they may talk to the player if he is available, Kruger said.

"It depends upon the high school coach's policy," Kruger said.

K-STATE is only allowed to bring 18 recruits here to look over the basketball program each year, Kruger said.

"You have to be selective with those you invite," he said.

"The recruits usually come on Friday evening or Saturday morning. We usually let them spend a lot of time with our players."

Friday night, they usually eat out with a Manhattan Booster or a coach and Saturday morning, they have breakfast with a coach.

Before the game, the recruits eat at the pre-game training table with the players and after attending the game, they spend Saturday night with the players.

"We let them have a lot of free time. We try to make them feel like they would if they were here all of the time," Kruger said.

Sunday morning, the recruits again eat breakfast with a coach. Before they leave Manhattan that afternoon, each recruit usually sits down with the coaches and discusses what the coaches would like and what K-State has to offer, Kruger said.

"We're looking for anyone we feel can fit into our program," he said. "We try to keep a balance of positions. You have to replace people you lose to graduation."

"This year we're losing a couple of big people and a couple of guards. We'd like to replace them."

PROSPECTS THAT have visited Manhattan this year include two New York players, Jeff Thomas and another Canarsie High School product, Larry Washington; two Los Angeles seniors, Michael Loyd and Jerome Williams; Ed Nealy of Bonner Springs, Scott Bladewell from Fayetteville, Ark., and John Chmiel from Shamberge, Ill.

Nealy has three sisters already attending K-State: Carrie, freshman in general, and older twin sisters, Cathy, junior in business education and Carla, junior in physical education. Carla is on the K-State track team.

Wildcats to Stillwater: trying to break slump

Wildcat coach Jack Hartman will be trying for his 150th win at K-State for the third straight time tonight as K-State travels to Stillwater to take on the Oklahoma State Cowboys.

The 'Cats have found the going rough the past two ballgames absorbing defeats in Lincoln, to Nebraska 63-50, and in Ahearn, to Kansas 75-63.

The 'Cats go into tonight's game with a 14-9 overall record and 5-6 in conference play which places them in fifth place in the Big Eight race and in the second division.

Oklahoma State, after dropping conference tilts to Oklahoma and Iowa State last week, comes into tonight game with an 8-14 overall record and stands in seventh place in the Big Eight with a 2-9 record.

K-STATE owns a 49-10 edge in the series with the Cowboys and have won the last 16 encounters between the two schools. Jack Hartman, Oklahoma State alum, holds a 16-1 record against his alma mater.

The 'Cats defeated the Cowboys in Ahearn earlier this season behind Mike Evans' 27 points, 62-59. Eli Johnson and Olus Holder paced the Cowboys in that game with 18 and 17 points, respectively.

Holder leads the Cowboys in scoring with a 17.5 average and in rebounding averaging 10.4 a game. Helping with the scoring for O-State has been Johnson averaging 13.5 points a game and Mark Tucker 14.4.

Jennies snap Wildcat streak

The Central Missouri State Jennies snapped a five-game K-State women's basketball winning streak last night in Warrensburg, 73-57.

Freshmen Sara Hackerott and Gayla Williams led K-State with 14 points apiece. Hackerott snapped a shooting slump by hitting 7-of-10 shots. Williams downed 7-of-14 attempts. Beth Boggs had 13 points for the losers.

Tami Johnson, in her first start after a knee injury, grabbed 12 rebounds for K-State.

K-State's Eileen Feeney, who was averaging 14 points, was scoreless, missing nine shots from the field.

K-State is now 16-13 on the year, the most losses ever for a Wildcat team. The 'Cats play KU in Ahearn Field House, Tuesday.

Post-season turn-around

It's amazing the difference a year can make.

Last year K-State fans detested the newly instituted post-season Big Eight tournament which would decide the conference's representative in the NCAA tournament, though last year K-State won both the regular season crown and the post-season tournament to soothe the fear of their loyal fans.

This year the situation has changed drastically. The Wildcats were picked in the Top 20 by several pre-season polls and were ranked by both the Associated Press (AP) and United Press International (UPI) early in the season.

No cheers from the pressbox

K-State, however, has failed to live up to early expectations. Curtis Redding has fallen into the worst shooting slump of his short college career and the team has failed to jell the way last year's team did at the season's end.

ANOTHER big difference is the reaction of the K-State fans who are unaccustomed to losing. Perhaps some fans have shown their true nature with recent game-stopping demonstrations. It's easy to show good sportsmanship when your team is winning, but it's far more difficult to behave when the chances for the Big Eight title are destroyed.

K-State fans must continue to uphold their reputation for being one of the better crowds in the country. If they don't, they can hurt far more than their reputation. They could cost the athletic department and the basketball team revenues and exposure from future televised games.

K-State is currently 5-6 and in fifth place behind Oklahoma in the Big Eight. Their best chance is to capture fourth place so they'll have a home court advantage in the Big Eight Tournament's first round.

To accomplish that, K-State will probably have to win their last three conferences games, including their final Big Eight contest against Oklahoma in Norman.

IF THE Wildcats can salvage fourth place, they'll probably play Oklahoma in Ahearn. And Oklahoma took K-State into overtime before losing earlier this year and could have won in regulation if it had not been for Redding's last minute steal and basket.

The post-season tournament, which Hartman voted against, may be K-State's salvation this year. Despite current problems, K-State will have several factors in their favor.

The playoff experience of Redding, Mike Evans and Scott Langton will be very important. They performed well under pressure last year and should do so again.

Despite a reported lack of depth, K-State may have more bench strength than expected. Dean Danner has played well lately. Brent Murphy, Jerry Black and Fred Barton could provide additional scoring and rebounding punch.

Usually K-State peaks towards the end of the season. Against the Russians, Kansas and Oklahoma, K-State played brilliantly at times. But it'll take a superb effort on both ends of the court to win the Big Eight tournament.

REDDING has scored 10 or more points below his average in five of his last seven games. Redding's confidence in his abilities may be at low ebb and perhaps his opponents are defending him better, knowing the key to beating K-State is stopping Redding and Evans. But Redding could explode at any time. Plus Redding played superbly in Kemper in the pre-season tournament last December.

The clutch play of Evans and Langton will also be a major factor. Evans scoring and Langton's defense could ignite the team the way it did last year. And if Langton can regain his shooting form, he could be the deciding factor.

K-State's greatest asset will be Jack Hartman. His know-how and experience will be a huge plus for the Wildcats. Hartman has usually gotten the most out of his players, especially when it counts. If anyone else can solve K-State's present problems, Hartman's the man.

K-State will share another advantage with Kansas and Missouri, in the proximity of Kemper Arena. The tournament crowd will be predominantly fans from those three schools.

K-State fans may be beginning to understand the advantages of the post-season tournament. After all, the alternative is "wait until next year."

fever hits K-State, everyone wants to be indoors.

"This is the time people really and definitely see the need for the new complex," he said.

"We can't even fit intramural games in now, because of the Ford Convocation and the concert. We are boxed in," Robel said.

Jeff Krueger, junior in natural resource management, said, "There's just no place to play. There are no school gyms open for people just to shoot baskets."

Krueger suggested K-State recreational services could get a high school gym for student use.

Robel said it would be possible to use high school gyms if the schedules could be matched.

"We would have to pay a rental fee of over $50 a night, though, and that doesn't take too long to dissolve a budget."

"I don't know what really can be done about it. I've always wanted to complain," Mark Gideon, fifth year student in business, said.

Jerry Brenner, senior in psychology, though he plays on an intramural team, said he doesn't feel the lack of free time is a fair deal.

He said he wouldn't be playing intramural basketball if there was more free-rec time.

"I pay the same amount of money as anyone who plays intramurals. I think the college has to be concerned for the individual student also," Brenner said.

"I don't think it would be fair at the other end to say, 'You can't participate in intramural basketball,' when I know we have a definite interest," he said.

"We are working with 4,000 people in intramural basketball. Does everyone want us to limit it to 200 teams?"

"Before we've never said no, that's what we are here for — pushing participation. Which is super."

Brenner said the number of teams should be limited as in the city league, and there should be an equal amount of free time.

"It is a policy decision," he said, "but when it comes down from Ahearn, it is a decree, not a policy."

Robel said the lack of free-rec time is something that can't be solved this year.

Wildcats sign more recruits

K-State has announced the signing of three junior college all-stars to its 1978 recruiting list.

They are Rod Pray, linebacker from Pratt Community College, Sheldon Paris, quarterback from Pasadena City (Calif.) College, and Dennis Pilkinton, center from Northeastern (Okla.) Junior College.

All three are currently enrolled at K-State and will be juniors next fall.

The 6-1, 220-pound Pray, a former Junction City standout, twice gained all-Jayhawk League honors at Pratt and led that conference in tackles during 1977. He was two-time all CKL selection and a 1975 all-state selection at Junction City.

PARIS, a 6-3, 205-pounder from Vancouver, British Columbia, guided Pasadena City to a 38-9 victory over Ellisville, Miss., in the 1977 Junior Rose Bowl. In that game, Paris completed 14 of 22 passes for 207 yards and a touchdown.

Pilkinton was an all-district selection last season at NEO. A 6-2, 240-pounder, Pilkinton played his high school ball at Putnam City (Okla.) High where he gained all-state honors his senior season.

UNLESS YOU PRINT YOUR OWN . . .

... it seems like a student never comes up with enough money to cover school expenses and have anything left over to just enjoy.

If you're one of those people who has to spend too much study time earning school money, read on. Air Force ROTC offers a four, three or two-year scholarship for those who can qualify. The plan pays $100 a month for expenses, plus all tuition, book costs and lab fees.

While you're working on your degree, you're also working toward a commission in the Air Force. After graduation and commissioning, you'll enter active duty, and discover a whole new world.

You'll find challenge, responsibility, a demand for your talents, and a high regard for what you're contributing. There's more. As an officer in the Air Force you'll have an excellent salary with a full slate of benefits.

Look into AFROTC scholarships. And while you're at it ask about the Air Force way of life. You'll discover more than just a way to make your finances come out while you're in college. You'll discover a whole new world of opportunity.

Presidential candidates list goals for office

By THE SGA STAFF
Representing the views of K-State students and solving their problems are among the goals and plans of four of the five candidates for the office of student body president.

In interviews Tuesday, candidates Sam Brownback, Ted Knopp, Cindy Thomas and Stan Watt talked about their campaigns for the office and what they expected to achieve if elected. The fifth candidate, Bernard Shaw, was unavailable for comment.

To listen, to speak and to serve the students at K-State is the goal of Sam Brownback.

"One quality I want to give the office is a willingness and want to serve the students," Brownback said. "We want to be the people that are down there working and not up there shining in the office."

BROWNBACK SAID voicing student opinions and solving student problems are among his main concerns in student government on campus.

"The students need to have someone in there that is willing and able to stand up and speak out for K-State students to city, state and national legislators," he said.

"We want to work toward tackling the complex problems that seem to have been around for an eternity," Brownback said.

Brownback said he doesn't feel the student body president should be considered any better than the average student at K-State.

"We don't want to walk ahead and we don't want to walk behind.

We want to walk with the students," he said.

Win or lose, Brownback said he is glad that he has been a candidate for the office of student body president.

"It's been an educational experience for me and I've learned an awful lot," he said. "I feel like now I have performed a service to students by informing them of the issues."

TED KNOPP said as student body president he would have a professional attitude without being too professional, adding that it is important for the student body president to stay in touch with the student population and to keep a perspective on issues.

"The role of student body president is to continue the work in areas that others before have worked on," Knopp said.

Knopp said A-credit-no credit is an issue where students could lose ground if the president failed to follow up on the work others have done on the issue.

Knopp said he favors handling the parking problem by dealing with small solutions first, such as redirecting people to lots that aren't being used.

If a large solution to the problem becomes necessary, Knopp said students should be informed of the cost of any project.

"When we look at large solutions, we need to inform students of the costs of the solutions," he said.

Knopp said a lid on increases in student fees is needed so students can budget their way through college and not be hit one year out of four with a large increase.

While student fees should be raised each year to keep up with the rising costs of education, Knopp said a lid needs to be kept on the amount tuition can be raised yearly.

A small increase in tuition and college costs each year would help students plan for educational expenses, he said.

Knopp said he supports the fieldhouse referendum because students need to work to get construction and planning started on a new facility.

Students will benefit from supporting the construction of a new fieldhouse under the terms of the referendum because their involvement will allow them to play a large role in the planning and use of the facility, he said.

EXPERIENCE from holding the office of Student Senate chairman has strengthened problem-solving techniques important to a student body president, according to Cindy Thomas.

"My ability to identify a problem and seek out solutions is my best asset," Thomas said. "It has been made stronger through the work as Student Senate chairperson."

Being a female wouldn't hinder her effectiveness as student body president, Thomas said.

"Most of the adjustments that had to be made (concerning a female's effectiveness) were made through work as senate chairperson," she said.

A tendency to "play down" the job of the chairmanship because it was held by a female was apparent at the beginning of the term, she said.

"Some thought a female wouldn't be assertive, but in most cases it was just a first immediate reaction," she said.

"After they worked with me, they saw it didn't really matter whether I was a female or not."

According to Thomas, an area to be improved is better communication between senate and students.

THOMAS BELIEVES improvement in communication will not only involve direct contact with student groups but working indirectly on senate legislation.

Regular conferences with organizational, living group and college council presidents would be held with Thomas to maintain communication.

Thomas introduced and held similar sessions with senators during her term.

"There are so many different types of personalities in Student Senate and you have to coordinate them to make an effective body," she said.

"The conferences helped surface gripes from the senators about senate so I could work on them," she said.

STAN WATT said he wants to be student body president to show an honest, sincere and realistic attitude with concern for the individual student.

"I hope those people who know me will know it's not just something I dreamed up," Watt said. "I'm not in this to feed my ego."

Watt said he has gained firsthand knowledge of the office being administrative assistant to Terry Matlack, student body president.

"I've learned from what he's done, and by some of his mistakes," Watt said. "I see some concerns I feel I can represent."

"It's time a student leader takes a realistic and objective look at student government and makes no pie-in-the-sky promises."

If not elected student body president, Watt said he doubts that he will continue working with student government.

"After being administrative assistant other positions may not be as fulfilling," he said. "You've reached the top of the pinnacle."

"As far as a political career—that needs to be decided way on down the road. I have no intentions, but it may happen. I didn't intend on running for student body president either," he said.

German official may be kidnapped

MUNICH, West Germany (AP)—A close aide of conservative leader Franz Josef Strauss has apparently been kidnapped, Munich police said Tuesday.

Dieter Huber, 30-year-old foreign policy advisor to Strauss, disappeared early Monday from his Munich apartment building. On Tuesday, the German news agency DPA received a letter claiming Huber had been abducted, police said.

"Now Strauss can show how much freedom and human life are worth to him," said the letter signed with the initials, "KGS."

Police said they were taking the letter "very seriously" because it was postmarked before anyone except the police knew about Huber's disappearance.

But they cautioned against assuming that Huber had been seized by terrorists.

Observers speculated the KGS could stand for Commando Guenther Sonnenberg. The jailed terrorist is accused in the slaying last year of West Germany's chief Federal Prosecutor Siegfried Buback.

Sonnenberg, who was arrested in a shootout with police, is due to go on trial for Buback's murder next month in Stuttgart.

Abzug 'comeback' turned back late

NEW YORK (AP)—Former Congressman Bella Abzug's early lead in a special congressional election evaporated late Tuesday as former state assemblyman William Green pulled ahead with votes from all but one precinct tallied.

Green, a Republican, had 29,431 votes to 28,874 for Abzug, the favorite, in the race for the East Side Silk Stocking district seat vacated by Mayor Edward Koch.

The News Election Service, which tallies vote totals for some news organizations, said it was not known how many votes had been cast in the unreported precinct.

support in Congress, there may be little opposition to the proposed sale of several squadrons of the sophisticated jets to that country. But supporters of the Jewish state and opponents of arms proliferation generally are likely to form a coalition against the Egyptian and Saudi deals.

Carter, campaigning for president in April 1976, said he was concerned with the way the United States, as well as the Soviet Union, Britain and France, "have poured arms into certain Arab countries far beyond their legitimate needs for defense" and five or six times more than Israel receives.

"I do not believe arms sales buy lasting friends," he said at the time, adding that "this headlong rush for weapons increases the chance for war" and postpones peace negotiations.

Thomas, Brownback forced to run-off election

By THE SGA STAFF

Sam Brownback and Cindy Thomas will participate in a run-off election for student body president Feb. 22 and Student Senate elections for the College of Arts and Sciences were invalidated during K-State student government elections Wednesday.

Neither Brownback nor Thomas received the majority of votes needed to win the election. According to the Student Governing Association (SGA) constitution, a run-off election between the two candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be held when a candidate fails to receive a majority of the votes cast.

The Arts and Sciences senatorial race was invalidated because of a typographical error in the list of candidates. Four candidates should have been chosen but, due to the error, one of the voting lists limited voters to a single selection. The election will be held again, in conjunction with the presidential run-off.

OF THE votes cast in the student body presidential election, Brownback received 1,164, Thomas received 1,025, Stan Watt received 663, Ted Knopp received 514 and Bernard Shaw received 73.

All of the candidates for student body president said they were disappointed in the low voter turnout in the elections. Brownback said the election turned out more or less the way he thought it would, adding that he was glad to be in the run-off.

Brownback said that while the same issues would be debated in the run-off election as were argued in the previous campaign, he wanted to avoid an election on the basis of the personalities of the candidates.

"We want it to be an issues campaign," Brownback said. "It's going to give the people out there a chance to pick between the two of us."

Thomas said the issues would basically be the same as long as the personalities of the candidates were not the main consideration of students when they vote in the run-off election.

Fieldhouse referendum goes down the drain on low-percentage vote

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

A student referendum increasing activity fees to help fund construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State was invalidated in elections Wednesday because of insufficient voter turnout.

Under the Student Governing Association (SGA) constitution, a student referendum must be voted on by one-third of the student body to be valid. A simply majority of voters is needed to pass a student referendum.

Only 3,551 votes were cast in the fieldhouse referendum. Of the votes cast, 2,063 were in favor of the referendum and 1,488 were in opposition.

THE REFERENDUM called for an increase in student fees to help raise money for a new multi-purpose fieldhouse to be constructed at K-State by 1983.

Under the referendum, full-time student fees would be increased $5 per semester and part-time student fees would be increased $2.50 per semester beginning in 1979.

An additional fee increase of $5 per full-time student and $2.50 per part-time student would begin the semester preceding the date contracts would be let for construction, bringing the total amount of student increases to $10 for full-time students and $5 for part-time students.

The referendum proposed to build a $10 million facility with $3 million in student funds, $4 million in funds donated by alumni and other organizations and $3 million in funds from state money.

TERRY MATLACK, student body president and a sponsor of the referendum, said he was disappointed at the low turnout of students at the polls to vote on the referendum.

Matlack attributed the low turnout to a combination of poor weather conditions, lack of motivation on the part of students and the banana-throwing incidents at the K-State-KU basketball game Feb. 11.

"It was a very disappointing experience for everyone involved," Matlack said in reference to the banana incident, adding that the scenario may have had a negative effect on the referendum.

Matlack said it would be unwise at this time to bring the fieldhouse issue back to Student Senate because students have shown they are not interested in the proposal.

"I would recommend they continue laying the groundwork and bring it up again next year," Matlack said.

Cindy Thomas, student senate chairman, said apparently the construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State wasn't the issue senate thought it was among students.

Ali knocked off throne; Spinks World Champ

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)—Leon Spinks, turning tiger in the final rounds, scored a shocking upset Wednesday night with a split-decision victory over Muhammad Ali to become the new heavyweight champion of the world.

Spinks, the 24-year-old ex-Marine with just seven previous pro fights refused to run out of gas. In an exciting 15th round he landed a left-right to the head at the bell that sent Ali stumbling back to his corner. Ali's face was a mask of pain and weariness.

At the final bell, Spinks' seconds jumped into the ring and began celebrating.

Judge Art Lurie, the first scorer announced, had it 143-142 for Ali.

But the other judges voted for Spinks — Howard Buck 144-141 and Lou Tabat 145-140.

The Associated Press scored it 143-142 for Ali, but there was no (see SPINKS, p.8)

Begin plans to visit Carter, objecting to weapons sales

JERUSALEM (AP)—Prime Minister Menachem Begin on Wednesday bitterly protested the U.S. decision to sell warplanes to Egypt and Saudi Arabia and said he would go to Washington next month to try to smoothe over the growing quarrel between Israel and its chief ally and arms supplier.

"With all respect I turn to the President of the United States and ask that he reconsider the decision he took last night, because it contains a grave danger to the peacemaking process and to Israel's security," Begin said in a speech to the Israeli Parliament.

HE SAID the first U.S. sale of combat aircraft to Egypt would reinforce what he called ultimatums issued by President Anwar Sadat in peace talks and would encourage saber-rattling in the Egyptian press.

"Threats of war and aggression will not move Israel to take any decision that would harm its status, its rights, its security or its future," Begin said.

The United States "has to understand that the supply of aggressive weapons at this time cannot be other than . . . an obstacle to peace negotiations."

In other Mideast developments: —Ten thousand Israelis prayed at the funerals of two men killed in the bombing of a Jerusalem bus

Tuesday. In his speech, Begin blamed "the evil hand attempting to rule in Judea and Samaria," an allusion to radical Palestinians in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

—Abdul Jalloud, chief deputy to Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy, met in Moscow with President Leonid Brezhnev. The Soviet news agency said Jalloud and Brezhnev agreed that Egypt's peace overture to Israel is "inflicting serious damage to the interests of Arab peoples."

BEGIN, who will be making his third visit to Washington since taking office last June, said he would hold three days of talks with President Carter.

Carter steps into strike negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter won agreement Wednesday for resumed negotiations in the 72-day coal strike after defiant industry representatives consented to a White House meeting with union bargainers.

The White House said the first session would begin at 8 p.m. Wednesday.

Industry officials at first defied a presidential call to resume talks. But they later reversed themselves, saying that "appropriate conditions" had been agreed to in advance of the meeting.

With effects of the strike mounting daily, the administration has come under increasing pressure to bring both sides in the dispute to the bargaining table. Power curtailments have been ordered in some states, mass layoffs are threatened in the auto and steel industries and National Guardsmen are on duty in Indiana helping state troopers ride shotgun over coal convoys.

Carter stepped directly into the strike on Tuesday, calling on both sides to resume talks immediately in the White House and threatening "stronger measures" if necessary. He said that invoking the strike-halting provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act are among his options.

United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller swiftly agreed to resume talks. The Bituminous Coal Operators Association was silent overnight, then turned defiant, telling Labor Secretary Ray Marshall that a resumption of the talks would be a mistake.

But the BCOA had a change of heart a short while later after Carter, reportedly outraged over the industry's refusal, brought heavy pressure on industry leaders.

"It was an affront to the president," one administration sources said of the initial refusal. To placate the industry, Miller agreed to add three influential members of the union's rebellious bargaining council to his original six-man negotiating team.

Correction

It was incorrectly advertised in Wednesday's Collegian that Ann Burns, Kristin Holmquist and Ellen Johnson supported the candidacy of Sam Brownback for student body president.

The incorrect information was supplied by Brownback's campaign staff.

Bennett presents Heldenbrand with employee award

Gov. Robert Bennett addressed K-State's classified employees at the first Classified Employee Recognition Ceremony Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

The recipient of the Classified Employee of the Year award was Andy Heldenbrand, equipment operator at the physical plant. He received a plaque and a $500 check from K-State Endowment Association.

Heldenbrand was chosen from 85 of K-State's approximately 1800 classified employees nominated for the award.

"I've become impressed with the devotion of our (state) employees and their willingness to go an extra mile," Bennett said.

"We feel in Topeka that we need to talk more about the kind of service you all have rendered."

Bennett said that through their services the employees have made Kansas a better state in which to live.

K-State President Duane Acker also attended the ceremony which recognized nearly 200 employees for longevity of service.

"I have deep appreciation for the work of our classified staff," Acker said.

UN CHIEN ANDALOU

DIRECTORS: SALVADOR DALI AND LUIS BUNUEL 1929

Possibly the most avant-garde film in history, UN CHIEN ANDALOU was made to satirize the pretensions and formalities of the avant-garde films themselves. The film is an attempt at pre-surrealism, a work of art created entirely from the subconscious. The film is constructed of a string of bizarre and grotesque scenes, including one in which an eye is sliced with a razor and another where corpses of dead donkeys are dragged through a room.

Bunuel also directed the Academy Award winner film "The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie" and the year's foreign film hit "That Obscure Object of Desire."

BLOOD OF A POET

DIRECTED BY JEAN COCTEAU 1930

Considered to be one of the most important examples of the avant-garde school of cinema. 'Poet' was Cocteau's first use of film as a medium of expression, or as he puts it, 'A realistic documentary composed of unreal happenings. Built around the central character of a poet who 'lives what he creates . . . ' the effects, incidents and symbols of 'Blood' were used in Cocteau's later films, among them, 'Orpheus,' so associated did they become with Orpheus.

Oil pipeline leasing

FAIRBANKS, Alaska—An oil leak just east of here forced the shutdown of the $7.7 billion trans-Alaska pipeline Wednesday afternoon, according to Alyeska Pipeline Service Co.

Initial details of the spill, which was the first since the line became fully operational, were sketchy.

Crews at the scene were unable to determine the cause immediately, an Alyeska spokesman said.

The leak from an above-ground section of the 800-mile pipeline was spotted by a private pilot. Alyeska sent a helicopter to the scene and the helicopter pilot said the leaking oil covered an area of about 40 square feet.

The leak occurred at a point a mile north of the Chena River, but the pilot said there was no open water, which would tend to spread the oil, near the leaking section of pipe.

HEW on anti-smoking

WASHINGTON—HEW Secretary Joseph Califano Jr. said Wednesday he is exploring whether a higher excise tax on cigarettes would discourage smoking, particularly among youngsters.

"Evidence from this country and abroad indicates that a 20 percent price increase—an increase of about 10 to 15 cents a pack—could lead to an overall smoking reduction of at least 5 to 10 percent," said Califano.

Califano said the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the U.S. Treasury Department will study whether legislation is needed which would increase the excise taxes on cigarettes, which have held steady at 8 cents a pack since 1951.

"We are also exploring whether a higher tax would affect the choice of the young, beginning smoker," Califano told the House Commerce Committee's health panel which held a hearing into HEW's nationwide anti-smoking campaign.

'Batting' practice

SAVANNAH, Ga.—Students at Beach High School have taken to bat-swatting in the classroom to fend off hundreds of the furry flying mammals that have invaded the building.

The school has had a bat problem almost since it was opened in 1950, but when janitors recently patched up some holes in the attic where the bats usually stayed, the bats congregated in the top two floors of the three-story building.

The situation got so bad this week that teachers and students declared war. They armed themselves with brooms, books, shoes, tennis rackets and anything else that could be used for swatting, and killed about 150 bats in 75 minutes one day, a school spokesman said.

No more snow shovels

NEW YORK—If you're weary of shoveling snow this winter, look on the bright side—you may be lucky just to own a snow shovel.

A run on snow equipment has created a shovel shortage in some areas of the country hit hard by severe winter weather. Mechanical snow throwers are even more scarce.

The leading producers are sold out and there are reports of a sharp increase in thefts in a number of states, creating somewhat of a "white market" in stolen snow removal equipment.

The O. Ames Co., the largest and oldest shovelmaker in the country, says it is completely out of snow shovels and recently has been getting orders from snow-hit New England and Mid-western states for dirt shovels and scoops.

"People have been desperate for anything they can move snow with," said William Peabody, a sales executive for the Parkersburg, W. Va., company.

Franklin speech on tab Monday

Bernard Franklin, former K-State student body president, will address K-State students as a part of Black Student Union's plans for Black Awareness Week.

K-State Black Awareness Week begins Saturday, with the Jessy Dixon Singers performing in McCain Auditorium.

Franklin will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Forum Hall on the abilities and skills needed by college graduates. Franklin, recently appointed by Gov. Robert Bennett to the Kansas Board of Regents, will also speak about his job as Service Manager Consultant for the Management Department of AT&T.

"We needed a black person that everyone at K-State could identify with," said Anthony Seals, president of Black Student Union. "This way we can get participation from the blacks as well as the whites."

INCLUDED IN the week's activities will be the first performance of the Ebony Theatre Company, a new all-black acting group on the K-State campus. The performance, entitled "Love Song Number One," will begin at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Union Forum Hall.

Other Black Awareness Week activities will include the showing of the films "The Night of the Hunter" and "To Sir With Love."

Train derailment leaves coal spill

OTIS (AP)—Damage was expected to exceed $40,000 in the derailment of a coal train that spilled hundreds of tons of coal Wednesday west of Otis, in central Kansas.

A Missouri Pacific Railroad spokesman said damaged rails should be repaired overnight so traffic on the main line across Kansas could resume Thursday.

Twelve open hopper cars toward the end of the 73-car train derailed, with one of the cars hitting a bridge. Five of the cars overturned; the remainder came to rest at an angle along the railroad right-of-way.

The spokesman said most of the increasingly-valuable coal would be recovered with power equipment.

U.S. war industry will prosper

Welcome to America, where business gets down to the science of war.

President Carter has shifted his policy stand regarding the sale of war planes to the Middle East. He is now selling to everybody.

Israel will continue to receive squadrons of sophisticated jet fighters, including the latest F-15 Eagle and the F-16 fighter-bomber.

In a move described by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance as a response to Egypt's "legitimate needs," the U.S. will begin selling F-5E fighter-bombers to Egypt.

AS FOR Saudi Arabia, noted by Vance as having "immense importance in promoting a course of moderation" in Middle East affairs and in petroleum policy, Carter's arms package includes five dozen of the F-15 Eagle jet fighters.

In announcing the planned arms sales, Vance assured everyone that the sales "will not alter the basic military balance in the region."

There is probably some sense to this statement.

By selling millions of dollars of war equipment to all concerned parties of the Middle East conflict, it might be logical to assume that military capabilities will stay in balance.

OF COURSE, allowances will have to be made for the fact that there is only one Israel and more than one Arab country. To keep things in balance, Israel must be allowed to purchase even more war planes and tanks and missiles and other instruments of war.

But, no doubt, allowances have been made for allowing Israel to "keep up."

There are those, including members of Congress, who feel that this new policy-switch will increase the chances of war in the Middle East.

This is also probably true.

But, unfortunately, this policy may be carried out, not because of "legitimate needs" of the Middle East countries, but because we do not have a war of our own at this time to support American industry.

The viewers love it

It doesn't happen just at K-State.

All over the world—from Japan to New York and Alaska to Wamego and at all kinds of sports from pro football to little league baseball—avid sports fans have given up their role as passive spectators.

They have climbed out of their seats and into the spotlights by raising hell.

In some ways it's a step backwards to a time when fans, if he or she got mad enough, could put themselves into a game and actually participate. Today it's not that easy for the "super fan" or the "purple pride freak" to get down and play football or basketball—so they take out their frustrations by resorting to violent or disruptive behavior.

Yelling obscenities, throwing cups, bottles, bananas, hot dogs and every other food (vegetable or mineral) at officials, players or other fans seems to be the new code of conduct for fans. There have even been cases where players were attacked by fans on the playing area.

THIS "childish" behavior is said to be disliked by everyone but no one does anything to prevent it. The viewers love it too much.

Two of the major networks have claimed to meet the issue head-on by running special news reports on fan violence over the years. They managed to do a good job of reviewing (in a "remember when" style) many of the major incidences that have taken place. But they did nothing to prevent future incidents.

When basketball fans rush out onto the playing court the camera is still there trying to show every fight and every violent act.

Because of this it's very easy to blame the media—but they are only showing what the viewers want to see—and that is violence up close, on the spot and behind the scenes. They want the networks to do their best to capture all the gruesome details—and the viewers get what they want.

Remember when someone threw a bottle hitting an official at a professional football game. I've seen it several times. How about the poor ski jumper falling down the ski ramp. I've seen his agony of defeat sometimes several times a day.

The best scene was during a wrist wrestling match when a contestant broke his arm wrestling. The network showed the scene several times in slow motion carefully pointing out the moment it broke and the sound of the bone cracking.

THE VIEWERS react to this conditioning and the outcome is fan violence. Childish? Maybe—but more like mimicry.

The question is should, how and can this type of behavior be stopped. Television stations won't stop covering events (contrary to false rumors started by "unnamed University officials" about K-State's supposed loss of TV coverage by "furious" TV execs), because that's the kind of behavior the viewers want.

Of course no one will admit that violence is enjoyed and loved by the majority. But millions of people watched the boxing match last night—and baseball was a dying sport until it started competing with football's violence.

Violence will always be around as long as there are sports and fans to watch them.

Letters to the editor

Snow-buried student

Editor,

It is beyond my wildest dreams where President Duane Acker and the administration came up with the brilliant idea to hold classes on Monday.

I have tried to rationalize it but have come up empty-handed. Even the old stand-by excuses that we all used as kids won't work in this case!

Excuses such as:

(1) "Well, everyone else is doing it."

The truth of the matter is that no one else was doing it. Even the "bird brains" down the river had enough sense to recognize a very severe storm and not try to have class (first time I ever gave a Jayhawk credit). In fact, I think it would be a safe bet to say that we were the only educational institution in the state holding classes on Monday.

(2) "I only did it because they told me to."

This excuse, too, proves futile as both the local Riley County Police Department and the weather bureau spent most of the night and the entire morning broadcasting warnings to motorists telling them not to get out unless it was an extreme emergency.

As it turned out it was at least noon Tuesday before the major streets such as Anderson and 113 highway (Seth Childs) were even halfway what you could call safe.

Finally, I will deal with the obvious and only half-sensible rationale for this decision.

First of all, when I finally got to class Monday, after fifty-five minutes of intense snow shoveling and ten minutes of "God-I-hope-I-make-it-driving," I realized, upon arriving, that the class was only about one-half full.

I figured that many poor souls were still out shoveling snow or stuck along some street somewhere inventing new cuss words.

Anyway, the point is that class attendance was low enough to force most teachers into using the day for review or for discussing current events (in other words, bull sessions).

If this wasn't the case, most of the teachers who did teach Monday will probably reviewed it all on Wednesday for the benefit of the fifty percent of the class who didn't make it on Monday.

Perhaps the best example of this point is what happened in one of my classes.

We were scheduled for a test and because of that about ninety percent of the class was there.

Normally those who missed would be out of luck.

But due to the weather the professor didn't feel he could hold those students not there responsible (for fear they were absent because of the weather).

Therefore, those who were present took the test as scheduled and Wednesday's class period was used to give the test to those who missed it.

For all of us who took it on time? Well, we got Wednesday off. That is if that's legal.

Professors cultivate variety of disease resistant alfalfa

A new alfalfa seed developed at K-State will be available to Kansas alfalfa growers next year and may add at least $50 million annually to their gross income.

Floyd Smith, director of the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station, said the new variety, named "riley", is being released jointly by K-State, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Research Service (USDA-ARS) and the University of Nebraska.

"Riley" has been developed at K-State by agronomy professor E.L. Sorenson a research scientist for the USDA-ARS; Ernst Horber, professor of entomology, and Donald Stuteville, associate professor of plant pathology.

"Some of the parents (of 'riley') trace back 20 years," Sorenson said. "Riley will offer farmers more crop protection against insects and diseases than the three previous Kansas-developed varieties."

SORENSEN said the "riley" is highly resistant to many diseases and insects that can potentially wipe out alfalfa crops. It is also more tolerant of late spring frost.

Alfalfa is a $180 million crop in Kansas. The bulk of alfalfa is baled as hay, although some farmers also store it in silos as silage.

Kansas is second in the U.S. in the production of alfalfa, and Sorenson said "riley" could increase production to "one ton extra hay per acre."

Sorenson said that anthracnose, a disease which often destroys Kansas alfalfa crops, destroys at least one ton of alfalfa per acre.

WITH "RILEY," which is not affected by this disease, the value of crops saved from these infections would be substantial he said.

Since "riley" is adaptable to all areas of Kansas, savings to state farmers in chemical costs alone will amount to millions of dollars annually. Because "riley" also produces more forage per acre than present varieties, farmers could gain $50 to $100 million each year in extra gross income.

Based on its parentage and spring growth, recovery after cutting, and fall dormancy, the winter hardiness of "riley" should be similar to that of Buffalo, Cherokee and Kanza.

U.S. calls for regulations to avert satellite mishaps

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—The United States called Wednesday for tough international regulations to prevent accidents involving nuclear-powered space satellites and offered to help any country affected by such mishaps.

Stephen Doyle, a U.S. space expert, also assured a U.N. committee that nuclear power systems aboard American spacecraft are designed to release no radioactivity "under normal conditions and only inconsequential amounts under the most severe accident conditions."

The 47-nation outer space scientific subcommittee is considering what international measures should be taken in light of the fall of a nuclear-powered Soviet satellite into the atmosphere over Canada last month. Search teams later found radioactive debris from the orbiter in unpopulated areas of northern Canada.

Canada, Japan, Sweden, Italy and other Western nations have asked for some restrictions on the use of nuclear power in space, but the Soviet Union rejected their demands Tuesday on the grounds that using nuclear energy is justified by the scientific benefits of space operations.

DOYLE, Deputy director of international affairs of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, proposed a binding multilateral agreement based on these elements:

—Setting of standards for nuclear power sources in space and the publication of a safety analysis statement by the launching nation with an opportunity for other countries to comment on it.

—Notice by the launching state to the United Nations of the launch of a nuclear power source, confidential notice by that country to affected countries of the re-entry of such an object, and notice by any state with relevant information regarding impact of a nuclear power source on the territory of other nations.

—Providing assistance in locating and cleaning up debris and treating affected persons, including the use of existing international organizations to coordinate assistance efforts and the handling of costs of search and cleanup.

Even without such a treaty, Doyle said, the United States would offer to help in the search and cleanup of radioactive debris from re-entering spacecraft belonging to any country and in the emergency treatment of injured persons.

Jazz festival leaves ears smiling

By SCOTT FARINA
Contributing Writer

My ears are smiling.

They, along with the rest of me spent the weekend listening to America's only original music, played by all manner of musicians, at the Central States Jazz Festival.

Phil Hewett, director of bands at K-State, coordinated the three-day affair which included high school and junior college jazz band competition, clinics with professional musicians, and three nights of outstanding music.

Marilyn Maye opened the evening proceedings Friday, playing to a near-capacity house in McCain Auditorium. To be honest, I went expecting to hear more pop than jazz, and for the first few numbers ("Make Your Own Kind of Music," "Come In From the Rain") I smugly assured myself I was right.

Then she hit me in the auditory canals with a fantastic treatment of that low-brow chestnut, "Delta Dawn." This chart starts with just Maye's voice, then adds the bass, the drums, the piano and finally the entire K-State Jazz Ensemble. Maye sang scat, bent notes, explored the tunes from the inside out and never faltered. She had me hooked.

MAYE provided a taste of all kinds of music. Hank Williams would have never recognized her version of "Your Cheatin' Heart." From ballads like "Lush Life" to jazz standards like "Bluesette" and "Take Five" to "Kansas City" and "Bad, Bad Leroy Brown," tight and polished. If every solo wasn't a gem, well, these players aren't seasoned pros. Yet.

SATURDAY'S bill featured the Jazz Ensemble with four guest artists. The audience was sparse at best. Those who didn't attend just that with a beautiful Benny Golson tune, "I Remember Clifford."

A Montgomery original followed, the first movement of a suite entitled "Journey East Within." A catchy melody and a loping gait provided a good contrast to the ballad.

Lab Band I followed, conducted by Perry Potter. This group sounded tentative in its first two numbers, but settled down to back Wilson on an original tune, "My Lady."

The Jazz Ensemble set up during a rather casual intermission (actually, the whole evening was casual, with more of a club atmosphere than concert setting) and technical blunders broke through in hideous fashion.

THE FIRST number, "I Won't Last a Day Without You," featured alto saxophonist John Waterbury, and I have it on good authority from another band member that he did a fine job. His mike was so low in volume that he was constantly drowned out by the rest of the band. The microphone problems persisted through the rest of the night.

For whatever reasons, the spotlights never seemed to be directed where they should have been. During the number "Do Have at It," which features several soloists, the spots followed Hewett around the stage as he adjusted the monitors and mike stands. The lights should have been on the featured performers. A public performance is no place to break in new help.

Lowe delighted the audience when he made his appearance. The word dazzler might be applicable, but Lowe is not a dazzler. He just grabs you with clean, simple lines. He's the type of musician who makes it sound so deceptively simple. It's a pity he only played four numbers.

IT WAS also nice to see Lowe share the spotlight in one tune with the ensemble's regular guitar player, Randy Dietrich. They sounded nice together.

The finale, apparently a Hewett surprise for his guests, was a pull-out-the-stops, wailing jam on "Alright, Okay, You Win." The whole audience was roused during this occasionally-ragged but spontaneous, good-time tune. The four guest performers took some extended solos, and then Hewett gave the nod to trombonist John Burlingham to take a shot. His tone was clear, and Burlingham never seemed to falter for ideas. It was a great way to end the night.

Thanks to Hewett, the Commission, and the National Endowment for the Arts. It was a cool three days. I never thought I'd hear my favorite music live out here in the hinterlands. Could we make this a semi-annual event?

Front Row

Maye remained in complete control of her voice, her musicians and her audience.

Total preparation is the hallmark of a top performer. Besides spending all afternoon rehearsing with the band, she brought detailed instructions for the technical crew of the theater. The lighting was very effective and the microphone levels were perfectly balanced. That is important.

The Jazz Ensemble opened the show for Maye with a steaming version of the theme from "Rocky," and a rocker called "Outrageous Muttha." The band then backed Maye for most of her two-hour performance. They were because there were no big names cheated themselves.

Many fine musicians choose to make a living by means other than performing. Such is the case for woodwindist Steve Goacher (instructor at K-State), trumpeter Bob Montgomery (director of jazz at Emporia State) and woodwindist Curtis Wilson (professor of saxophone at Texas Christian). The fourth artist, guitarist Mundell Lowe, works professionally as a performer and film scorer.

Montgomery opened, backed by Lab Band II, (directed by Randy Dietrich) on two numbers. Although a ballad is a strange way to open a concert, Montgomery did Reflections...

Jazz vocalist Marilyn Maye took time to relax in her dressing room Friday night while reflecting on her career in music after her concert in McCain Auditorium, part of a three-day jazz festival here over the weekend.

Marilyn Maye: abundant energy singer shows jazz with pizzazz

By SCOTT FARINA
Contributing Writer

Marilyn Maye is the kind of lady who calls everybody—fans, musicians, even reporters—"honey," and doesn't sound pretentious doing so.

After a two-hour performance Friday night that would have tired a highly-conditioned athlete, she still had enough energy to greet admirers, sign autographs, and grant a half-hour interview during which she never stopped moving. This is no superstar with a superego.

"I'm called a jazz singer, which is fine, but I like all kinds of music. I've been singing since I was three years old."

"I work both clubs and concerts, and I prefer concerts. At a club, they (patrons) may be there for the food first and then you, and you have to win them over. In a concert, you know they are there to hear YOU!"

MAYE'S sense of humor is as abundant as her energy. She kids with the audience on stage and much of the humor is self-directed.

"My albums are worth a lot; that's because they're so rare. Very few of them have ever been sold."

Often, she refers to herself in the third person. "She's very mechanical," she remarked while adjusting a monitor.

"Very few singers do 'Take Five.' Carmen MacRae and I are about the only ones. It's a challenge, especially the bridge and the intervals," Maye said. Not to mention its 5-4 time.

SHE ANSWERED nonchalantly that her range is two-and-a-half octaves, as if it wasn't important. One must hear her swoop down on a note and then carry it all the way to the top of her range to appreciate the set of pipes she owns.

Maye travels a lot, always with pianist-conductor Xavier Chavez. When bassist Curt Svalstad and drummer Jim Eckof can't make it Maye insists she'll keep on singing right up until the very end. I don't doubt her.

I only wish she'd mentioned where she gets all her energy. I, as well as the rest of the U.S. of A. could use a bit.

Up and Coming

Jessy Dixon and the Dixon singers, a group of young gospel musicians, will perform at 8 p.m. Friday at McCain Auditorium.

The Dixon singers consist of Elsa Harris, soprano and jazz pianist; Ethel Holloway, alto and lead singer; and Aldrea Lennox, contralto and second lead singer. The group has performed at colleges, jazz festivals and in concert halls all over the country.

Admission is $5 and $4 general admission, and $3.50 and $3 for students and retired persons. Telephone reservations are accepted. (532-6425)

Wrongful death bill may compensate family of dead girl

TOPEKA (AP)—The parents of a five-year-old Parsons girl attacked and killed by a mental patient a year and a half ago would be paid $26,763 under a bill unanimously recommended for passage Wednesday by the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The decision came after the heard a report from Robert Coldsnow, the Legislature's lawyer, about average awards in wrongful death cases in the nation involving children. Coldsnow said there was great disparity among such awards, and that there have been very few Kansas cases.

The money would be paid to Mr. and Mrs. Gary Janssen, parents of Sherri Janssen, who was killed by a patient near Parsons State Hospital and Training Center on Sept. 7, 1976, as she was walking to her kindergarten class.

THE PATIENT had walked away from the hospital.

The Ways and Means Committee took no action on two other claims cases before it. They involve the deaths of two young women who were murdered while they were working as state park rangerettes, and present more ticklish legal issues for the lawmakers. They were state employees and there are questions as to the state's liability.

Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa), the Ways and Means Committee chairman, said the committee might vote Thursday on the other two claims.

The Janssen claim is for $25,000, plus funeral expenses.

The committee has wrestled with the issue all session, after the 1977 session balked at paying the three claims.

'Cats' track outlook hopeful; star runners start to shine

By LEANN WILCOX
Collegian Reporter

Coach Barry Anderson, after a successful cross country year, is hopeful in his outlook for the women's track season.

Four distance runners return, who led K-State to a ninth place finish in the national cross country meet. They are Cindy Worcester, Renee Urish, Alice Wheat and Rochelle Rand.

Worcester, a sophomore, qualified as an all-American, placing 13th in the national meet.

But with track season getting into full swing, the distance races aren't the 'Cats' strongest events. If anything, they're a little weak, Anderson said.

URISH, in her third year with the squad, has been sidelined with an injury to her achilles tendon and will probably miss the entire indoor season.

"Renee will concentrate on the mile once she is healthy," Anderson said. "Her being hurt really took quite a chunk out of our strength."

"The 60, 300, and 440-yard dashes are probably our strongest events," Anderson said. "We've got several people who can score for us."

Freda Hancock freshman, has qualified for the national indoor meet at Columbia, Missouri in all three of those events. While Jan Smith, senior, has qualified in the 60 and Wanda Trent has qualified in the 440.

"Freda has the eighth fastest time in the United States ever by an American woman in the 200 meters," Anderson said.

"I think she can probably be a national champion by the time she is a senior.

Sports

"Her best event will eventually be the 400 meters. From what I have seen she hasn't come close to reaching the ability she has," he said.

ANDERSON speaks highly of Jan Smith too, who he said is one of the best sprinters in the nation.

"She is very deceptive," Anderson said she should place in the 100 or 200-meter race at the national outdoor meet in Knoxville, Tennessee.

"Overall we are a much better team than we have ever been," he said. "But everybody in the conference is doing much better."

KU and Nebraska are the best example of that right now."

THE 'CATS have several others qualified for the national indoor meet. Connie Prince, a sophomore who runs the same race as her brother Bob, will be in the half-mile. Worcester, in the 1,000, and Rand, in the two-mile, have also qualified.

National indoor meet qualifiers in the field events are Linda Long in the shot put, Lorraine Davidson in the long jump, and Dianne Moeller and Patty Bundy in the high jump.

Long, senior from Manhattan, is one of the strongest women in the country, Anderson said.

"She is an extremely hard worker. If her technique can become consistent she could be of national caliber."

ANDERSON said he has three athletes with Olympic potential — Hancock, Worcester and Urish.

Urish has run competitively for only three years.

"Renee has the most potential of any distance runner I've had." Last year Urish was ranked ninth in the nation in the 1500 meters by Track and Field News.

"She has a tremendous amount of speed for a long distance runner and is an excellent strategic runner."

Victors crowned in weightlifting

The Recreational Services Weightlifting meet was Monday night in the weight room of Ahearn Field House.

Individual winners were: Craig Barbee (132 lbs.), freshman in pre-design professions; Ron Howell (148 lbs.), senior in psychology; John Emert (165 lbs.), junior in education and psychology; Erik Anderson (181 lbs.), sophomore in construction science; Dennis Wells (198 lbs.), freshman in pre-vet medicine; Paul Coffman (220 lbs.), junior in milling science and management; James Garfield (242 lbs.), senior in agriculture; and Ray Bradley (heavyweight), freshman in general.

question that Ali was a beaten man at the end.

THE 36-year-old Ali conserving his strength and picking his spots with head punches, seemed to be in command after 10 rounds.

But Spinks would not be denied boxing's most shocking upset since Ali won the title from Sonny Liston in seven rounds Feb. 25, 1964.

In the 13th round, Spinks scored with a left-right to the head and, as Ali visibly tired, the challenger landed several other good lefts.

In the 14th, Ali, his left eye swelling, tried to stem the tide with his famous jab. But Spinks kept coming — and hurt Ali with a vicious left hook midway in the round. He followed it with a right-left and an uppercut in a flurry just before the bell.

Spinks clearly outpunched the champion in that exchange. As the 15th round opened, Spinks' followers in a crowd of 5,298 at the Hilton Pavilion were standing and cheering and there were some worried looks in the Ali corner.

Cowboys shoot down K-State

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The Oklahoma State Cowboys sank 15-of-17 freethrows and took advantage of numerous K-State turnovers in the second half to defeat the 'Cats, 67-65, in Stillwater last night.

The 'Cats, who led by as many as 10 points in the first half and held a 39-36 halftime lead, hit only one of their first eight shots in the second half and handed the Cowboys a 50-41 lead with 14:08 left that OSU never relinquished.

Behind consistent play by Rolando Blackman and the shooting of Mike Evans, who played the final 14 minutes of the game with four fouls, K-State fought back to cut the Cowboys' lead to three with 17 seconds remaining.

SCOTT LANGTON then cut the lead to one when he connected on a jump shot with five seconds left. Evans committed his fifth foul with four seconds left and sent Eli Johnson to the line for the Cowboys.

Johnson hit on the front end of the one-and-one to put the Cowboys up 67-65, then missed the second freethrow. But the Cowboys claimed the rebound of the missed free throw, and the game.

The 'Cats were led in scoring by Evans' 23 points, followed by Langton and Blackman with 14 and 12 points, respectively.

OKLAHOMA STATE was paced by the shooting of Mark Tucker, who pumped in 22 points, and Andrew Jones, who added 14.

The loss drops the 'Cats record to 14-10 overall and 5-7 in Big Eight play, while the Cowboys move their record to 9-14 and 3-9.

'Cats sign 14 to national grid letters

K-State signed 14 high schoolers to national football letters-of-intent yesterday, the first day the national letters could be signed.

All-stater Kerry Benton of Wichita Southeast and end Doug Catloth of Lawrence were added to the Wildcat fold, in addition to 12 athletes who signed Big Eight letters-of-intent last week.

Benton is a 6-2, 212-pound noseguard and offensive guard. Catloth is a 6-5, 210-pound tight end and defensive end.

Only one prepster who had signed a conference letter to K-State failed to sign the national form Wednesday. He's Sid Abramowitz of Leavenworth, who is also considering West Point and the Air Force Academy.

"We truly hope the closeness and love in the Abramowitz family will be an influence in Sid's decision to stay close to home," Wildcat head coach Jim Dickey said, referring to the transfer of Ben Abramowitz, Sid's father, to Fort Riley.

Guerillas reject proposal

Rhodesian plan 'moderate'

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP)—Prime Minister Ian Smith and moderate black politicians agreed Wednesday on a plan for black majority rule in Rhodesia, but nationalist guerrillas rejected the proposal out of hand and U.S. diplomat Andrew Young expressed fear it would bring a black-versus-black bloodbath.

"A victory for moderation," Smith called the accord after he and the three black leaders emerged smiling from the red-brick negotiating hall in the plush white suburb of Highlands. For 10 weeks, the two sides had been arguing over the blueprint of a new constitution calling for universal suffrage and containing safeguards for whites.

Young, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations who has been negotiating with nationalist guerrillas, said in New York that the pact could lead to "another Angola-type war" with 40,000 guerrillas pouring into Rhodesia from nearby Tanzania and Zambia.

High schools don't teach study habits

By MARY WOBKER
Collegian Reporter

High Schools aren't tough enough.

At least that's what a K-State student panel told Kansas high school principals and counselors at the annual K-State Principal-Counselor-Student Conference Wednesday.

Panel members said high schools should do more to encourage students to get a well-rounded education, to develop better study habits and to learn how to budget their time before they go to college.

Although the panel said discipline can be overdone, the members agreed it is needed.

"I think discipline is very important and I think students are calling for it now," said Pat Sargent, junior in accounting. "They do want discipline. They do want structure."

PANEL members said high school students should take a variety of subjects to prepare them for college.

"Stress to the student, all the way through, that they need to get a well-rounded education," Sargent told the educators.

"I took the harder classes (in high school) and was in the honors programs," said Kathryn Strecker, sophomore in agronomy. "It really helped. I would encourage more kids to get into it, especially if they're going to college."

The panel cited English as the subject causing the most trouble in the transition from high school to college.

"I think this is one area the counselors need to look into because it's going to affect every one of your students," said Randy Tosh, freshman in horticulture.

ALTHOUGH all aspects of English are important and need to be improved at the high school level, English composition was cited as needing the most emphasis.

"There wasn't enough writing stressed," said Clark Ruttenger, freshman in pre-med.

"It's hard to understand what goes on up here in some of these courses when you have no background," he said.

Students do need more work in practical writing, according to Vincent Gillespie, assistant professor of English.

AND A co-leader of the guerrillas, immersed in a 5½-year struggle to overthrow Smith by violence instead of talk, dismissed the agreement peremptorily.

"It will not work," said Joshua Nkomo, speaking in Lusaka, the Zambian capital. "The war continues. We now know who the enemies are."

Nkomo's forces operate from bases in Zambia. He and his partner in the Patriotic Front alliance, Mozambique-based guerrilla chief Robert Mugabe, rejected the Salisbury talks in advance as a "farce" and did not attend.

Young, who is black, said after

Wednesday's announcement that the United States and Britain now would have to bring black moderates and guerrillas together, but Nkomo dismissed that idea as "nonsense."

NONETHELESS, Smith was jubilant.

"We have succeeded in overcoming because we have shown tremendous patience and we were not prepared to give in," said Smith.

He led Rhodesia's 263,000 whites in declaring independence from Britain 12 years ago to forestall handing over power to the 6.7 million blacks and ending the white control that began in the 19th-century days of colonization.

The eight-point agreement under which Smith would do just that calls for one-man, one-vote elections to a 100-member parliament, with 28 seats reserved for whites for at least 10 years.

The accord prescribes a bill of rights and protection against nationalization or seizure of property and land; an independent judiciary, public service board, civil service, police and army; guarantees that pensions be freely paid outside Rhodesia and permission for Rhodesians to maintain double citizenship.

COORDINATOR APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE

ARTS, COFFEEHOUSE, CONCERTS, FEATURE FILMS, EXECUTIVE, KALEIDOSCOPE, TRAVEL, ISSUES & IDEAS,
OUTDOOR RECREATION, PROMOTIONS

Arts and Crafts Fair, Emerson Lake and Palmer, Bryan Bowers, a photography contest, the movie Rocky, hiking in the Ozarks and a ski trip to Colorado. What do all these things have in common? They are all programs sponsored by the K-State Union Program Council.

Union Program Council is an exclusively volunteer organization composed of students with an interest in serving the university community by sponsoring cultural, educational, and recreational programs.

UPC provides volunteer student workers with a real-life laboratory to test their abilities through program conception, execution and evaluation.

Committee coordinators strive to initiate and guide these programs while developing their own leadership skills.

Applications are now available in the Activities Center, 3rd floor of the K-State Union. The filing deadline is noon on February 24, 1978. All applications are to be returned to the Activities Center. No applications will be accepted after this date.

'America' fans line up — at mail box; orders must be postmarked by Feb. 17

By PEGGY PATCHEN
Collegian Reporter

"Pick me first" was scribbled on one of the 1,500 mail order envelopes already received by the Union Programming Council (UPC) for the March 3 "America" concert.

There has been no favoritism in filling the 6,000 ticket orders received so far by UPC, according to Rob Cieslicki, UPC program adviser.

"This takes all the excitement out of being first in line for ticket sales, but it's awfully cold out there," he said.

UPC was asked to try a new ticket policy, said Irene Parsons, coordinator of the UPC concert committee, after the Emerson, Lake and Palmer concert for which people started lining up 11 days in advance.

AT FIRST UPC was worried about the new ticket policy being too complicated, Parsons said.

"But we're pleased with the mail," Parsons said. Parsons is the only person filling the orders.

"With more than one person doing it, there's confusion," Parsons said. "I will know what's happened to tickets when there's a question."

Tickets are filled randomly as they are received in the mail.

"It takes more than a couple days to get the first day's mail order done," Parsons said. "I look at the first, second and third choices and try to put people somewhere near there. I don't like putting people in the balcony unless they want to be there."

"America" tickets will not be sold Feb. 18 through Feb. 21.

"We want to get caught up with all the mail orders before they can be picked up the 22nd," Cieslicki said. "Mail orders must be post-marked before the 17th to be sure they will be filled out."

TICKETS GO on sale Feb. 22 to the general public. Virtually everybody ordered $7 tickets, Cieslicki said.

"This means a lot of people are going to have cash refunds," he said. Refunds and tickets can be picked up until March 3, the day of the concert. Before this year refunds were handled by the comptroller's office.

"That would take weeks to get people's refunds back. That's why we're giving cash," Parsons said. Cash will be put in the envelopes and students will have to sign a receipt and send it to UPC to show that they received the money, Cieslicki said.

"We haven't gotten any feed-back at all about the new ticket policy," Cieslicki said.

"The mail is great so people must like it," Parsons said.

Senate to pick up yearly election bill; may be tabled again for new session

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

A bill establishing yearly Student Senate elections and a resolution calling for administrative funding of academic activities will be considered by senate tonight at 7 in the Union Big 8 Room.

The yearly election bill calls for senate elections to be held the fourth full week of classes in the spring semester. Currently, half of senate is elected in the fall and half in the spring.

If the bill is adopted, it would go into effect February 1979, with the senators elected in October 1977 being held over until February 1979.

A CONSTITUTIONAL revision and by-law change, the bill must be approved by three-fourths of the senate and by two-thirds of the college councils.

The bill was considered by student senate last week but had to be tabled because of a lack of senators at the meeting to vote on the measure.

"There weren't enough (senators) present. It requires 34 votes to pass it so they tabled it," said Cindy Thomas, senate chairman and a sponsor of the bill.

Thomas said illness was the reason so many senators were absent from the meeting.

Thomas said the bill may be tabled again this week so the new senate can consider it.

"I've heard some people want to table it so the new senate will have to consider it. They are tired of hassling with it," she said.

"I think it's the old senate's responsibility one way or the other," Thomas said.

SENATE WILL also consider a resolution calling for administrative funding of academic activities. The resolution would require the University administration to assume financial responsibility for academically-related activities currently funded by senate.

Steve Walton, arts and sciences senator and a sponsor of the resolution, said activities based on a class such as debate should be paid for by the administration and not with student fees.

"The administration says students should pay for the activities and the college councils say they are academically oriented, so the University should," Walton said.

"The University needs to step in and share its responsibilities. The students are meeting their obligations," he said.

Senate will also hear the first reading of a constitutional resolution requiring senators to serve on a standing committee. Currently the only requirement of senators is attendance of senate meetings.

KC park may be site of straw path art

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Christo, who constructed a 25-mile-long cloth fence in the California countryside, is now looking with artistic longing at Kansas City, where he envisions 2½ miles of straw-covered nylon over a winding foot path in Kansas City's scenic Loose Park.

"I think it would be a very beautiful work of art," the New York artist said Tuesday as he presented the plan to the Kansas City Parks and Recreations Board.

Coal strike not yet a threat to Carter's economic plan

WASHINGTON (AP)—The long coal strike is not threatening President Carter's economic program yet, but it could cause short-term damage to employment and production figures, administration economists said Wednesday.

The administration has begun a top-level analysis of what could happen to the economy if the strike, entering its 73rd day Thursday, continues much longer.

"We don't foresee any major economic impact at least for the next month," said William Nordhaus, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, who is heading up the effort to assess the consequences of the record-long strike.

He said economists think the maximum impact from a statistical standpoint would be a reduction of 0.25 percent in the nation's gross national product during the first quarter of 1978.

IN COMPARISON, that would be small. In the first quarter of 1977, the gross national product, which measures the value of all U.S. goods and services produced, grew at an annual rate of 7.5 percent.

But Nordhaus said in an interview that in regions where coal supplies are growing scarce, especially in the east-central region of the country, "Clearly there are some cases of real hardship and lost output. We are trying to minimize these as much as possible."

He said the nation's jobless rate, which was 6.3 percent in January, could rise slightly and temporarily. But, he said, "so far there has been no noticeable effect on employment."

Nordhaus said some automakers may cut production for lack of coal, but there probably would be shutdowns even without a coal strike.

Nordhaus said auto sales have been disappointingly low in the last two months, which has left automakers overstocked with unsold vehicles. "They are probably just as happy as not to cut back at this stage," he said.

State requirement removes fire hoses in residence halls

Fire hoses and nozzles which have been stored in residence hall corridors have been removed because of a state fire requirement.

The system to which the hoses were attached is a dry system and water must be pumped into the system from a fire hydrant, said Thomas Frith, director of housing.

The fire department brings their own equipment in when there is a fire, Frith said.

"They have had hoses in the past (in the dorms), but many were stolen and we had to rely on the fire department to bring them anyway," he said.

JAMES PUTNAM, director of Haymaker Hall, said fire extinguishers are kept on each corridor instead of hoses. He said there isn't a faucet to turn on the water anyway, and the fire department has to pump in the water.

"The fire extinguishers are periodically inspected. We always try to keep them in working order," Putnam said.

Rebecca Jones, director of Ford Hall, said the hoses kept in the halls couldn't be relied on.

"The fire department feels their equipment would be better to use. They have a continual checking and maintenance of their equipment," Jones said.

A TREASURY Department economist agreed. "The auto companies are having problems. Inventories are fairly high and sales aren't that strong anyway, so they need to run down their inventories."

Nordhaus noted that in the east-central states, such as Ohio and Indiana, coal stockpiles for power generation have declined to as low as 30 days of "normal consumption" in some areas, which is considered a low level.

But he said that even a 30-day supply for normal use can be stretched to cover a much longer period through conservation measures and by bringing in power utilities in other regions.

However, the transfer of power from one region to another can result in an increased costs to consumers, since such power is usually more expensive, and utilities would pass the cost along to consumers.

The Department of Energy has started its own survey of the impact of the coal strike, according to Albert Linden, assistant administrator for energy data.

HE said the agency is conducting a survey of utilities in various states to determine from them what impact a curtailment in power would have on employment in the industries they service.

"We're just starting to look at it, and it will be a week or so before we know anything," Linden said.

One government economist, who did not want to be quoted, thought the government was slow to start its analysis of the economic impact of the strike. But he agreed there probably had been little overall impact yet, other than in the coal industry itself.

He said if the shortages force a cutback in steel production, the economy could suffer, because that would have secondary impacts, causing varied job layoffs and production cutbacks.

A Little off the Beaten Path,
But well worth it.

Former president's visit includes lectures, lunch

By JANE WINGER
Collegian Reporter

Former President Gerald Ford will deliver the 41st Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Monday in Ahearn Field House.

The lecture is open to the public and doors to the field house will open at 9:30 a.m.

Ford will be the second president to speak at K-State. President Richard Nixon, while still in office, was a Landon Lecturer in 1970.

Ford will arrive Sunday in Topeka and will spend most of Monday on the K-State campus. The former president will speak at the "Survey of the Mass Media" class Monday morning and "Seminar in Military History" class Monday afternoon. Robin Higham, military history professor, said Ford will discuss the President as commander-in-chief of the armed forces during his class.

Monday evening Ford will return to Topeka to have dinner with Governor and Mrs. Landon. Tuesday morning he will speak at the Governor's Prayer Breakfast in Topeka before heading to Lawrence where he will speak at the University of Kansas law building dedication.

BARRY FLINCHBAUGH, coordinator of the Landon Lecture series said Ford's address will be carried live by WIBW-TV (Channel 13), Topeka and K-State's AM radio station, KSAC, which will originate the broadcast for a statewide network.

Radio station KSAC (580) will also carry a delayed broadcast of Ford's talk at 3 p.m. Monday.

Immediately following his lecture, Ford will be a guest at the Landon Lecture Patrons luncheon honoring former Gov. Alfred Landon. Other guests will include Gov. Bennett and his wife Olivia, First District Congressman Keith Sebelius (R-Norton) and Attorney General Curt Schneider.

Ford's K-State appearance is part of the American Enterprise Institute's (AEI) academic outreach program. His AEI commitment schedules him to speak at 11 college and university campuses this spring.

Haldeman claims Soviets asked U.S. to join in nuclear strike against China

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Soviet Union once moved a massive arsenal of nuclear missiles near its border with China and offered to join the United States in a pre-emptive nuclear strike against the Chinese, according to H.R. Haldeman, former White House chief of staff.

Haldeman's new book, "The Ends of Power," claims that U.S. reconnaissance photos showed

See related story, p. 2

1,800 Russian nuclear missiles grouped within two miles of the Ussuri River on the Chinese border during the 1969 Soviet-Chinese confrontation, according to ABC News, which said it had obtained galley proofs of the book.

The report said further that Haldeman, once President Richard Nixon's chief aide, had logged a prediction by Henry Kissinger on Dec. 10, 1969, that the Soviets would attack China by the following April 15.

KISSINGER was then national security adviser at the White House.

According to the book, Nixon subsequently ordered ambassador to Poland Walter Stoessel to publicly contact China's ambassador in Warsaw in order to signal, in ABC's words, "in unmistakable terms, American disapproval of the proposed nuclear strike. Only after that did the Russians remove their nuclear forces."

In an interview with ABC News, Kissinger denied Haldeman's version of the Soviet-Chinese episode.

Earlier, the Washington Post reported that separate sections of the book reflects Haldeman's belief that Nixon "caused those burglars to break into" the Democratic Party's Watergate offices, and later personally erased incriminating material from secret White House tapes.

THE MATERIAL obtained by the Post quoted Haldeman as saying Nixon tried, with only partial success, to blank out the famous 18½-minute section of an Oval Office recording, leaving it to someone else to finish the erasure.

The book says that Nixon was determined in the spring of 1972 to strike back at longtime political foe Lawrence O'Brien, then Democratic chairman, and asked Colson to "get the goods" on O'Brien.

"Which leads me to my own theory of who initiated the Watergate break-in," Haldeman is quoted in the Post excerpts. "Richard Nixon, himself, caused those burglars to break into O'Brien's office."

Student Senate nixes once-a-year elections

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

A bill calling for Student Senate elections to be held once a year, during spring semester, instead of two elections per year was defeated by senate last night.

The bill provided for the yearly election of senate beginning February 1979 with the senate elected in October 1978 held over until February 1980.

The bill was defeated by a 29-10 vote of senate. A constitutional revision requires a three-fourths vote of senate to pass, and voting on the bill fell short of the 34 votes needed for approval.

Senators debated the goals of the bill, which was to provide continuity and efficiency for senate and to increase participation in student government by having only one election per year.

Richard Stumpf, agriculture senator, said yearly elections would not allow for any continuity in senate because of the chances of a complete turnover in senate membership.

"If you have two elections per year, you will have at least part of the committees that will know what has been covered," Stumpf said.

Lisa Zahn, education senator, said students would be more likely to vote if there was one election because candidate interest would be more intense in a single election.

"From working with the campaign, I've learned that the voter turnout would be stronger," she said. Zahn was elections committee chairman for spring elections this semester.

IN OTHER action last night, senate voted to encourage the University administration to help fund academically-oriented activities and organizations.

Steve Walton, arts and sciences senator and sponsor of the bill, said the administration should help senate and college councils fund debate, forensics and other academically-oriented activities.

"This is to say that Student Senate and the councils have made a fair commitment and that the commitment should be met by the University," Walton said.

"It is simply a resolution to say that they (the administration) are failing in their responsibilities so far," he said.

Senate also passed a bill increasing the subsistence fees for students traveling on senate-approved trips to $5 per person per day for meals and to $5.50 per person per day for lodging.

Senate also approved a bill recognizing today as K-State Agriculture Awareness Day.

Senate delays vote on bill to implement death penalty

TOPEKA (AP) — After more than two hours of debate and parliamentary maneuvering Thursday, the Kansas Senate delayed indefinitely consideration of a bill to reinstate the death penalty in Kansas.

On a vote of 20-19, the Senate agreed to suspend debate on the most emotional issue facing the 1978 session following a host of ill-fated attempts to pass, kill and alter the bill.

Those attempts came after proponents of the bill had tried but failed to block floor amendments.

THE House-passed bill will remain on the calendar, but whether the Senate will consider the measure anytime during the remainder of the session is uncertain.

"The bill will remain on the calendar in indefinite repose," said Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar, who governs the order of the legislation considered by the chamber.

Gaar said the earliest that the Senate would take another look at the bill would be sometime after the Feb. 27 deadline for consideration of legislation endorsed by Senate committees.

Efforts by opponents and proponents of the death penalty to pass or kill the bill failed on repeated votes. An attempt by Sen. Don Allegrucci, who led anti-death penalty forces, to substitute the capital punishment provision for a 30-year mandatory minimum sentence in first degree murder cases failed, 22-18, when he lost votes he had expected.

Allegrucci said afterward he was uncertain of the fate of the issue but admitted he wasn't displeased by the outcome if it means postponement for the remainder of the 90-day session.

"If this is an alternative to the death penalty, I'll take it," he said of the stalemate as he walked off the Senate floor after a long afternoon of emotional debate.

Haldeman book excerpts reveal Watergate secrets

NEW YORK (AP)—Here are highlights of the 30,000 word excerpt of H.R. Haldeman's forthcoming book, released by Newsweek magazine on Thursday:

WATERGATE BREAK-IN—Richard Nixon caused the Watergate break-in in an effort to get evidence to prove that Democratic National Chairman Lawrence O'Brien was on Howard Hughes' payroll at the time he was head of the Democratic National Committee. Nixon and aide Charles Colson were furious at O'Brien for capitalizing on the ITT scandal, and Nixon told Colson to prove that O'Brien was employed by Hughes.

ALLEGED BLACK-MAIL—Kenneth Clawson, a former Colson aide, told Haldeman that Colson was blackmailing the president with tapes Colson made of his conversations with Nixon.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY DUPLICITY—Haldeman wrote that Democratic Party leaders were aware that their headquarters were going to be broken into but decided not to block the break-in. Instead, he wrote, the Democrats tipped police.

CIA INVOLVEMENT—The Central Intelligence Agency monitored the progress of the Watergate operation and then sabotaged it. As evidence of sabotage, Haldeman cited actions by former CIA agent James McCord. He said the wiretap placed by McCord on O'Brien's phone did not have the range to reach the place where the receivers were. He also said McCord placed tape on doors in the Watergate complex where it could easily be discovered.

NIXON AND COVER-UP—Nixon was involved in the Watergate cover-up from the very beginning, Haldeman said. He wanted the cover-up for three reasons: So he would not be linked, through Colson, to the break-in; to prevent disclosure of any responsibility John Mitchell might have had; and to keep secret other activities such as the break-in at the office of Daniel Ellsberg's psychiatrist.

DEEP THROAT—Haldeman says the source who aided Washington Post reporters Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein—was Fred Fielding, a deputy to presidential aide John Dean.

Correction

Carter defends selling jets

WASHINGTON—The Carter administration defended its proposed sale of top-quality jet planes to Saudi Arabia Thursday while Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan met here with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Dayan, the hero general of the 1967 Mideast war, is trying to get the decision on aircraft sales reversed. Dayan also is trying to offset Arab gains in U.S. policy and with the American public.

Meanwhile, President Carter told Dayan that the date of Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's visit to Washington will be March 14-15 and that the visit may be three days long.

In a 10-page memorandum, the State Department said that the sale of 60 F-15 Eagles to Saudi Arabia is consistent with "the overriding objective of a just and lasting peace" in the region.

U.S. develops laser weapons

WASHINGTON—The Pentagon's top scientist on Thursday proposed a spending boost to push development of new weapons that could destroy attacking missiles and hostile enemy satellites with highly concentrated light beams.

William Perry, Defense Department research chief, said the Russians are making a major development effort but that "overall, we believe the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. high energy laser programs are roughly equal at the present time."

Although Perry's annual report to Congress avoided any rhetoric about a race with the Soviet Union for exotic futuristic weapons, a competition between the United States and the Soviet Union has been under way for some time behind a wall of secrecy that has obscured many of the details.

Perry recommended $184.1 million in spending on high-energy laser beam weapons, an increase of about $34 million over this year, in what he described as an "early advanced development effort."

Proposal changes tax value

TOPEKA—House Speaker John Carlin, (D-Smolan), said Thursday a constitutional amendment he is proposing is an attempt to do the same thing for urban homeowners that use value appraisal would do for owners of farmland.

Under use value, agricultural land would be assessed for tax purposes on the basis of its worth to produce crops or livestock, rather than on a basis of its fair market value as now.

Most agree reappraisal of agricultural land is essential to implementing the new system, but rural legislators say it is only fair that urban property be reassessed at the same time. That reassessment could be expected to increase urban property valuations dramatically.

Bus crash injures five

HILLSBORO, Ks.—Five students were hospitalized Thursday after a three-vehicle collision involving two Unified School District 410 school buses on Kansas Highway 15, four miles north of Hillsboro.

Those admitted were in good condition, said Donald Klassen, administrator at the Salem Hospital in Hillsboro. Most had sprains or cuts, but some were being held for observation for possible neck injuries, he said.

Nine other students were treated at the hospital and dismissed.

The accident apparently occurred shortly before 9 a.m., when a pickup truck in front of the buses of 68 fifth- and sixth-grade students slowed to turn onto a rural road, Hillsboro police Officer Jim Knaak said.

Committee refuses parents' claim for $25,000 restitution

TOPEKA (AP)—The Senate Ways and Means Committee rejected Thursday the claims of the parents of two slain park rangerettes for $25,000 compensation each, likely assuring emotional debate on the Senate floor when the full body considers the issue.

The panel applied the state workmen's compensation rule which provides only for funeral and medical expenses.

There are similar bills to pay the claims before the House Ways and Means Committee, but that panel did not act on them Thursday following a hearing Wednesday.

The motion by Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta) to limit the state's financial compensation in the cases of Elizabeth Bush of Junction City and Paula Fabrizio of Ellis carried, 7-3. A motion by Sen. Billy McCray (D-Wichita) to pay the $25,000 failed on a 4-5 vote.

It is certain to stir heated argument by non-lawyer members who believe the state has a moral obligation, if not a legal one, to compensate the parents beyond funeral expenses.

The same panel had approved Wednesday a bill including the $25,000 compensation for the parents of a 5-year-old Parsons girl, Sherri Janssen, killed by a walkaway from the state mental hospital there.

Federal bill offers tuition tax credit

At last there is a piece of federal legislation that, if passed, will give some tuition relief to middle income families who are putting their sons and daughters through college.

The bill, sponsored by Sens. Robert Packwood of Oregon and Daniel Moynihan of New York, would provide any taxpayer with a tax credit of 50 cents for every dollar spent on tuition, with a maximum credit of $500 (as reported by the Wall Street Journal).

This is all well and good, except that the maximum credit of $500 will benefit those going to a large, state school more than those attending the high-tuition private schools.

A much higher percentage of the tuition of the public institution will be paid than that of the private school.

AND SO THE bill, by its nature, may worsen the problem of competitiveness that now exists between the two educational entities.

President Carter has come up with his own proposal to help middle income families meet the expenses of higher education.

Carter's bill would expand the federal educational grant program, which directly gives grants to needy students.

Under the Carter bill, students with family incomes up to $25,000 would be eligible for a grant of $250 to go towards college costs.

UNFORTUNATELY, $250 does not go very far these days when you consider the cost of going to any college, whether it's a public institution or a private school.

This plan gives even less advantage to the private schools than the Packwood-Moynihan scheme when you consider the problem of tuition competition.

The Packwood-Moynihan bill should be passed.

Even though it has its faults, it is a solid piece of legislation that will provide some financial relief where it is sorely needed.

The grand amour after feminism

There is a lunacy in love, a logic which demands no logic at all. Love's arithmetic, too, defies normalcy.

Despite growing divorce rates, noncommittal trends of intimate affairs and alternative sexual preferences, everyone still loves love—whatever, whoever or whenever it might be.

Having been a part of the decade's strongest movement—the women's movement—I spent a great part of the last two years watching women take a second look at love; analyze it as they did every other aspect of their lives.

Although to some love came to mean less, the movement did not play fatale to love. It did, however, leave it wet behind its ears and crying for a generic break.

FOR WHERE love used to mean romantic pageantry, feminism came and disclaimed. Certainly, love was still important to the emancipated '70s woman, but she was convinced she could live without the once-in-a-lifetime brand.

The societally labeled "liberated" woman insisted on being on an equal basis with her man. She wanted to split the bills, the pain and even the blame. She wanted to be able to leave him as easily as he could leave her. She wanted prediction.

In effect, she was kicking him out the back door and making love to him simultaneously. Innovative strategy, perhaps, but the odds of it working were minimal, I'm sure.

In the search for the soul-searing love, the liberated woman was convinced equality, vanity, sexuality and career were more important.

It was easier to say love was B.S. than to say she had been walked out on five times. Easier still to speak of collective oppression than individual heartache; to say she hated men than to admit she was capable of loving one, of caring about his laundry, his libido and, yes, even his enormous ego.

SO, LOVE and its old embellishments became passe among the younger generation (more and more nothing more than a state of mind). I usually don't dig in old garbage, but idealistic preservation was at stake. As moved as I was and am by the effects of the women's movement, I love hearts and flowers.

Putting aside its political and professional accomplishments, feminism challenged the expectations of lovers.

The movement first engendered a gut, inflammatory reaction best captured in the phrase, "I hate M-E-N!" A war of superlatives began, i.e. who was the best, the most, the strongest, the smartest. The victor was usually the loudest.

After such primaries were dispensed with, there was the probable solution of meeting each other halfway. However, for some it meant gaining ground and, for others, losing face. In love, where two has always equaled one, both partners wanting their way resulted in schizophrenic tug-of-wars.

SO WHERE are we in the twilight of the decade? As for me, I have always been liberated in spirit and I know liberation doesn't mean getting my way nor relinquishing love, or the search for it.

Whether or not the body or mind is moved or unmoved, any search should begin within. For only when we have found at least a part of ourselves can we truly begin giving of ourselves qualitatively instead of quantitatively. Only then can we deposit a part of ourselves and expect some substantial rate of return. Still, there's no insurance for love, and it's so American to expect it any cost.

We have had our consciousness stirred, kneaded and raised mercilessly. Slice the loaf and we still thirst for Montagues and Capulets, Barretts and Brownings.

In today's semi-virginal sophistication, the grand amour still glimmers in the mind's eye. (What is liberation if the right lunatic doesn't come along and turn your life upside right?)

Letters to the editor

Rains or snow, non-resident comeths

Editor,

I paid $840 for tuition and another $100 for books this semester. That means I've paid $3.26 per class meeting (16 weeks times 18 classes per week divided into $940). During last Monday's snowstorm, I had four classes and all met as usual. I think I got my money's worth of education that day.

Randall Jordan wrote to you Feb. 15 and stated he couldn't understand why President Acker and the administration came up with the "brilliant" idea to hold classes. Hopefully one reason was they realized most of us can't afford to spend $13.04 to sit at home and watch it snow. It seems Jordan doesn't understand the economics involved, which is surprising for a senior in business management. (Resident students only pay approximately $1.75 per class meeting.) Better change your major or your attitude, Randall, because in the real world you'll have to function in all weather conditions.

I'm glad I had the opportunity to attend classes last Monday.

Change voting policy

Editor,

The time has come for a change in the student government policy of requiring a validated student I.D. and a fee card. The voter turnout would be much higher if only the I.D. card was required. During the few minutes it took to vote, I observed several students who were turned away at the election tables, because they only had their student I.D.s and not their bulky, odd-sized paper fee cards.

You are not required to bring a special voter card for officials to punch at federal, state or local elections and I can see no reason why K-State students should have to. Perhaps one of our newly elected representatives will take the initiative to implement an alternate method for this cumbersome policy.

Pre-design students prepare for admission to architecture

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

Sophomores in the Department of Pre-Design Professions are in the process of gaining admission to the College of Architecture and Design for the fall semester.

Ifan Payne, head of the Department of Pre-Design Professions, said there are approximately 250 sophomores in the department and usually 80 to 90 percent of those who apply are accepted for admission into one of the three undergraduate architecture departments.

Testing of the applicant's written communication skills and math ability will be Saturday. Then, the job of providing a portfolio of graphic communications and design work for review must be completed by March.

"Mostly it's their (the student's) responsibility to put together a portfolio," Payne said. "But, there is guidance and help if they need it."

PAYNE SAID there are several reasons why a pre-design student might not be accepted into one of the architecture departments. Sometimes the student has a weakness in math or design, he said. Also, some transfer students might be deferred from entrance if they only have a semester's worth of grades from K-State.

"There's rarely a straight 'no' to a student applying for admission," Payne said. "The advisers get in and try to suggest ways to strengthen the student's weakness."

The purpose of the pre-design curriculum is to give a common environmental design program to the student, he said. This gives them a chance to choose which of the three departments—architecture, landscape architecture or interior architecture—they want to go into, according to Payne.

The majority of pre-design students apply for admission into the architecture department, according to Eugene Kremer, head of the Department of Architecture.

Kremer said his department has grown in the past five years from an enrollment of 200 to about 350.

EACH YEAR something in the order of 100 to 140 students apply for entrance into the Department of Architecture, he said. But this year's figure won't be known until March.

"If everyone applying is doing well they are accepted," Kremer said. "There are no quotas."

Jack Durgan, head of the Department of Interior Architecture, said current enrollment in his department is around 60 with about 20 new students coming in each year. The Department of Landscape Architecture has an enrollment of 87.

Total enrollment varies from year to year but the College of Architecture and Design hasn't had any substantial decreases, according to William Jahnke, assistant dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

"Throughout the University there is a decrease as some students drop out," Jahnke said.

JAHNKE SAID students sometimes leave the school for some work experience and usually come back and get their degrees. Three or four percent of the students in the college don't finish school, according to Jahnke.

"The biggest attrition rate occurs in the first two years which is often a misconception from what they heard in high school," he said.

ESU scholarship to provide six-week international study

The Manhattan branch of the English-Speaking Union (ESU) will award a scholarship early next spring to a local citizen.

Kathrine Davis, chairman of the ESU scholarship committee, said the award will be made either for study in a six-week international post-graduate summer school at a major British university or for a local teacher or librarian to take up a one-month residency at comparable British schools.

Prospective applicants should contact Davis at 539-5452 for further information.

The English-Speaking Union is a non-profit, tax-exempt organization supported entirely by the dues and contributions of its members and friends.

The Manhattan Branch of the ESU is one of 79 branches in the United States and the only one in Kansas. It has sponsored a number of appearances by prominent persons connected with other English-speaking countries, such as the recent visit of Douglas Brown, British Consul General assigned to St. Louis.

The local organization also has awarded four previous scholarships, most of them to persons still residing in the Manhattan area.

Kansas oil industry denies evasion charge

TOPEKA (AP)—The oil and gas industry in Kansas has escaped millions of dollars in taxes by not paying at the legally mandated rate, Sen. Arnold Berman charged Thursday.

Berman said favored tax treatment for oil and gas in Kansas has resulted in assessing the industry at about half the required 30 percent of market value. An industry spokesman denied the charge.

"A full 30 percent assessment would be around $1.5 billion, nearly twice the present $848 million (annually)," Berman told the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee. "If oil and gas in Kansas is fully assessed, which is what the industry representatives tell us, then a hypothetical purchaser could buy all of this state's oil and gas for about $2.8 billion. With a true market value of $5 billion, this lucky buyer could pocket a cool $2 billion profit on the deal."

The conclusion was based on calculations in which Berman valued all of Kansas' oil reserves at $5 a barrel and all gas reserves at 60 cents per thousand cubic feet, and then assessed the total value at 30 percent.

AS A result, the fair market value of oil and gas in Kansas is $2 billion more than currently valued by tax officials, according to the Lawrence Democrat.

Donald Schnacke, lobbyist for the Kansas Independent Oil & Gas Association, said afterward the approach was too simplistic.

"We are paying 30 percent," Schnacke said following the meeting. "We are paying in excess of 30 percent based on a complicated formula which is a recognized engineering approach for appraising a depletable mineral resource."

He said the formula is a "time-tested, recognized system of appraising oil and gas properties" and is the only fair way to tax the industry.

Schnacke said Berman's method didn't take into account "the depletion of the reserves, and that's the flaw in making a simple appraisal in how you evaluate our industry."

Berman addressed the Senate Committee on behalf of his bill which would impose a 2 percent severance tax on oil and gas. Even if oil and gas is being assessed at 30 percent of its value, the industry has paid less than other taxpayers, based on figures from the Division of Property Valuation, Berman said.

PACE test helps fill federal jobs

The Professional Administration Career Examination (PACE), could be helpful to college seniors nearing graduation.

PACE offers students an opportunity to compete for a wide variety of entry-level jobs in federal agencies.

"The PACE examination is the primary way the federal government fills entry-level positions with students with non-technical degrees," said David Kraus, Assistant of Career Planning and Placement.

Most of these entry-level positions start at the GS-5 (bachelor's degree) or GS-7 (bachelor's degree plus one year of graduate study) levels. GS-5 salary starts at $9,959 and GS-7 is $12,336.

"All these positions offer potential for advancement to higher level professional and administrative jobs," Kraus said.

The deadline for filing applications is Feb. 28. Forms may be picked up in the Career Planning and Placement Center. Applicants will then be notified of the exact date of the test.

Loan applications deadline Feb. 21

Filing deadline for the Higher Education Assistance Foundation (HEAF) loan applications is Feb. 21.

"Higher Education Assistance Foundation will not approve and issue any loan check when the projected date for delivery of the loan check would occur during the thirty days prior to the end of the semester," said Louise Henricks, administrative assistant of Student Financial Assistance.

The processing time of applications is about five weeks after the loan application is received in Overland Park. SFA has been notified that no applications will be processed if received after Feb. 28.

SFA will discontinue accepting loan applications for loans for the spring semester on Feb. 21.

"This will provide time to complete the loan application, return it to the student, so that the student will have sufficient mailing time for the application to reach (the HEAF) by Feb. 28," Henricks said.

Proposed southern bypass to benefit downtown area

By PERYN COMINSKY
Collegian Reporter

Although all of the details are not yet worked out, Russell Reitz, mayor of Manhattan said that he will do all that he can to propose a program to build a southern bypass around Manhattan.

According to Reitz, the building of the bypass is contingent upon obtaining the Rock Island right-of-way in south Manhattan.

Reitz said that he sees several benefits to building the bypass.

First, he said, the bypass would draw more traffic to the downtown area. Secondly, he said the bypass would eliminate a lot of the traffic from Yuma street which isn't meant to be an arterial road.

COMMISSIONER Terry Glasscock is also in favor of the building of a southern arterial.

Glasscock said the construction of the arterial is vital in the redevelopment of downtown.

In attempting to draw more people to the downtown area, a study has been made looking at the available parking space in the downtown area.

Glasscock said that the results of the parking study are still vague since they haven't been drawn up into the formal proposal. He said solving the parking problem downtown is second to building the southern bypass.

"Both the possible parking solutions and the southern bypass must be successful to make the redevelopment of downtown successful," he said.

Bruce McCallum, Manhattan's city engineer said the results of the study showed three locations that could possibly be used for parking facilities.

THESE AREAS include the private parking lot behind the Riley County Courthouse, the area between Second and Third streets on Houston and the southwest corner of Third and Houston.

McCallum said that plans for the development of downtown parking are still in the preliminary stages. He said in executing a plan to acquire more parking facilities, the city would have to buy land from the present owners.

City Planner Gary Smith told commissioners at Tuesday's city commission meeting that 80-20 fund matchings may be available from the federal government to study the feasibility of a mass transit system in Manhattan.

Another city planner, Barbara Bloomberg, said the city planning board was contacted by the consulting firm of Henningson, Durham and Richardson of Omaha, and advised that there are federal funds available from the Transportation Department to study mass transportation in small cities.

"We are now in the process of drawing up a letter of intent so that we can possibly take advantage of these funds," she said.

BLOOMBERG said that although the money is for a feasibility study only, she could think of several reasons for developing a mass-transportation system in Manhattan.

"A mass-transportation system would make the downtown shopping area accessible to a greater number of people without having about worry about having a place to park," she said.

Bloomberg also pointed out that a mass-transportation system could also benefit the college community. She said she is aware of the parking problems that K-State is experiencing and is sure that a mass-transportation system could relieve some of that pressure.

Glasscock said a mass-transportation system will have to be subsidized by the city. He said that it is more important that the downtown area be made more accessible to all parts of the city rather than concentrating on developing residential areas close to downtown.

Marshall seeks coal strike solution, time runs short for threatened states

WASHINGTON (AP)—Labor Secretary Ray Marshall said Thursday he hoped to gain an agreement by today that would end the 73-day-old coal strike but sources within his department indicated there was no great optimism for such a quick settlement.

"We obviously don't have long," Marshall said as he emerged from a 3½-hour bargaining session at midday. "This thing can't go on."

However, Labor Department sources said the bargainers "had a difficult morning."

Meanwhile, Energy Secretary James Schlesinger told Congress the administration is prepared to order coal moved to states hard hit by the strike if the walkout isn't ended soon.

SCHLESINGER also said that between 6,000 and 8,000 megawatts of electricity a day already are being moved to utilities in Midwestern states faced with the severest coal shortages and that the government is studying ways to increase this flow.

Marshall told reporters he would keep bargainers for the striking United Mine Workers and the soft-coal industry in session throughout the night if necessary to meet his deadline.

Marshall declined to say what steps might be taken if negotiators are unable to reach agreement today.

Meanwhile, President Carter, who prodded the bargainers with a White House pep talk Wednesday night, arranged to meet with governors from a dozen states hardest hit by the increasingly disruptive strike.

Officials said the discussion would deal with ways to alleviate hardships caused by the walkout. In addition, they said Benjamin Civiletti, in charge of the Justice Department's criminal division, would meet with the governors to discuss ways of preventing violence.

GOVERNORS from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Maryland and Wisconsin were invited.

Catholics defend abortion bill

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill to license and regulate abortion services drew support Thursday from the Kansas Catholic Conference, opposition from The Family Planning Alternatives organization, and mixed reaction from the Kansas Women's Political Caucus.

In a statement prepared for a hearing before the House Federal and State Affairs Committee, Vincent DeCoursey, executive director of the Kansas Catholic Conference, said that organization in no way condones abortions at any place for any reason.

But he said that until the U.S. Supreme Court reverses its position or the U.S. Constitution is amended, "the state must take all steps necessary and permissible under the court's decisions to insure that adequate protection is afforded to those undergoing the procedure."

Game makes monkeys of fans

It's really a shame.

A reputation that took decades to build was destroyed in less than thirty seconds.

That reputation was the one held by the K-State fans as being among the greatest in the world. Last Saturday, during the KU game, alumni who helped build that reputation, saw it slip away as K-State fans pelted the Ahearn Field House playing court with more than 100 bananas.

No cheers from the pressbox

Not only was this disaster viewed by the 11,220 fans inside the fieldhouse, but by thousands more that watched the game on regional television.

After viewing the barrage of bananas, I'm sure the alumni that watched the game on their TV sets will re-read the letters they are receiving requesting donations for a new fieldhouse.

THE K-STATE fans who have cried for a new fieldhouse the past few years may have just defeated their own purpose.

K-State head coach Jack Hartman has publicly criticized the television networks in the past for limiting television coverage to select basketball teams, such as Notre Dame, Marquette, and UCLA, and allowing them to gain national exposure.

Hartman may now feel embarrassed that he ever brought this fact to the media's attention after viewing the crowd's banana barrage.

Speaking of UCLA, former Bruin coach John Wooden, (commonly referred to as the dean of college coaches) joined the television broadcast crew and was left almost speechless by the crowd display. He said he'd never seen anything like that at UCLA.

THE QUESTIONS that come to many minds are why? What does this type of action prove? Who benefits from it?

The answer is that no one benefits from it, but many suffer.

Not only does the reputation of being "super fans" diminish but also the risk of injury to a player is great. Two or three times Saturday afternoon Mike Evans and Darnell Valentine lost their footing and could have suffered serious injuries due to the slick floor.

Before the game when Evans asked the crowd to refrain from throwing things onto the court he received intermittent boos from the crowd. That's not much respect to show a man looked upon by many as a "demi-god" on campus.

TO DELAY the start of the game five to ten minutes is bad enough, but then to repeatedly throw toilet paper and bananas on the court, delaying the finish of the game, showed that K-State fans don't know how to lose graciously.

The word losing has not, and many fans will not let it, enter the dictionary of K-State basketball.

Saturday, Wildcat fans will get a chance to either redeem themselves or dig their ditch a little deeper, when Missouri comes to Ahearn Field House to play another regionally televised game.

This game could mark the last home appearance for Wildcat and Big Eight leading scorer Evans. Win or lose, let's show Evans and the rest of the state what type of fans the K-State Wildcats really have. Winners!

Muhammad Ali tested fate once too often

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Muhammad Ali went to the well once too often, and the result was one of the most monumental tragedies in sports.

"It's easy. A couple of more $3 million-plus paychecks against pushovers and then maybe a $10 million killing for a fourth fight against Ken Norton, win or lose." That was the way the beautiful picture was painted to the rusting 36-year-old boxing champion of the world.

It looked inviting to Ali, although he fell into long periods of moodiness.

There was one catch in it. Ali and all the brains and wellwishers around him reckoned without the grit and determination of a ring-rat, 24-year-old ex-Marine named Leon Spinks.

THEY forgot that the gristly Spinks, 27 pounds lighter than the champion, with a four-inch shorter reach and only seven pro fights to throw against Ali's 17 years' experience, grew up in the ghetto of North St. Louis.

He learned his art on the streets where strong fists and a stouter heart were the main sources of survival. In these alley brawls, the more you got hit and the deeper the hurt the fiercer you fought back.

This was the scenario of the 15-round title fight Wednesday night in the Hilton Pavilion when Spinks, unawed by the Ali mystique and calling upon his rudimentary street skills, hammered out a split decision over the world's ring idol.

"Ali was duped. Everybody around him told him this kid would be a pushover," said Gene Kilroy, one of the champion's advisers.

ALI manfully shouldered the blame. "I played around too much in the early rounds," he said. "What I didn't figure on was his stamina and his will to win."

In the next breath, the aging ex-titleholder talked of another Ali miracle, a comeback that could make him the first man ever to win the heavyweight title three times.

He had his championship taken away in 1967 because of refusal to enter military service and had to win it back after 3½ years of mandated idleness.

Another comeback now at age 36? It's unthinkable. Time has caught up with one of the finest fighting machines and most electrifying personalities the game has seen.

Danner likes 'Cats' tourney chances

By STAN ERWINE
Staff Writer

The 'Cats will be ready for the Big Eight post-season tournament at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, according to K-State forward Dean Danner.

Danner, a sophomore in engineering technology from Manhattan, said that injuries, a lack of depth, and the balance within the conference have been contributing factors to the 'Cats disappointing performances. "People don't realize how many good teams there are this year," he said.

"Even last year there were certain games that you could count on winning, but this year we could get beat almost every time we step on the court, depending on how we play or how our opponent plays," Danner said.

DANNER SAID of the tournament, "We can win it, but so can anyone else."

"We had one of our toughest practices of the year Monday. We scrimmaged the equal of a game and a half," he said.

Danner also said that many Big Eight teams are shooting for the 'Cats after their success a year ago. This is evident explained Danner, in the intensity with which many ball clubs attack K-State.

"Curtis (Redding) is also feeling the effects of a super freshman year," Danner said. "He is being defended so tightly that he has to work twice as hard to get a good shot. Those aren't bad shots he's taking, just super defense making them look bad."

Danner, who was not heavily recruited, came to K-State only after he was offered a scholarship that was not available when he first started talking with Coach Jack Hartman.

"I wasn't going to go to a school with the basketball potential of K-State's without a scholarship. I wanted to go someplace where I would play," he said.

ONCE HERE, Danner said he had to make some adjustments. "I've got Curtis and Rolando (Blackman) to contend with the entire time that I will be here so it is important that I realize my role on this team and contribute what I can in the best way that I can," he said.

"Playing for K-State and playing in Ahearn Field House are dreams come true for me. "I grew up following the 'Cats and becoming involved in the tradition around K-State's basketball program" Danner said.

"The first time I got into a Big Eight game at Ahearn was one of the most exciting moments of my life.

"It's different when you have waited all your life for something. I'm sure Scott Langton could tell you what it meant to him the first time he stepped into a game."

DANNER SAID he had mixed emotions about a new fieldhouse.

"We need a new fieldhouse for recruiting," he said. "Many high school coaches won't let their players come visit K-State during high school basketball season so the recruits only glimpse of Ahearn is when it is empty, and it's not a pretty place — empty."

'Cats hoping for home court; post-season tickets remain

The K-State Wildcats can still gain a home court advantage in the Big Eight post-season tournament.

Providing Oklahoma loses to Iowa State Saturday, the Wildcats must defeat Missouri here Saturday and Oklahoma there Wednesday to gain the advantage.

If K-State fails to gain a home court advantage, Wildcat fans will be able to buy tickets for the first round through the ticket office in Ahearn Field House.

Tickets for the remaining rounds of the tournament, Friday and Saturday, March 3 and 4 in Kansas City's Kemper Arena, still remain. But according to Assistant Big Eight Commissioner DeLoss Dodds, Wildcat fans should hurry if they want seats.

DODDS said $6.35 and $5.30 tickets remain. Fans should mail their ticket requests to the Big Eight Conference, Box 15371, Kansas City, Missouri 64106. To be assured of getting seats, Dodds said they should order $5.30 tickets.

They should specify how many tickets and for which night and include fifty cents for handling.

To order by phone, fans should use a Master Charge or Visa card number and call the Kansas City convention bureau at (816) 221-7555.

They can pick the tickets up at Kemper Arena's "will call" window.

Faculty, student family needs filled at child care centers

By KAREN HOUSTON
Collegian Reporter

Three child-care centers operated by the Department of Family and Child Development serve the community, faculty and student families with different programs to meet different needs.

Faye Ann Presnal, acting director of child-care programs, said the Child Development Laboratory, the Infant and the Child Care Center and the Stone House Center not only serve the parents with quality child care, but also give the children learning experience.

All three of the centers are programmed to meet the needs of the children according to age, developmental level, and the number of hours the child is in the program, Presnal said. The facilities provide activities planned to enhance the growth of the child physically, mentally, emotionally and socially.

LOUELLEN WEST, supervising teacher of the Stone House Center, said seniors in early childhood education in the Department of Family and Childhood Development work as student-teacher at the centers. The student-teachers plan weekly schedules under the direction of faculty advisors to meet behavioral goals such as sharing, number recognition and motor control. They assist the children in activities which support these goals.

Presnal said each facility is funded by fees the parents pay for their child's participation and are also supplemented by a family and child development departmental fund.

The Child Development Laboratory has two sessions a day. A morning session from 9:30 to 11:30 and an afternoon session from 2:30 to 4:30 are offered five days a week. Sixteen children ages 3 to 5 are enrolled in each group.

The Infant and Child Care Center receives some Student Governing Association funding and is for K-State student's children only. The center cares for 15 children during scheduled periods while the student-parent is in class. Children six months to five years old are cared for in a morning session from 8:20-11:30 and an afternoon session from 12:30-3:30.

A CHILD may be enrolled in one or more morning and afternoon sessions but may not attend both sessions on the same day. The parent must actually be in class during part of the time the child is in either sessions.

The Stone House Center is the only full-day center offered as a service to parents who need all day child care.

Faculty Senate makes today Agricultural Awareness Day

A resolution adopted Tuesday by Faculty Senate will allow K-State students and faculty to observe today as Agricultural Awareness Day.

The resolution states that today will "be used to help inform all students concerning the agricultural issues of today."

The resolution also suggested that agricultural issues should be discussed today in all classes.

HIGHLIGHTS of today's activities will include a talk by Jim Kramer, state spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement, at 2:30 p.m. in the Union Forum Hall.

A panel discussion featuring representatives from several agriculture-related organizations will be at 10:30 a.m. in the Union Little Theatre.

The day's activities will begin at 9:00 a.m. in the K-State Union courtyard with musical entertainment followed by a social hour with coffee and doughnuts.

Agricultural Awareness is being sponsored by Students for Agriculture Awareness Committee of the Students for Political Awareness and the Student Socialist Group.

Confusing language stings credit users with charges

WASHINGTON (AP)—Many banks that issue credit cards are levying new finance charges but few consumers can wade through the legalistic language that tells them they're paying higher rates, the staff of a House panel says.

The banks are devising "new schemes to reap more revenue from credit card users," the staff of the House banking subcommittee on consumers said in a memo to Chairman Frank Annunzio (D-Ill). A copy of the memo was obtained by The Associated Press.

The memo cited this section of one disclosure statement as an example of the confusing language consumers sometimes confront:

"The Finance Charge at periodic rate for purchases is computed by: (I) multiplying each portion of the Purchases Finance Charge Balance shown on the face of the statement by the Number of Days in Billing Cycle; (II) applying to the resulting products the applicable daily periodic rate of .04109 percent; (III) adding these products together."

WHAT THAT means, in simple English, is that the 15 percent finance charge is based on the purchaser's average daily balance starting from the day he makes his purchase.

The staff memo said "numerous pieces of evidence are now available that indicate that bankers have not only purposely begun using methods which would be difficult to understand, but they have taken pride in designing disclosure statements that will confuse."

"This office has a tape of a banker announcing to other bankers that his statement of the charge went uncorrected on by all his customers except the attorneys of those who paid in full each month," it said.

The memo says banks have "changed the rules of the game after hooking consumers into the (credit card) service."

The subcommittee staff memo said the new charges began more than 18 months ago when the giant Citibank of New York started levying a 50 cent charge on Master Charge bills of those who pay their monthly bills in full. The extra charge, which was clear to everyone paying it, was dropped early this year because of consumer resistance.

A NEW, more subtle development involves banks computing the finance charge from the time of purchase rather than after the customary 25-day grace period, the memo said.

Alaskan oil flows again after sabotage causes pipeline leak

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP)—Sabotage produced the biggest oil spill in the short history of the trans-Alaska pipeline and forced a day-long shutdown, but oil began flowing again Thursday and tanker shipments to the lower 48 states were not interrupted.

Alaska State Troopers said they had no suspects and did not know what kind of explosive had been used when a two-inch hole was blasted in the pipeline Wednesday afternoon.

John Ratterman, Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., said oil flow resumed at 10 a.m. (2 p.m. CST), less than 24 hours after the explosion was reported.

There was enough oil in holding tanks in the pipeline port of Valdez that no delays in tanker shipments was anticipated, Ratterman said.

Thousands of barrels of thick crude oil—there was no more specific estimate available Thursday—gushed from the hole in the half-inch thick steel pipe. The spilled oil formed pools and sprayed four acres of frozen tundra with a black film before workers could clamp a sleeve over the jagged gash in the 48-inch diameter pipe.

Environmental officials were unable to assess the damage immediately because the area was covered by three feet of snow.

PLO claims responsibility for West Bank assassination

RAMALLAH, Occupied West Bank (AP)—The assassination of one of this town's most powerful Arab figures has aroused fears among Israeli occupation forces that Arab guerrillas have decided to strike at Israel through suspected collaborators.

Wealthy merchant Abdel-Nur Khalil Janhu, 55, gunned down outside his shop, was the third Arab connected with the occupying forces killed in Ramallah in the past two months.

Reports from Beirut said Palestinian guerrillas claimed responsibility for Janhu's murder.

He was known to work closely with the military government, a serious crime under the unwritten code of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The PLO commands the support of most public figures on the West Bank, home of 700,000 Palestinians and now in its 11th year of Israeli occupation.

ISRAELI and Western diplomatic sources agree that if, as suspected, the Palestinians have a "hit list," Janhu's name would have been near the top.

Some diplomats see the current spate of killings as a PLO bid to reinforce its influence, dented by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's dramatic peace overtures to Israel last November.

The PLO vehemently opposes the peace moves, but many West Bank residents hoped the initiative might bring a quick end to the occupation.

Janhu, who died in a hail of bullets Feb. 8 in central Ramallah, was an outspoken PLO opponent who was warned by the PLO-operated radio in Cairo to sever his ties with the Israelis.

ARAB sources say he was suspected of buying up West Bank land and selling it to Jews. The land issue is particularly sensitive and that report—whether or not true—would in PLO judgment merit death.

Palestinian nationalist sources say Janhu used his military government connections to get detained guerrilla suspects released and to obtain foreign study permits for students.

He was usually well-armed and surrounded by bodyguards, one Western diplomat said.

Israeli authorities say, however, they have not ruled out the possibility of a revenge killing. Janhu was tried in 1976 for killing a man from an influential Arab family during a political argument, but acquitted on grounds of self-defense.

'Today's Student' purpose to present 'Christian view'

By BONNIE KIMPLE
Collegian Reporter

"Today's Student", a paper published in Ames, Iowa, is distributed on the K-State campus by an organization called "Christians" to "present the Christian perspectives on campus."

There are 60 people in the "Christians" and 60 percent of them are students, according to Tom Irwin, senior in accounting and president of the group.

The "Christians" and the group which publishes the paper in Ames, New Life, are united by the same goal, Irwin said.

"Our goal is to basically just to communicate the claims of Christ," he said. "We use the paper to present the Christian view. Our goal is to reach the world with the Gospel of Christ."

New Life developed the idea of the paper and offered the paper to the "Christians," Irwin said.

THE "Christians" pay $50 a week for a total of 4,000 copies, and about 2,500 are distributed on campus and the rest in the Manhattan area.

The "Christians" pay for "Today's Student" themselves.

"We all kind of chip in to pay for it," Irwin said. "We have an account as a body of believers. We have been doing it for a semester (distributing the paper)."

The buildings in which the papers are distributed in are the K-State Union, Farrell Library, Cardwell and Ackert Halls and Kramer Food Center.

It is up to the group to place papers outside of buildings, but if outside, the papers had to be in a container so trash wouldn't be a problem, Irwin said.

THE distribution boxes are by the clock in the center of campus and outside of the residence halls room by the Mid-Campus Drive bridge. The boxes must be labeled, Irwin said.

"We're not trying to advertise but the Union wants it (boxes labeled)," Irwin said.

"The thing I enjoy the most is the testimonies. They are true and they clearly show how Christ can change a person's life," Irwin said.

The "Christians" are taking a survey about the paper. Some questions asked are who reads it, what type of person reads it and do people know it is distributed.

Junior colleges discredited

Acker, Chalmers call memo 'hoax'

By BECKY BARTLETT
News Editor

A memo received by Kansas community college presidents last week, which appeared to have been released from the office of K-State Vice President for Academic Affairs John Chalmers, has been deemed a "hoax" by K-State president Duane Acker.

Acker told Kansas Board of Regents members last week that the memo had not been released from Chalmers' office. The forged memo belittled the educational quality of community colleges and asked K-State deans to limit the number of credit hours they should apply from transfer students towards a K-State degree.

The memo, dated May 19, 1977, was received early last week by Welcome Brumbaugh at the Kansas Board of Education Office in Topeka, and was mailed to community college presidents soon after.

BRUMBAUGH said the memo, which appeared to have been printed on Chalmers' letterhead and was signed with his signature, looked "very official."

"It looked like the real thing to me. I'm sure anyone who would have seen it would think the same," Brumbaugh said.

Brumbaugh said that although the memo was on K-State letterhead, it wasn't received in an official K-State envelope, but a plain white business envelope.

Chalmers said the memo had apparently been superimposed over an unrelated memo released from his office in 1975.

"No one took anything from our files," Chalmers said, adding that the memo used for the superimposition was one that had been distributed to more than 2,000 members of the faculty.

Chalmers said he knew it was a forgery when he noticed the secretary's initials on the bottom of the memo. The initials printed were "SA" while his secretary's initials are "LS." Chalmers said he has never had a secretary with the initials "SA."

CHALMERS also said the signature on the memo had an open "s" and, that except when he writes carelessly, his "s" is always closed.

Chalmers' personnel checked through the files until they uncovered a memo dated June 18, 1975, which was an announcement of a general faculty meeting. This memo had the identical signature as that used on the fraudulent memo, Chalmers said.

Chalmers said he was also able to determine the forgery when he noticed the memo was addressed "To: Deans" while he always addresses his memos to the "Council of Academic Deans," because there are other deans, such as the dean of admissions, he said.

The memo also appeared to have been typed on several different typewriters, he said.

The memo was apparently designed to "drive other students to other regent colleges" and in "disparaging ways" hurt the quality of students from community colleges, Chalmers said.

"We have excellent relations with community colleges," he said. "The real damage is to the institution. My own credibility with community colleges is damaged. My own reputation is damaged. First and foremost, it was directed at our good relations with the community colleges."

"No one knows where it (the memo) originated, or why the date May 19, 1977 was picked," said Barry Flinchbaugh, special assistant to President Acker. "It was very easy to see the thing was a hoax from the start."

FLINCHBAUGH said the matter had been turned over to the University attorney, who has already begun an investigation of the incident.

"It's stupid and terrible," Flinchbaugh said, describing the incident. "We value our relationships with junior colleges."

Flinchbaugh said the obvious reason for someone to send such a memo would be to "try to discredit our efforts to establish a good relationship with junior colleges and to create a dissension between K-State and the junior colleges, which could hurt our enrollment."

Acker described the act as "despicable," saying that he intended to "get to the bottom of this."

"It's difficult to believe that dirty tricks could be a part of the higher education community," Acker said in a statement released from University News Friday. "The Kansas Regents' institutions have established an articulation agreement with community colleges that Kansas State University follows religiously."

The memo implied that K-State would limit the number of hours a community college student could apply a degree at K-State to 40 hours.

"In September 1977, 267 students who had completed two years of academic work at Kansas community colleges enrolled as new students at KSU," Acker said. "Virtually all of these received between 60 and 67 hours of credit towards a K-State degree."

Approximately 2,000 community college transfer students are enrolled at K-State, Acker said.

Bump-a-thon organizers to establish constitution

By PEGGY PATCHEN
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Muscular Dystrophy Bump-a-thon executive committee will draw up a constitution this year because of complications in the last Bump-a-thon.

The constitution will include a definite statement on how to eliminate groups, if and how it will be done, and what groups will be asked to be in the Bump-a-thon next year.

The executive committee doesn't intend to drop any living group from the Bump-a-thon. One person from each house instead of two, will represent its living group. Any sponsor will have at least one dancer, according to Mike McKinney, manager of Mother's Worry, sight of the 1977 Bump-a-thon.

Controversy arose this year concerning which groups would be carried over to next year to help sponsor the event.

IN THE past, seven living groups have sponsored the Bump-a-thon. To encourage University involvement, two of those groups were cut and two new living groups were voted in each year.

Ford's speech today at Ahearn

Former President Gerald Ford will present the 41st Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in Ahearn Field House.

The title of Ford's address has not yet been announced but is expected to be of current interest. Doors to the fieldhouse will open at 9:30 a.m.

Ford will also speak to two classes on campus, "Survey of Mass Media" and "Seminar in Military History" today but both classes will be closed to the public.

Ford will speak at the Governor's Prayer Breakfast Tuesday in Topeka before going on to Lawrence to speak at the dedication of the Green School of Law building at the University of Kansas.

"We thought this would be a good working capacity for exec, but when it came to dropping groups this year, nobody wanted to do it," McKinney said.

This year's criteria to drop groups was changed from a strictly financial basis to a committee vote because the financial records weren't valid, according to Kevin Jackson, Acacia executive representative.

Frozen Fire

Italian communists' NATO involvement worries U.S.

ROME (AP)—The Italian Communist Party, striving for a major role in Italy's government, is publicly committed to support NATO but has a foreign policy that generally follows the Soviet line.

This worries the United States and other Western allies of Italy.

The party's foreign policy apparently is genuinely "Eurocommunist": it is "Euro" in its commitment to Western European interests and independence from direct dictation of policy from Moscow, but it is also "communist" in its ideology, choice of friends and policies.

The United States expressed concern Jan. 12 in a formal statement, just before the fall of the Italian government under leftist pressure for Communist participation. The statement repeated U.S. opposition to the Communists and said, "The United States and Italy share profound democratic values and interests, and we do not believe that the Communists share those values and interests."

PREMIER-DESIGNATE Giulio Andreotti, who headed the fallen cabinet, has been negotiating with the Communists and other parties in an effort to form a new government. The Communists are still demanding an influential role in any new administration.

Italian Communist positions on world affairs outside Europe are much more similar to those of Moscow than to those of the West. Even on continental matters, U.S. officials are known to have doubts about the strength of the party's commitment to European military and economic interests through NATO and the European Common Market.

In the two hot spots of current concern to the West, the Middle East and the Horn of Africa, the party has policies nearly indistinguishable from those of the Soviet Union. Those views were confirmed in recent trips to both areas by the Communist shadow cabinet's "foreign minister," Giancarlo Pajetta, and in an interview he gave to The Associated Press.

ON NATO, the party began to change its hostility to the Western military alliance in the early 1970s and officially expressed its support of NATO at the 1975 party congress. Communist leader Enrico Berlinguer has since repeated his support of NATO as a necessary tool in the balance of power between East and West.

But the party mounted a campaign against the neutron bomb, the enhanced radiation bomb which the United States considers crucial to the defense of Western Europe, and signed a Soviet-backed condemnation of it even though Communist Yugoslavia and Romania did not.

On the dissidents in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, Pajetta said, "We have a general position of a critical attitude toward certain measures of censure and even, at times, repression." He added that the party defended the right of the dissidents to express their views, even though they often disagreed with them.

Bump-a-thon committee sets criteria for choosing sponsor living groups night, money was coming in so fast and from so many directions, that we couldn't keep track of which living group the credit should go to. So we did most of the judging by participation," said Debra Smith, secretary of the Bump-a-thon.

"We voted on five groups that we wanted to stay. The Sigma Chi's and Lambda Chi's happened to get the least amount of votes," said Judy Bauman, Alpha Delta Pi financial advisor.

BUT THE Lambda Chi's wanted to remain involved with the Bump-a-thon.

"After that happened, we

Bargaining fails; pressure applied to end coal strike

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration, declaring that collective bargaining had failed, stepped up pressure for an end to the prolonged coal strike Sunday by saying it would consult with Congress on action to end the walkout.

Without being specific, officials said the president was ready to take steps to resolve the strike through "less attractive but unavoidable" alternatives.

Sources said Carter is considering three alternatives: invoking the Taft-Hartley Act, calling for legislation to permit temporary federal seizure of the mines, or asking legislation for binding arbitration in the 76-day dispute.

Asked whether Carter had made a final choice among the three options, White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said, "My suspicion is he has not."

But another source said invoking the Taft-Hartley Act is unlikely because miners are thought unwilling to obey an 80 day back-to-work order.

The announcement of planned consultations with Congress came after a White House meeting at which Labor Secretary Ray Marshall and other top officials reviewed the stalemated talks between the United Mine Workers and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

pointed out that we had been the largest contributor in money-raising and dancers," said Tim Hickok, Lambda Chi Alpha representative.

"This was a bad situation because in the past it was obvious which groups weren't in it. This was the first time a sponsor wanted back in," Smith said.

"It's hard to say anybody 'You can't help us next year,' and it's stupid not to ask for help because this is for muscular dystrophy," McKinney said. "We decided to have another meeting to find a way to let the groups who wanted to be involved be involved for the betterment of the Bump-a-thon itself."

"Considering the work they'd done and the work they will do, we let them back in," Jackson said. "But now there are lots of things to decide — because we let the Lambda Chi's in do we invite one or two sponsors in next year."

"That's why we're getting this constitution," said Steve Deck, chairman of the Bump-a-thon.

JACKSON SAID the constitution is being made for not only the Lambda Chi incident, but because the K-State Bump-a-thon is getting bigger and better.

"We are raising a larger amount of money and there are fewer people doing more work. We need to be more organized," Smith said. "We have the potential of Iowa State, who raised around $36,000. We can do it if we can get people interested in it."

Alpha Delta Pi and Chi Omega sororities, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Lambda Chi and Acacia fraternities, and West Hall will be sponsoring the Bump-a-thon next year.

Grow through cultural awareness

Cross-cultural awareness is an undertaking of vast proportions.

The lack of knowledge about other cultural backgrounds is not only a universal and continental problem, but also a problem at K-State.

Differences in skin tone can make people do strange things—like not interacting with one another, not trying to look past archaic stereotypes or not being interested in the various histories of our lives.

MANY organizations on campus work hard to change this by implementing programs to increase awareness between people of different colors and cultures.

Every semester, students have several opportunities to enrich themselves by learning about some aspect of a different culture.

Last Saturday marked the beginning of another such opportunity—Black Awareness Week.

Let us hope most students know Black Awareness Week is not a time for persons with black skin to rejoice in the streets and praise themselves, although their racial pride may be heightened.

IT IS more a time for Americans of other heritages to reach out and into the black experience, as much a part of Americana as grandmothers and apple pie.

The significance of the week is intangible, although programs are scheduled which the public may attend.

It is a time to reflect on the history and impact of blacks in America, as well as a time to consider their influence on the future of the nation.

It is a time to make ourselves aware of the superficiality of color; to interact with one another, dispell old stereotypes through new knowledge and work towards that thing called brotherhood that has been so elusive in the past.

And, after the designated seven days have gone by, let us hope any knowledge or awareness gained maintains.

Pray for right decision on death penalty bill

Editor,

I am extremely alarmed by the strong sentiment behind reinstating the death penalty during this year's legislative session. The recent rash of murders so near to our homes here in Manhattan is undoubtedly exerting a strong influence on our thinking at this time.

It is imperative at the present historical moment for us to assess our own beliefs concerning the powers we are willing to delegate to our government. I am not writing from the standpoint of fearing a too-powerful government. My apprehension instead concerns the possibility that we might actually allow an individual or social organization the authority to determine whether another human being should live or die.

I HEARD a legislator's comment recently on television: "We're going to get these people who think they can kill other folks around here." It seemed strangely ironical that this man and others like him, like us, are going to pass a bill saying that we as a society have the right to exercise the same act—killing—that murderers commit. Do we really think that just because there are 2,000,000 of us in this state, we have more of a right to kill than that one criminal? I would like to believe, instead, that we as a group can think more clearly.

I have read some quite well-written, convincing articles composed by intelligent people attempting to promote the death penalty in Kansas. These people, as must all of us, need desperately to review their basic premises of right and wrong. We must not be swayed from our principles by our fears and feelings of vindictiveness.

I am sorry our legislature has the option of making a choice about this matter. Since they do, our only chance is to write to them and clamor, hope and pray together that these men and women are guided to arrive at the right decision once again.

Political precipitation

What does last Monday have in common with today? If you will remember, K-State's president got snowed in last Monday—while today Gerald Ford will bury us deeper—but it won't be snow.

I have nothing personal against President Ford.

After all, he has done more for skiing than Buddy Hackett and Suzi Chapstick combined.

Gerald Ford has been the only ex-president in recent memory whose children could be considered halfway normal (All-American is not normal). Jack Ford is my favorite—at least the guy likes to experiment.

Then there is President Ford's daughter, Susan. One hundred years from now trivia lovers will remember Susan for holding the title of the college dropout who spent more money in one semester (secret service isn't cheap) than the average architect student spends in six years.

Again, may I point out, I have nothing against Ford. Well... there is one minor item.

IT SEEMS Ford is going to take an hour to compose himself before his speech.

Isn't it odd that a gentleman who spent two years as our leader(?) has to take an hour to compose himself before he talks about current issues to a bunch of college students?

This can mean one of two things.

Either Ford procrastinates and has to read a newspaper to find out what's happening or he is going to announce something very unimportant, like his candidacy.

Let's consider both alternatives. Anything that is of current interest involves President Carter. Undoubtedly something will be said about the current president's ineptitude to solve any problems or come through on any campaign promises.

The second alternative would be Ford announcing his candidacy for the presidency. Although this is just a rumor, there are some interesting indicators.

First there is the farm vote in a Republican state. What a perfect place to make promises to striking farmers who are upset with the current government.

ENERGY IS another big issue when discussing President Carter. Everyone and his mother has a plan to make the U.S. less dependent. Should this be a topic of political talk we must remember our dependency on foreign oil increased during the Ford administration.

Everyone knows that selling warplanes to opposing sides isn't kosher and the Panama Canal treaty is a game where everyone loses, but political games such as these have been an integral part of the American bureaucracy.

Things won't change.

This is not a collection of all the issues involved. But more than likely something will be said about these topics and we must take into account that today's speaker has no more ability to unite our nation than the gentleman who is now botching things up.

THIS IS NOT an anti-Ford nor an anti-Carter column. It is an anti-democracy column. Because the American idea of democracy is so outdated that any political speech criticizing anyone is like punching a wall.

It is impossible for any man to be the leader of the people and get anything done at the same time. The office of the president has become so complicated and pressure-packed that a normal human being could not hope to understand the implications of every act—Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter included.

So please, President Ford, don't make the mistake of kidding yourself and conning the voters.

Let's not make the 41st Landon Lecture the start of a road that leads nowhere.

A commie I'm not disillusioned, I am.

Minority issue a campaign concern compared to other campus needs?

Editor,

Let me compliment SGA and the presidential candidates on how well the race for Student Body President went. Each candidate expressed the desire to work for the sake of the student body. Each candidate expressed the desire to deal with the needs of the student body and, I must admit, each proved to be very photogenic!

I have attended K-State for two years. The first time I experienced the University's student body presidential campaign was last year at this time. And it was last year at this time when I would hear the question of what to do about the minority situation to be of deep concern to each candidate. I was really impressed to see so much concern. But, best of all, this mysterious concern seems to always emerge during the campaign and descends when the race is over, and it remains that way until the next presidential campaign (around the time of Groundhog Day). Not only does the concern about the minority issues decline, but along with that fades the minority enrollment, minority involvement and minority desire to become a part of the University's decision-making process.

THE RESPONSE I have to this is to shake my head and say it's a sad situation. I begin to wonder whether the expressed concern is just a political move, a stunt to pull in more votes. I'm not accusing the candidates of any political cheating. What I'm asking is why? Why does it always end up like this? Is it because the elected candidate becomes so tied down with other University or student problems until the minority issue is backed into a corner and begins to receive less attention—and then finally no attention?

My question to each candidate is plain and very simple: How does the minority issue rank in your concern and in your effort to solve this problem as compared to other problems of the University?

Bookstore 'ripping off' students

Editor,

I'd like to know how a student service, namely the Union Bookstore, can justify ripping students off.

I just returned a book I'd never used to the bookstore. I bought it three weeks ago. Because it was brand new, I expected a full refund.

After all, any other retail store would gladly refund the full price of an unused item, especially with a receipt.

But not the Union Bookstore. This so-called "student service" returned only 60 percent of the $15.50 I had paid. They argued it was the fourth week of school.

No vote, no gripe

Editor,

I would like to comment on the poor student turnout at student government elections. From what I understand, there were only about 3,000 ballots turned in. This is a small amount compared to the more than 18,000 students enrolled here who call themselves faithful K-Staters. This amounts to just a little over 16 percent of the student body who voted. The candidates who ran for office and won will be the student leaders of our University throughout next year. They will be initiating new legislation and making new policies for all of us. The people who didn't vote in this week's election shouldn't have a right to criticize the actions of student government.

The main complaint, especially among students who support our men's basketball team, has been the need for a new fieldhouse. For the past several months there have been complaints about the poor seating capacity of Ahearn and its poor acoustics for concerts. A referendum was voted on for funding for a new fieldhouse. It had a majority vote, but not enough students voted on it for it to pass, as it needed the vote of one-third of the student body.

It is disappointing to see that such a large number of students didn't have enough pride in their school to take five minutes out of their day to vote.

Candidates favor fieldhouse despite invalid referendum

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

Student body presidential candidates Sam Brownback and Cindy Thomas said they are still interested in the construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State despite the invalidation of a student referendum to build a facility.

In student government elections held Wednesday, a referendum to increase full-time student fees up to $10 per semester and part-time student fees up to $5 to help raise money for a fieldhouse was invalidated due to low voter turnout.

Under the constitution of K-State's Student Governing Association (SGA), at least one-third of the student body must vote on a referendum for it to be valid, with a majority voting in favor for it to be passed.

Only 3,551 votes were cast for the referendum—2,063 votes in favor of the referendum and 1,488 votes in opposition to the proposal. About 5,000 votes had to be cast for the referendum to be validated.

WHILE BOTH Brownback and Thomas said the results of the referendum showed students were interested in a new fieldhouse, the candidates proposed different ways to approach the issue.

Brownback said if he was elected, he would hold a meeting on campus within a month of his election with representatives from the student body, K-State alumni, the University administration and state and local legislators to discuss the funding of the fieldhouse.

If the representatives show an interest in jointly funding a facility, a task force would be assembled to prepare specific plans for the development of a facility, according to Brownback.

"We'll push this group so that we can get all possibilities taken care of as soon as possible," he said.

When plans are developed, the groups would make a definite funding commitment toward the project, Brownback said.

"If we have definite amounts of money from other groups so that we can count on building a fieldhouse, then we can bring it back up to a vote for the students," Brownback said.

THOMAS SAID she would individually contact the alumni, city officials and state groups to see if there is interest in funding a new fieldhouse.

"You have to meet individually with the groups first and hear what their response is before you can make any specific plan of action for the funding of the facility," she said.

Thomas said she would be receiving information about funding and interest in a new fieldhouse from different groups.

Thomas said the possibility of a lobbying group for state Senator Donn Everett's cigarette tax and the possibility of a joint facility with the city of Manhattan would be considered.

Some businessmen have shown interest in a joint facility with K-State she said. The facility would be used by the city for concerts, conventions and meetings.

THOMAS SAID she wouldn't support another referendum until other sources of funding have been investigated.

"I can't see another referendum coming back yet. I think that the best thing is to get other funding right now," she said.

"I don't think the Alumni Association has tapped all of the funds out there. If the interest is there, the money will be found," she said.

Both Brownback and Thomas said they were disappointed at the turnout among students to vote on the fieldhouse referendum.

Brownback said he thought students didn't support the referendum because they were uneasy about the funding of the facility and other points of the referendum.

Senate reactions vary on fieldhouse proposal

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

The invalidation of a student referendum calling for construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State has caused some student senators to speculate that a new fieldhouse proposal won't be brought before senate for at least a year.

The fieldhouse referendum, which would have increased student fees to raise money for partial funding of fieldhouse construction, was on the ballot for student government elections held Wednesday and was invalidated because of low voter turnout.

Brad Henson, agricultural senator, said he hopes the fieldhouse proposal won't be brought up before senate again.

"I felt it wasn't properly developed. There were too many possibilities of students getting screwed in the long run," Henson said.

"I don't think we should be using students' money in getting large projects started, especially in athletics," he said.

MICK MORRELL, agriculture senator, said senate should have worked on the referendum sooner than it did and students would have been more educated about the referendum.

"Before it (the referendum) was even put out I didn't think there would be enough student votes to validate it. The students didn't have enough information about it," Morrell said.

Morrell said the fieldhouse referendum needs more work and research, and should go through different channels and more people to get different opinions.

"I'm confident it will be brought back to senate," he said. "The fieldhouse is a top priority to the students."

Richard Stumpf, agriculture senator, said students weren't informed about the referendum and there were too many unanswered questions in the proposal.

THE LOCATION, size, date of completion and maintainance costs of the complex should be specified before a proposal is brought before students, Stumpf said.

Lori Bergen, arts and sciences senator, said lack of student support would hamper the return of the proposal to senate.

"As long as the students didn't want it, there is no need for senate to consider it again," Bergen said.

Alan Stetson, business senator, said the referendum failed because there wasn't enough information available about the construction of the fieldhouse, there wasn't backing from the athletic department and because students weren't informed about the proposal.

Randy Tosh, agriculture senator, said students would have been well-informed if they were interested in information about the referendum.

Tosh said the lack of student interest in the fieldhouse proposal and the difficult time the bill had in senate would prevent the issue from coming back to senate this semester.

Mel Dooling, business senator, said the issue would probably not come before senate again for a while because students and senators haven't had enough time to reconsider the issue.

"If anything like this comes up again, I wish the students would take the initiative on it," Dooling said.

Youngster burns face, chest while trying to 'breathe fire'

MONTEBELLO, Calif. (AP)—An 11-year-old boy trying to emulate the fire-breathing antics of the rock group Kiss suffered burns on his chin, neck and chest during the weekend, authorities said.

Sgt. Richard Armstrong said the boy and a 14-year-old companion, neither of whom were identified, covered their faces with petroleum jelly, filled their mouths with lighter fluid and spat the fluid past a lit cigarette lighter.

The older boy told police the pair was inspired by a fan magazine article on Kiss lead guitarist Gene Simmons, who "breathes" fire while other wildly costumed members of the band pretend to vomit blood during their act.

The vaseline was supposed to protect their faces from the flames, but the lighter fluid dribbled down the chin of the younger boy, burning him, Armstrong said.

SILENCE IS DEADLY.

When someone drinks too much and then drives, it's the silence that kills. Your silence.

It kills your friends, your relatives, and people you don't even know. But they're all people you could save.

If you knew what to say, maybe you'd be less quiet. Maybe fewer people would die.

What you should say is, "I'll drive you home." Or, "Let me call a cab." Or, "Sleep on my couch tonight."

Don't hesitate because your friend may have been drinking only beer. Beer and wine can be just as intoxicating as mixed drinks.

And don't think that black coffee will make him sober. Black coffee never made anyone sober. Maybe it would keep him awake long enough to have an accident. But that's about all.

The best way to prevent a drunk from becoming a dead drunk is to stop him from driving.

Speak up. Don't let silence be the last sound he hears.

Specific plans for downtown on way to city commission

By CINDY IZZO
Collegian Reporter

Plans for downtown improvements are being made and forwarded to the Manhattan City Commission by the City and Downtown Redevelopment Committee (DRC).

According to Gary Stith, city planner, the City and the Downtown Redevelopment Committee has been formulating plans for redevelopment of the downtown area for more than 2 years.

"We are looking into the feasibility of creating specific assessment districts to accommodate parking, and possibly a hotel-convention complex," Stith said. "We have also been conducting an arterial traffic and transportation study throughout the city."

"There are four main problems with downtown that area department store owners have related to me," Stith said. "One of the problems is parking, along with accessibility to the downtown area, circulation of the traffic in and around the area, and the physical environment."

STITH SAID the physical appearance of the downtown area will need to be redone.

"The bulk of the redesigning will have to be done to the west of 4th street, and both sides of Poyntz," Stith said.

According to Richard Burke, DRO chairman, city commissioners received Urban Renewal funds from the federal government about seven years ago and used the funds to redevelop the south side of Manhattan instead of the downtown area.

BURKE SAID he believed that if the city doesn't put money into the central core, they are running the risk of having the central core become decayed, jeopardizing the investment put into the primary ring (south side of Manhattan).

"Lawrence upgraded their central core," he said. "Now the outer ring has been upgraded by privated investment without government help," he said.

The citizens have a tremendous investment in downtown in the form of sidewalks, streets, city offices, government funded elderly high rises, and we must protect our investment," he said.

City Commissioner Henry Otto said the downtown area must become an attractive place to shop.

"Our downtown looks bad," Otto said. "The whole place needs work."

It has been in the same condition for over 20 years."

OTTO SAID every area needs work, especially the second block of Poyntz.

"This area is the worst," said Otto. "We must work our way up from the 200 block because this area needs the most help."

"Right now, the commission is not proposing to do anything," Otto said. "In my opinion, the basic funds for redevelopment must come from the downtown merchants themselves."

Some of the problems Otto sees with downtown redevelopment is that "we must deal with a mass diversity of opinions."

"When you deal with a large number of people that have different opinions, you are bound to run into problems," Otto said.

"We can't let this bog us down to the point where we won't get anything done," he said.

"The merchants must come up with a plan on how to redevelop the downtown area," said acting City Manager Les Rieger.

He said the city is considering hiring a consultant out of Lawrence to do the developing.

RICHARD SEIDLER, member of the DRC said downtown redevelopment would take money from the public and private sector of the community.

"We must get people involved in this project, because we (the downtown merchants) owe it to the community to provide a strong, viable shopping center," Seidler said.

"We are trying to attract more retailers such as Macy's, J.McDonald's Brandeis Department Store and many others, to downtown," Seidler said.

Gottlieb, Inc., a Kansas City firm, has been consulting with the city on the idea of constructing a mall on Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard, Seidler said.

On the effect of the mall on the downtown area and the redevelopment, Seidler said there would be a "shift on the major emphasis of shopping."

"At this time, the mall would be the worst thing to happen to the total redevelopment of the downtown area."

He said the city planning board turned down the idea of a mall a few weeks ago, by a vote of 5 to 2.

IT WAS believed the city commission would be voting on this proposal at Tuesday's regular city commission meeting, but according to various reports, Gottlieb Inc. has decided to postpone meeting with the commission in order to take more time deciding if the mall would be a feasible investment in this area.

Otto said the mall idea would be damaging to Manhattan but added that Emporia, a town smaller than Manhattan but with a larger trade area, supports a mall.

"I would vote against a project of this size, because it seems unprofitable," Otto said.

According to Burke, if a mall was built, the other businesses in Manhattan would suffer.

"The major businesses in Manhattan are small retailers," Burke said. "They can't afford to stay in business if they are not making a profit, and they can't make a profit if downtown is not used."

Wildcats whomp Missouri and remain in fight...

By BARNEY PARKER

Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats, thanks to Iowa State, can still gain a home court advantage for the opening round of the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament.

The Wildcats rolled over Missouri, 67-54, Saturday af-chipped in six apiece during the surge.

Team offense, the Wildcats worked patiently for good shots, and team defense, K-State forced five turnovers in the half, were the keys to the rout.

Clay Johnson's nine points was the only reason the Tigers weren't blown completely out of the fieldhouse.

Sports

ternoon in Ahearn Field House and Iowa State downed Oklahoma, 77-71, Saturday night in Ames.

The result — if the Wildcats beat Oklahoma in Norman Saturday they will open the tourney against the Sooners in Ahearn Wednesday, February 28. If they lose to the Sooners Saturday they will open the tourney in Norman.

THE K-STATE defense forced Missouri into eight turnovers in the first eight minutes for a 16-7 lead. Then the Wildcat offense caught up with the defense and they reeled off 25 points to Missouri's 16 in the rest of the half.

Mike Evans scored 10 points and Curtis Redding and Scott Langton

K-STATE downed only six buckets in the second half, but that didn't matter because the Wildcats were more interested in controlling the tempo and working for good shots than running-and-gunning.

K-State's last bucket came with 6:04 remaining in the game. Nine free throws in the final minutes assured the victory.

Playing their last regular season games in Ahearn Field House, seniors Evans, Langton, Jerry Black and Dan Hickert went out as winners.

Evans scored 17 points and dealt out four assists. Langton made eight points and grabbed three steals. Black sored five points during the first half rout.

Returning to form, Curtis Redding scored 18 points and grabbed seven rebounds. Rolando Blackman added 13 points.

...for homecourt berth; Hartman, seniors pleased

By BARNEY PARKER

Sports Editor

With 6:42 to play against Missouri, Mike Evans scored what may have been his last bucket in Ahearn Field House. It was a characteristic 18-foot jumper from the circle.

Four minutes later, Evans sat down to a standing ovation. A minute later, backcourt mate Scott Langton sat down to a similar ovation.

Though they didn't make a big thing out of it, Evans, Langton and Wildcat coach Jack Hartman said they knew it might be the last home game this year.

"There was a possibility that this might be the last home game," Hartman said. "We wanted to play well for that reason."

HARTMAN said he knew his stars would receive an ovation when they were taken out.

"I wanted the seniors, especially, to get that recognition," he said.

"I thought we had a real solid basketball game out of Mike-good generalship," Hartman said.

Senior Jerry Black may have also played his last game at Ahearn.

"Jerry Black did a good job defensively," Hartman said, "especially in helping us get good position on drives by (Larry) Drew and (Clay) Johnson."

PATIENCE, good tempo and good shot selection was how Hartman described the way the Wildcat offense controlled the game.

"We were determined not to let them determine the tempo," Evans said. "What we had to do was keep our composure and not panic."

"We were just trying to prove to ourselves that we can move the ball. We turned down some shots that we would normally take." Langton agreed with Evans.

"In the past we just got too excited. We came down and didn't take our time," Langton said. "So what we did was just slow the ball down a little bit. We had certain plays we were looking for."

EVANS SAID the Wildcats want the homecourt advantage in the tournament and can get it "if we beat Oklahoma there, and we will."

"I haven't really thought that this would be my last home game," Evans said. "I'm too much of a positive thinker."

The Oklahoma game, which will be regionally televised by NBC and TVS, will begin at 3 p.m. Saturday instead of 1:10 p.m. as originally scheduled.

UP IN THE AIR... Like this bouncing ball which Mike Evans grabbed Saturday, K-State's chances for a homecourt advantage in the Big Eight tourney remain up in the air.

Evans gets votes

K-State guard Mike Evans has moved up to third place in the balloting for the Seventh Annual Pizza Hut Classic, scheduled for April 1, in the Las Vegas Convention Center.

After a slow start on the season and a slow start in the balloting, Mike Thompson has regained his All-American form to lead Minnesota into the thick of the Big Ten Conference basketball race and has assumed the lead in balloting for a berth on the West squad.

The charity event pits players fans select as the best in the East against those selected as the best in the West. The game will be carried nationally on the CBS Sports Spectacular.

Thompson was ineligible for his team's first seven games, but has asserted himself as one of the nation's best centers and fans have responded to give him a narrow lead over West Texas State guard Maurice Cheeks and K-State's Evans among the West candidates.

THOMPSON has received 52,095 votes to lead Cheeks (49,210) by fewer than 3,000 votes and Evans (48,652).

'Cats will win it all

OK, just relax and stop fretting about what place K-State is going to finish in the Big Eight conference basketball race.

Afterall, with the advent of the Big Eight Post-Season Tournament, who cares? Oh yeah, everyone says it's important to finish in the top four to gain a home court advantage for the first round.

But big deal. It all boils down to the fact that once these teams have played each other twice before, and some even three times each, the records go for naught and the whole season is based on three games.

No cheers from the pressbox

Win those three and to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament you go. Seems kind of stupid doesn't it? It is.

And for that reason I hope that someone besides KU wins the post-season affair. Besides, it will mean a lot more money and prestige (heavens knows we need it) for the conference if KU doesn't win.

BUT WHO'S capable of beating the Jayhawks? K-State probably has the best chance of plucking the Hawks' feathers, although Nebraska has an outside shot at them.

One of the biggest drawbacks of having both the Holiday and Post-season tournaments is that it's possible that two teams could meet each other four times in a season. That would be the case if the 'Cats and the 'Hawks meet again this year.

No matter how far apart two teams are in talent, it's just darn hard to beat another team four times in one season — especially when the teams are arch-rivals such as KU and K-State. Give the edge to the 'Cats here.

Another factor in favor of the 'Cats in a fourth matchup is that the 'Cats have not played well in any of the three previous contests.

IN THE 67-62 loss in the Holiday Tournament, the 'Cats held a 12 point lead and squandered it away while remaining in a man-to-man defense and slowing down the ball offensively.

The second meeting, a 56-52 setback in Lawrence, Mike Evans and Curtis Redding both had one of their worst shooting days in their careers and there aren't many high school teams K-State could beat if Evans and Redding aren't shooting the lights out.

In the latest confrontation, once again the 'Cats let an early lead get away from them and lost 75-63. It didn't help matters any that Evans spent almost the entire second half on the bench with a back injury.

Thus, even though KU has won all three contests against K-State this year, the 'Cats have done more than their share in letting the 'Hawks win each game.

NEBRASKA is the other team that has the best chance of stopping the 'Hawks. The Cornhuskers have the best defense in the league and since no one can run with KU, it will take a defensive squad to beat them. Also, in "Slippery Joe" Cipriano the 'Huskers have one of the better (and most underrated) coaches in the league.

However, for the Big Eight's sake, it doesn't matter who wins the post-season tourney — just as long as it isn't KU. Because if another team wins the post-season title and proceeds to the Midwest sub-regional, it's almost a sure bet that KU will be picked as an at-large team to another regional.

THE JAYHAWKS have built a fine reputation this year and have proven themselves as one of the better teams in the country. Thus if someone should upset them in the tourney, it would mean the winner would go to the Midwest regional while KU would be sent to either the East, the Mideast or the West regional.

And when you are talking about two teams getting into regional play, you're talking about a lot of money.

For instance, K-State earned $106,000 for proceeding to the semi-finals of the Midwest regional last year. After its expenses were subtracted from that amount, the remainder was divided up between the eight conference schools.

This high school drill team not average

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

One high school drill team seems to be the same as the next. There may be a little difference in their style, but generally, the uniforms look the same and the music is almost always the same.

"Rocky" and "Star Wars" are the big hits this season. All of the pep bands play them and the drill teams all perform to them.

But there is one drill team in Kansas that is different. Oh, their uniforms are the same and they do perform to "Rocky" and "Star Wars", but the 21 girls on this squad are deaf.

The Kansas School for the Deaf drill team was organized four years ago by Janet Loxterman, a physical education teacher at the school. She is the sponsor.

LOXTERMAN said she didn't see any reason why they couldn't have a drill team with someone to count for the girls. The girls really liked the idea of having a drill team because they had seen them at hearing schools.

"We've got cheerleaders and everything else hearing schools have," Loxterman said.

She stands on the sidelines in front of the girls when they perform and counts for them.

"All routines are done by memory. You just count to eight over and over for them," she said.

At first the girls were slow to learn the routines. It took them quite a while to catch on to the dance steps, Loxterman said.

THE FIRST year, they learned one routine. This year, they have added six routines since September.

The drill team practices every morning at eight for an hour. The girls receive one-half of a credit per year.

There are two captains on the squad that always stand in front of the other girls. The captains are the girls that follow Loxterman's count best. When the girls split up, each group watches a different captain, she said.

Loxterman said they try to change routines frequently because the girls get bored since they can't hear the music. She does most of the choreography for the drill team.

"Since they can't hear the music, they can't make up routines," Loxterman said.

THE KSD drill team has performed at a Kansas City Kings game, at area colleges and for a lot of clubs and organizations. They perform at all of the KSD football and basketball halftimes. The girls have been invited to perform at the National Junior College Women's Basketball Tournament at Johnson County Community College later this spring.

At halftime of a Washburn University basketball game this year, the drill team received a standing ovation.

Hotel bomb worst in Irish sectarian war

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—Militant Protestant leaders met in their East Belfast stronghold Sunday amid fears they were planning revenge attacks on Roman Catholics for the bombing of a hotel that killed 12 persons.

But informed sources said leaders of the half-dozen organizations represented at the meeting were divided on what action to take.

Police blamed the Friday night bombing of the La Mon House hotel on the Provisional wing of the mainly Catholic Irish Republican Army.

The IRA has not responded to the charge. At least 20 of its activists were rounded up in a weekend dragnet by police.

INVESTIGATORS reported the bomb hurled into the hotel in Belfast's Protestant Castlereagh district was made with two sticks of plastic explosives taped to a can containing a mixture of gasoline and some chemicals. They said it was the first time such a destructive fire bomb had been used in the sectarian violence that erupted here 8½ years ago.

Police said sticky fireballs clung to bodies, burning them beyond recognition.

The inn was crowded with some 450 persons attending parties organized by a dog-owners club and a motorcycle club, and police said neither group had political or religious affiliations.

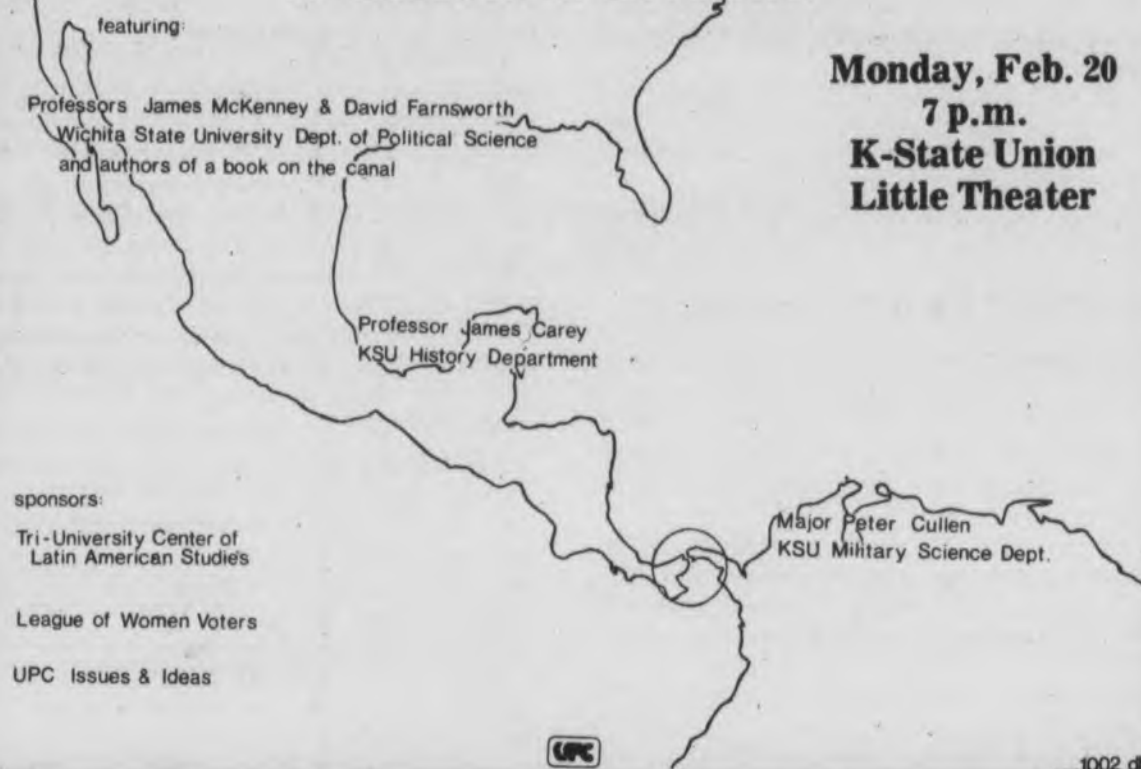

IRA militants are fighting to end British rule in this Protestant-dominated province and unite it with the Irish Republic and its Catholic majority.

A leading member of the Ulster Defense Association, largest of the Protestant organizations, said Sunday: "We feel we've sat back long enough. Something must be done and the British don't look like they're going to do it."

Center to study grain explosions

The U.S. Grain Marketing Research Center has been tentatively allocated $70,000 and two engineers for research on grain dust explosions.

Yeshajahu Pomeranz, director of the center, made the announcement Sunday after he returned from Washington and several meetings with John Wallace, assistant secretary of agriculture, and consulting with safety personnel for the Bureau of Mines and the Federal Grain Inspection Service.

"We propose a detailed program to them (the United States Department of Agriculture), which has been tentatively approved," Pomeranz said.

"The proposal must still go through the budget and allocation process but it has been assigned such a high priority and approved at such a high level. I am very optimistic that it will be approved in a very short time," he said.

The money will be used primarily for equipment, temporary personnel and other needs as they arise.

"We have been allowed a great deal of flexibility as long as it conforms to the objectives of the program," Pomeranz said.

Pomeranz said the center hopes to do some work in cooperation with K-State and that additional funds may be requested.

UFM registration draws large crowd

Despite inclement weather conditions, more than 4,000 people registered last week in spring University for Man (UFM) courses.

"We would like to thank everyone who came through the snow and cold to register, said Lisa Barnes, UFM student coordinator.

The most popular class this semester is Ballroom Dancing with 160 registrants. Belly Dancing, Massage, Getting the Most from your Vegetable Garden and Genealogy also attracted many registrants, Barnes said.

Most of the 240 spring classes meet only once, and very few more than four times, she said.

"We expect a good turnout for this semester's classes," Barnes said.

Persons enrolled in limited classes who cannot come should notify the class leader, she said.

Panamanian president offers brother in exchange for canal treaty support

WASHINGTON (AP) Panamanian ruler Omar Torrijos has made a conditional offer to surrender his brother to face U.S. narcotics charges in an effort to win support for the Panama Canal treaties, according to U.S. officials.

Torrijos told Sens. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) and Paul Laxalt (R-Nev.) Dec. 30 that he would turn over his brother, Moises, to U.S. authorities or arrest the brother himself if the United States will show him evidence to support the charges, said a Dole aide who was present at the meeting. The aide did not wish to be identified.

In a copyrighted interview appearing Sunday in the Atlanta Constitution, Torrijos said, "I have begged for proof. If such proof exists, I would put my brother in jail. I would not have done that two years ago while my mother was alive, it would have killed her. But if he is guilty now, I would put him in jail. Those who make such charges without proof are not typical of the American way."

TORRIJOS was quoted as saying during a six-hour talk in Panama with the newspaper's editor, Hal Gulliver, that he was sure "no one in my family would be in that type of business."

Drug Enforcement Administration officials take the position that they have no authority to make evidence available to Torrijos, said a source familiar with the DEA case.

"This was a grand jury proceeding and it would be up to the U.S. attorney or the court to decide whether it could be released," the source said.

Officials at the Justice Department, which supervises U.S. attorneys as well as the drug agency, have said nothing in public about how they might respond to the offer. But an administration source said department officials are taking steps to respond.

The issue will be raised during a closed Senate session Tuesday to discuss allegations that the Panamanian chief of state, his relatives and other ranking Panamanian officials have been involved in drug trafficking.

Jessy Dixon fills auditorium with inspirational performance

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Arts Editor

"I don't know how you're feeling out there, but we're having a good time up here," said Jessy Dixon of the Dixon Singers during his Saturday night gospel concert.

He seemed to be telling the truth; the group was having fun. As for the audience, well, if this isn't the first time an audience in McCain has danced in the aisles and joined in on the singing, I'll just stay around and wait for it to happen again.

Collegian Review

Inspirational is the only word fit to describe the performances; inspirational and devotional. From the gospel music of the old south to the contemporary sound of Paul Simon, the singers turned it out.

Dixon, backed up by piano, bass, drums and two female vocalists, proved just why he has received nominations for a Grammy award.

Offering his rendition of "God Bless America," Dixon poured out the emotion and filled the auditorium with his rich, mellow voice; eliciting cries of "Sing it to me brother" from listeners. In contrast, his performance of "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother" left the audience subdued, breathless for fear of missing a single, dramatic note.

ENCOURAGING the audience to participate in the praise, Dixon offered the microphone to those sitting in the front row, always finding his requests for participation fulfilled.

Aldrea Lennox, contralto and second lead singer, also got into the audience, but carried it one step further by joining them, running through the aisles singing, touching.

Also impressive was Ethel Holloway, alto and featured lead singer. Holloway, calling on unbelievable range and tone, as well as divine inspiration, hit it hard both in her solos and when backing up Dixon.

"These people have been with me, they're like my brothers and sisters," Dixon said of his group. All are born-again Christians, according to Dixon, and believe every word they sing.

One song, wherein the group finds that "Jesus is the Answer" was a special favorite of Simon's, according to Dixon, and one they sang when on tour in Japan.

"The people couldn't understand the lyrics, but they felt the love coming back from it," Dixon said.

Appearing for the first time with the group was Calvin Bridges, pianist. Bridges brought a different sort of sound to the group, reminiscent of a combination of Stevie Wonder and The Isley Brothers. Bridges managed to let the feeling flow from his singing without sacrificing any technique on the piano.

After being brought back by a standing ovation that never quite sat down again, Dixon commented "This place will never be the same again."

A glimpse of the real world: students try aiding teachers

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

About 115 K-State students are working as teacher aides in Manhattan community schools this semester as part of a practical experience in elementary and secondary school teaching.

"The program gives K-State students the opportunity to see if they would like a career in teaching before being fully committed to the teaching profession," Jesse Rancifer, program coordinator and graduate in education, said.

The program, now in its 10th year, offers the student a chance to inspect the teaching profession by active observation and participation in the teacher-student learning process before they become student teachers, Rancifer said.

A student can participate in the teacher aide program for three semesters before student teaching. Rancifer said this way the students have a chance to see various levels of teaching they might not be able to see otherwise.

Elementary education majors might choose to be an aide in the kindergarten through third grade level their first semester, a fourth-grade aide the next and then fifth or sixth grade their final semester to help them decide which level is for them, he said.

REBECCA MALIN, junior in elementary education, is working as a teacher aide for a second grade class at Marlatt Elementary School for three hours every Wednesday.

"It's just a little extra experience," Malin said of the program. "I think it is a real valuable program because it gives me a chance to have some experience with the kids without the responsibilities I'll have when I student teach. It is a much more relaxed atmosphere."

She said besides observing the class, she generally works with students individually or with small groups which might need extra help.

Rancifer said students interested in secondary education might choose to split their time in the program between the junior high and senior high levels. The program is not limited to education majors, according to Rancifer.

Krista Hill, junior in physical education, is in her second semester of the program, working with eighth grade girls' physical education classes at Manhattan Junior High.

"Basically, I got into the program last semester for an educational psychology class and liked it so much last year I got into it again this year," she said.

"Since they have three separate times you can do it, they give you plenty of opportunity to try different school levels in just about any subject you're interested in."

HILL SAID she thought the Manhattan school system was very willing to take on teachers' aides.

Rancifer said one of the goals of the teacher aide program is gaining cooperation between public and private schools and the University in the training of teachers.

Helping with research is part of the responsibilities of John Brettell, senior in history and pre-law, as a teacher aide at Manhattan High School.

Brettell said he is an aide twice a week, spending one hour each time observing a civics class and two hours with a religions of the east and west class.

"Primarily we observe classes and write down our observations in a log," he said. "This kind of gives you a pre-student teaching experience."

Responsibilities of the teacher aides are usually worked out between the supervising teacher and the aide, but an experience check list is sent along with the aide of help the teacher evaluate students in the program, according to Rancifer. Aides are evaluated twice during a semester.

"We have a mid-term evaluation and final evaluation that the teacher fills out on the student," he said. "The mid-term is concerned more or less with checking up on the student to find out if he is in good attendance, displays initiative and this kind of thing."

RANCIFER said if there are no problems the teacher keeps the report but if there is some weakness they let the college know so the students can receive some counseling on their teaching problems.

In final evaluations, the teachers check for personal qualities, professional orientation, teacher aide activities and student performance in daily classroom routines, Rancifer said.

"Final evaluations are made out in triplicate, where as the student gets the first copy, the supervising teacher will keep the second and our office keeps the third," he said. "This way every person involved has a copy of the evaluation."

The program provides a self-screening process on the part of the potential teacher, as well as experience, Rancifer said.

"The student is able to decide if teaching is for him or not. If it is not he can look into other fields of study," he said.

Rancifer said for this reason the program is a success either way because it helps the student make up his or her mind before totally committing themselves to teaching.

Carter aide denies report of improper barroom conduct

WASHINGTON (AP)—Hamilton Jordan, President Carter's chief aide, has denied a report by a Washington Post columnist that he spat a drink down the front of a young woman's blouse after she rejected his advances.

"I did not spit at her, I can state that categorically," Jordan said in response to Rudy Maxa's "Front Page People" column that appeared in the paper's Sunday editions. "I did not do anything that was improper or that amounted to making a pass at her," Jordan said.

The woman, whom Maxa did not identify, said the incident occurred on Jan. 27 at Sarsfield's, a favorite night spot of some Carter staffers.

The Post said the woman's story was corroborated by her companion and another eyewitness.

Jordan, who is separated from his wife, was involved late last year in a controversy concerning the wife of the Egyptian ambassador.

'Little guy' could file suit for environment damages

By SCOTT STUCKEY
Collegian Reporter

A bill which has been reintroduced in the Kansas Senate would give individuals the power to bring court action against any person, corporation or state agency for damage to the environment.

State Senator John Simpson (R-Salina), who first introduced the bill two years ago, spoke to the Environmental Awareness Center (EAC) at K-State Thursday night about his bill, which he considers "the most important piece of environmental legislation that the Senate has considered."

"It's not only an environmental bill, but a bill to let the individual have his say in court," Simpson said. "Our present laws do not give individuals the chance to protect the environment."

THE BILL could be used to challenge any environmentally destructive activity, including the construction of highways, power plants and reservoirs, Simpson said.

To prevent frivolous cases, the bill has provisions that would allow the court to charge costs and attorney fees to the plaintiff, Simpson said. The court could also order the plaintiff to post a bond of up to $500 before the case would be heard.

Simpson said few frivolous lawsuits have been filed under similar laws in Michigan, Massachusetts, New Jersey and other states.

One notable exception was a suit filed by an individual against every car driver in his state for polluting the air, Simpson said.

SEVERAL organizations have voiced opposition to the bill, including the Kansas Farm Bureau, Kansas Livestock Association and the Kansas Association of Commerce and Industry.

"This bill opens the door for harassment of any citizen by any other citizens," said Paul Fleener, a lobbyist for the Kansas Farm Bureau. "It could be used to slow down or shut down a farming operation at a critical time."

"An ill-informed or irresponsible person could bring a lawsuit to court during the time a crop might need immediate chemical treatment against disease or insects."

If the bill passes, the bond required of the plaintiff should be raised to $5,000 and he should be held liable for triple damages if the defendant prevails in a case, Fleener said.

The bill will be voted on today in the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Simpson expects the bill to clear the committee and go to the full Senate for consideration.

Fleener said he thought the bill was an unpopular piece of legislation and had little chance of passing on the Senate floor.

Area clergymen and doctors favor senate 'right-to-die' bill

By SHARON KALE
Collegian Reporter

Many clergymen and doctors in Manhattan favor a right-to-die bill which would allow a person over 18 to prohibit life-prolonging treatment through artificial means.

The bill is being studied by the Kansas Senate Judiciary Committee and would allow a patient to write a living will refusing treatment if he is terminally ill.

Currently, patients can write a living will but the will is not binding. Doctors can refuse to honor the will if it is not backed by law.

DR. WILLIAM Durkee of Manhattan said there might be differing opinions about whether the patient is definitely dying and this could be a reason why doctors refuse to honor such a will.

"I think it's fine. This is something being done according to the opinion of the patient," Durkee said.

The patient has always had the right to refuse treatment. Now it's being put in legal terms, he said.

"It's my understanding there are people who say, 'I don't want to go through this,' if they are really suffering," said Dr. David McKnight of Manhattan.

People should respect this, but they shouldn't die from neglect, he said.

PASTOR GENE Neeley from the First Assembly of God Church said he had mixed emotions about the bill.

"I personally feel there comes a time when the person should be allowed to die," Neeley said. They should be allowed to die after everything has been done that might save them, he said.

"The persons themselves know if it's God's time, and this is when they need someone to counsel them," Neeley said. The persons need understanding and truth to help prepare them, he added.

In the case of a patient who is in a coma and cannot make the decision for himself, Neeley said that the family members should not be allowed to make the decision by themselves.

Two or three doctors should make the decision along with the family members, Neeley said.

"Let's face it, there are some people that don't make very good decisions and that's the reason I think there should be more people involved," Neeley said.

REVEREND Ben Duerfeldt of the First Christian Church said he agreed with the right-to-die bill.

"Unquestionably I agree, as long as the patient is conscious and can make a decision in light of full knowledge of the facts and there is no possibility of survival."

Football players stand trial for A-dorm rape

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

The trial for three of the four K-State football players charged in the rape of a coed in K-State's athletic dormitory (now Edwards Hall) last March 30 begins today in Riley County District Court.

The trial was postponed January 3 by District Court Judge Ronald Innes at the request of defense attorney Charles Scott.

Charged in the incident are Nate Jones, Chicago, Ken Lovely, Dallas, and Michael Woodfin, Topeka.

Another former squad member, Jerome Holiwell, originally charged with rape, was granted immunity last September by the county attorney's office in exchange for testimony against the other three.

IN MID November Scott offered motions at a pre-trial conference to dismiss the charges against Jones, Lovely and Woodfin accusing the county attorney's office of improperly offering immunity to Holiwell.

Scott also motioned for a change of venue of the trial, because of what he termed prejudicial publicity not creating a favorable climate for the defendants to receive a fair trial.

Innes later refused to grant Scott his requests.

The fourth person charged in the alleged rape is Kirk Boykin, who has been wanted since August in connection with the incident. He was arrested in Houston in October but released on bail.

Associate District Judge Jerry Mershon said Boykin hasn't appeared in Manhattan for a preliminary hearing. The preliminary hearing is held to determine if there is sufficient evidence to bind a person over for trial.

Assistant County Attorney Charles Bell said most of the first day of the trial will be spent selecting a jury.

Foreign policy power gain by Congress concerns Ford

By JANE WINGER
Collegian Reporter

President Gerald Ford criticized the Congressional domination of the presidency in foreign policy matters during the 41st Landon Lecture Monday, saying there is no substitute for presidential leadership.

Ford argued against the War Powers Resolution Act of 1973, saying it limited presidential power in committing troops abroad.

"The resolution grants power to Congress which make it superior to the executive branch—such as the ability to withdraw troops within 60 days by concurrent resolution not subject to presidential approval," Ford said.

Ford cited several incidents when important decisions had to be made, yet members of Congress were scattered around the world.

"The consequences to the president if he does not wait for Congress should be as severe as impeachment, but the consequences to the nation if he does not wait could be far, far worse," Ford said.

THE FORMER president said there is no way American foreign policy can be made by legislators on Capitol Hill.

"As I said in my last State of the Union address in January, 1977, in these times, a crisis cannot be vanished and war cannot be waged by committee, nor can peace be pursued by parliamentary debate."

Ford spoke to more than 7,000 persons in Ahearn Field House and was presented with a purple visor and three purple golf balls "guaranteed to improve his golf game" by Student Body President Terry Matlack.

"I hope the United States is as competitive and as successful against the Soviet Union in our wide variety of contacts as the Wildcats were," Ford said, referring to K-State's basketball victory over the Russian national team.

FORD, who has traveled to 25 colleges and universities since leaving office, described students as bright, inquisitive, optimistic and deeply concerned as to what is right and what is wrong.

At a luncheon following his lecture, Ford said he was appreciative of the hospitality he had received in Kansas and the kindness his daughter Susan had received while attending the "other school" in Kansas.

See related story, p. 6

Ford spoke to a combined journalism and political science class Monday morning, discussing the press and the two-party system.

Ford said twice during the class he would not indicate whether he would seek the 1980 Republican presidential nomination but he was "64 going on 50, never been healthier and would definitely be around."

Coal strike agreement may set talks pattern

WASHINGTON (AP)—The striking United Mine Workers and a major independent coal company reached a tentative contract settlement Monday that could set a pattern for an industry-wide agreement to end the 77-day coal strike.

The agreement, reached with P&M Coal Co., a Gulf Oil Corp. subsidiary, won approval from the union's bargaining council on a 26-13 vote following a five-hour meeting.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell called the vote "an interesting development which all parties ought to seriously assess."

There was no immediate response from the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, the major industry bargaining group which has been unable to reach agreement with the UMW.

CARTER administration officials had cautioned earlier in the day that major roadblocks remained and began testing congressional sentiment for legislation to force an end to the strike.

Powell said Carter had not yet decided what course to take to end the protracted strike, indicating that developments could hinge on the coal industry's reaction to the P&M contract.

Congressional sources said Labor Secretary Ray Marshall was drafting an industry-wide contract proposal to present to both sides before Carter asks Congress for special legislation.

Marshall conferred with the chairmen of the House and Senate committees which would handle any legislation to halt the dispute.

After the talks on Capitol Hill, Marshall met at the White House with key administration officials where sources said he discussed the possibility of recommending contract terms to the industry that would bypass the more controversial issues until a permanent settlement could be reached among the parties. This would be regarded as an interim solution, the sources said, and in order to quickly get the mines back in production while negotiators continued their talks.

Egypt recalls diplomats in Cyprus: Commandos get heroes welcome

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—Egypt decided Monday to pull its diplomatic mission out of Cyprus and ask Cypriot diplomats to leave Egypt. Hours later, Egyptian commandos whose raid on a terrorist-held jetliner in Cyprus turned into a battle with Cypriot troops returned to Cairo and were welcomed as heroes.

Cyprus refused to turn the two terrorists over to Egypt and, earlier Monday, demanded the recall of Cairo's military attaché.

Information Minister Abdel Moneim Sawy said Egypt would review all aspects of Egyptian-Cypriot relations because of the "unfriendly stand" by the Cyprus government, but added that Cairo's action "is neither a freeze nor a break in relations."

The Middle East News Agency said Egypt is recalling members of its technical and trade councils in Cyprus.

A PILOT on the Cyprus Airways DC-8 told a reporter an Egyptian military attaché apparently gave the signal to the commandos to launch an airport raid—in defiance of Cypriot authorities—in an attempt to seize the two terrorists and rescue their 11 hostages.

In the ensuing gunbattle Sunday night, Cypriot forces stopped the commando assault, killing 15 Egyptians.

The terrorists, who set off two days of bloodshed Saturday by assassinating prominent Egyptian editor Youssef el-Sebaei in Nicosia, surrendered to the plane's crew during the fighting.

Cypriot President Spyros Kyprianou demanded the recall of Egyptian attaché Col. Suleiman Hadad. In Cairo, Egyptian War Minister Mohammed Abdul Ghany Gamasy denied Hadad was involved. The Cypriot pilot did not elaborate on the basis for his allegation.

The Palestine Liberation Organization claimed in Lebanon that the two terrorists acted under orders from Iraq.

Sebaei was a chief spokesman for President Anwar Sadat. The Iraqi regime is an implacable foe of Sadat's peace dialogue with Israel.

Watt, Shaw endorse presidential candidates

Two former candidates for K-State student body president have endorsed Sam Brownback and Cindy Thomas for election in Wednesday's presidential run-off.

Stan Watt said he is supporting Brownback for the office, Bernard Shaw has thrown his support behind Thomas and former candidate Ted Knopp said he won't support anyone.

Watt said he is supporting Brownback in the run-off election because Brownback best represents his position on issues on campus.

"Of the two candidates, he most closely represents myself," Watt said. "His desires and concerns are the closest to mine."

"I think Sam sincerely has the students in mind," he said.

SHAW SAID he is supporting Thomas because she is capable of representing the students and said she would try to help minorities on campus.

"During the debates and when I was there I thought she was the most capable of the other candidates," Shaw said.

Knopp said he wouldn't publicly support either candidate.

"I'm not sure who I'm going to vote for," Knopp said. "It's hard for me to believe somebody else can do a better job."

"Each candidate has strong points and each has their weak points so I haven't decided who I'm going to vote for," he said.

Deadline for loan application today

Filing deadline for the Higher Education Loan Program of Kansas (HELP-KS) applications is today, Feb. 21.

According to Louise Henricks, administrative assistant of Student Financial Assistance (SFA), the Higher Education Assistance Foundation (HEAF), which guarantees these loans, will not approve and issue any loan checks when the projected date for delivery of the check would occur during the 30 days prior to the end of the semester.

Processing time for the applications is about five weeks after the loan application is received in Overland Park, Henricks said.

SFA has been notified that no applications will be processed if received after Feb. 28. Therefore, SFA will not accept spring semester loan applications after today.

Soviet military stronger

LONDON—The British government said Monday the Soviet military buildup is outstripping that of the NATO allies in the air, at sea and on land.

The Labor government report said the Russians are spending between 11 and 13 percent of their resources on the buildup.

"Soviet forces have in many areas been strengthened in size and quality on a scale which goes well beyond the need of any purely defensive posture," it said.

Moscow's military capability goes well beyond Europe into Africa, and the Soviet government is able to deploy military resources rapidly "in support of its political interests in the Third World," the report said.

'Americans can be proud'

WILMINGTON, Del.—President Carter said Monday night his administration has righted the wrongs of Watergate, Vietnam, and the CIA. He declared that the American people "can once again be proud of our country" and proud of its government.

Carter credited a united party with helping him restore national confidence.

Little more than a year ago, he said, the nation was torn and embarrassed to the point of despair and alienation by the after-effects of its war in Vietnam, the Watergate scandal and abuses by the Central Intelligence Agency.

"I believe that we have now corrected all these deficiencies," Carter said. "People can once again be proud of our country, proud of our government, proud of our Congress, proud of our administration."

U.S. checks Israeli oranges

GLOUCESTER CITY, N.J.—Federal officials used a metal detector Monday in a painstaking search for possible mercury contamination in a shipment of Israeli oranges to be unloaded by dockworkers here.

The shipment was the first to arrive in the United States since a group which claimed to be composed of Palestinian guerillas said it sabotaged Israeli fruit in an attempt to disrupt Israel's economy.

Mercury-contaminated Israeli oranges were found in Western Europe, and several persons were sickened. Contaminated fruit was found in shipments during the past few weeks to England, Holland, West Germany, France, Belgium and Sweden.

U.S. Food and Drug Administration officials said they did not expect to find contamination in the fruit shipped here but an examination was being made as a precautionary measure.

Massages may be licensed

TOPEKA—A bill for the licensing of bathhouses and massage parlors in Kansas drew support Monday from Shawnee County law enforcement officials and opposition from the operators of two massage parlors in that county.

R. E. Calvert and Jay Darlington, who identified themselves as operators of massage parlors on the outskirts of Topeka, said that proposed licensing fees are too high and would have the effect of closing them down.

A bill sponsored by Anita Niles (D-Lebo) proposes an annual license fee of $500. It also would require each attendant to hold a permit costing $100 initially and $50 a year for renewal.

Niles told the committee the state now licenses restaurants, nursing homes, doctors, hunters and many others in efforts to protect the general public.

LRPC approves new building plan

Final plans for the new general classroom and office building were approved Monday by the Long Range Planning Committee.

The plans will be submitted to President Duane Acker for his approval before the contracts will be let.

The building will be located at the present site of the rose gardens and will house the College of Education and the Department of Psychology.

The building facade will be a plain stone but with more texture than the stone used to build McCain Auditorium, according to Vincent Cool, vice president for university facilities.

"It dominates the site with its bulk, but does relate to the other buildings around it," Cool said.

College lecture or campaign speech?

Politicians work in mysterious ways.

Take, for example, the way President Ford conducted his lecture on "The Press and the President" Monday morning in the Survey of Mass Media class.

The "lecture" part of his talk lasted about 15 to 20 minutes and included many statements about the importance of the press in a democracy such as, "Instead of considering the press an adversary, you have to realize that they have a responsibility to give the public the facts with a minimum of editorial material. Very seldom did I ever get a bum rap from the press. Overall, I think the press does a good job."

What Ford did not mention was why his stay here included no press conferences—and why, contrary to normal custom, there was no question and answer period at the Landon Lecture.

If Ford did not consider the press an adversary, surely he could have worked some questions from the press into his schedule.

MAKING THE press representatives sit mutely at the back of the classroom through the duration of the class, even during the discussion period (which was dominated by political questions concerning his campaign) did little to endear him in the hearts of media personnel.

Ford's class lecture also included information concerning the advantages of joining the Republican party (for those students who have plans of running for Congress).

This information is, of course, interesting and rather entertaining, but it was not the educational lecture that might have been expected by the students.

How much of the class lectures and the Landon Lecture was meant to be educational—and how much was rhetoric from a candidate "on the campaign trail?"

Only Gerald Ford knows for sure.

Mt. Rushmore and trench coats

Have you ever had that feeling you were being watched?

Monday's Landon Lecture audience undoubtedly had that feeling while a rather large number of well-suited, stone-faced men canvassed the audience for something.

The Secret Service entourage accompanying former President Gerald Ford provided an excellent distraction from the unenlightening speech on the president and foreign policy. It was a real education watching national security in action.

BUT I can't help but wonder what those guys were looking for and what they would have done if they had found it.

Perhaps the audience should have provided those men with something to do besides standing around in perfect posture watching nodding heads and gaping yawns.

But the audience was the perfect host. No rude remarks (other than the slight rumble when the former president commented on the fine basketball facility we were in), no objects flying through the air and no partisan political signs giving the place a convention atmosphere.

I would imagine those Secret Service men had a rather boring day protecting the former president from abuse of any kind. So it leads again to that question: What were they looking for, or better yet, what were they securing?

FROM MY perspective, they were securing the pomp and circumstance accompanying a presidential visit. They were securing the reputation of the stereotyped Secret Service man.

After all, did you see one of them smile once? And did you notice how many were wearing trench coats?

These men braved the cold and wind of stereotyped Kansas weather to show the people of Manhattan that our tax money is working. I am so glad.

And I have little doubt there are a lot of tax dollars buying those fine three-piece suits. Even if these men are making only minimum wage, it has to cost big bucks to protect former presidents and their families until their deaths.

IT POSSIBLY would be cheaper by giving the Secret Service something to do.

But no brave soul dared to cause some minor distraction for these men. Probably no one wanted to know how quickly and with what means the Secret Service would react. So we'll probably never know what the Secret Service would have done once they found what they were looking for in Ahearn Field House Monday.

But it may be the best lesson in national security the students at K-State will see. Unfortunately, the lesson did more to confirm than eradicate the stereotypical image of the Secret Service. Unfortunately, the Kansas weather did the same.

Camp-outs best ticket sale policy

Editor,

Concerning Cieslicki's statement of receiving no feedback from UPC's current ticket sales method, we feel it is now safe to do so without biasing our allotment of tickets. The Union Program Council committee is doing an excellent job of bringing the concert to the K-State student body, although there is obviously no preference made to being a part of the University when ticket selections are made.

It seems a shame that students are allowed to camp out for basketball tickets and games, but not for concert events. Bad weather, we assure you, would certainly not be detrimental to camping out for such events. Most of the complaints made about camping out are presented by the people who either do not feel the concert is worth camping out for, or who feel they cannot spare the time. If they cannot spare an hour or two a day while studying or doing possibly any other activity, or cannot find a friend who will, perhaps the concert doesn't mean that much to them anyway.

IF THE UPC concerts committee is worried about damage to the grounds, they could easily have the campout in the stadium parking lot or similar grounds.

Why not hold a lottery? The ticket sales method for the 'America' concert is almost identical, and we feel it is a very poor and ridiculous idea. Nearly all bands on tour would much rather have the more enthusiastic crowd up front. It gives them better feedback and helps to provide a better performance by the band. So why not let those who want to see the concert enough to camp out for tickets do so?

Cieslicki, you now have your feedback.

Where have all the pencil sharpeners gone?

Editor,

Perhaps, in part, I remain a traditionalist in that I feel more comfortable writing with a pencil as opposed to a pen.

The scrawling a pen produces for me just seems a bit too permanent.

Pencil mistakes are much more easily corrected.

Well, without delving into the peculiar psychological roots of such an idiosyncrasy, I'll get to the point.

Where are all the pencil sharpeners?

I have classes meeting in six separate rooms in six separate buildings and only one of them has a sharpener. This is a major crisis to someone dependent upon taking notes with a blunt piece of charcoal.

Now obviously I don't expect the architect to plan classroom space from the pencil sharpener on out, but I simply do wish to bring this discomforting matter to attention.

After all, where would we be if no one was ever kind enough to tell us when our fly was down?

Candidates disagree on election bill

By ANDREA CARVER

Collegian Reporter

Student body presidential candidates Sam Brownback and Cindy Thomas disagree over the issue of changing the number of student government elections to be held at K-State each year.

While Brownback is opposed to the change, Thomas, a sponsor of the yearly elections bill, is still in favor of the measure despite Student Senate's defeat of the bill Feb. 16.

Although senate defeated the bill which called for senate elections to be held once a year instead of the current twice-a-year system, the issue is expected to return to senate.

The bill provided for the yearly election of senate once a year during spring semester beginning February 1979, with the senate elected October 1978 held over until February 1980.

UNDER THE constitution of K-State's Student Governing Association (SGA), the student body president may veto a bill passed by senate.

Brownback said he is opposed to election dates being changed to once a year because the current system is a workable one.

Students petition for Nichols study

A petition asking the Kansas Legislature to approve funds for a study on the feasibility of renovating Nichols Gym will be sent to the legislature this week.

The petition, which is signed by over 1,000 people, is directed at the House Ways and Means Committee as it considers a proposal from Senator Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) to allocate $50,000 toward the feasibility study.

The initiator of the petition, student education senator Troy Horine, said the petition just expressed K-State student interest in renovating Nichols Gym.

"I thought that K-State students should express their interest in the funding proposals in front of the legislature that could affect K-State," Horine said.

HORINE SAID he became interested in Doyen's proposal when he realized that $10,000 Student Senate allocated 10 years ago to do a feasibility study hasn't been used and will return to senate on June 1.

Horine contacted Doyen, who urged a show of support from K-Staters. Horine said he got the idea after reading about a petition drive at the University of Kansas for funds to renovate its library.

Horine said that he plans on mailing the petition on Wednesday and is no longer taking signatures. He urged students to write letters to the legislature.

"I strongly encourage students to write the (Ways and Means) Committee and let them know how you as a student feel about the issue," he said.

"With the system we have now, we get fresh blood coming in. We get representation from the students," Brownback said.

If elections were held once a year there wouldn't be people campaigning as often, decreasing the amount of input from the student body, Brownback said.

"I think we have a good mixture now," he said.

Brownback said the only advantage he could see in yearly elections is having the senate working together for a year.

"It might help them work together but I can see it making them very stagnant. There wouldn't be the new, fresh ideas coming in that new senators provide," he said.

BROWNBACK SAID the senate is wasting time on this issue.

"We're not tackling a problem affecting the student body as a whole," he said.

Thomas said she is in favor of the early elections bill because the change would increase the efficiency of senate and would develop more continuity.

"There are always allocations or elections coming up. Two elections slow down Student Senate," Thomas said.

The current system of elections doesn't allow senate committees enough time to work on legislation and student problems, Thomas said.

One election per year would increase voter turnout for the election because the election of the student body president would be held at the same time, she said.

More campaigning by candidates for student government offices would take place with one election because candidates would have to wait a year to run for office again.

"One election would encourage people to get out and campaign," Thomas said.

Bats buzz spectators; school declares war

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP)—The principal of a Savannah high school where staff and pupils have killed about 700 bats this month said Monday he feels humans are winning the battle against the flying furry mammals.

"Today we found only four," said Richard Mole, principal of Beach High School. On Friday, 20 bats were killed.

Trouble began about three weeks ago when a basketball game had to be delayed because bats—which have been living in the attic for years—were buzzing spectators.

"It looked like a horror movie or something," said Sheila Hicks, a ninth-grader.

It turned to war Feb. 13, when dozens of bats were found in the building.

A VOTE For THOMAS is a step in the right direction

This past year a firm foundation has been laid between students and administration. Now the administration is receptive to the concerns and needs of students. It is important that this next year the Student Body President and S.G.A. make major moves towards solving the problems students face at K-State.

My working relationship with the administration and the Board of Regents would enable me to make inroads into the problems here at K-State.

Former President Gerald Ford and Kansas Governor Robert Bennett share a laugh prior to Ford's Landon Lecture address.

Ford's presence alters atmosphere

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Editor

Kedzie 106 is usually a sleepy lecture hall that is the frequent site of anthropology classes and courses in economics.

Monday morning it was the site of the Survey of Mass Media class and a U.S. Politics class. By 8:25, the room was nearly filled.

But students didn't just walk in and take their seats. They were asked by men at the door to produce their identification cards and their names were checked against those on a computer print-out.

Besides the usual number of students who attend these classes, there were to be numerous other visitors, one of whom would be Gerald Ford, the 37th President of the United States.

The back three rows of the hall were filled, appropriately enough, with representatives from the media.

Cameramen roamed the aisles searching for the best vantage point. Notebooks were flung open and a television camera hummed quietly in the back of the room.

Also located in the aisles were men dressed in snappy suits, hair neatly combed, with earplugs visible beneath their hair.

THESE SAME men carefully scrutinized each person entering the hall, checking back-packs and bulky coats.

They watched each student walk to his seat and looked at him some more as he settled into his chair.

Secret Service agents are born pessimists.

At precisely 8:30, Ford walked into room 106 in Kedzie Hall.

The audience quickly quieted as he made his way to the stage located at the front of the room.

After being introduced by Walter Bunge, head of the journalism department at K-State, Ford began to talk about the relationship between media and politics.

Ford said the media makes "a very significant contribution in keeping the country on the straight and narrow."

He said the media is "absolutely essential but the press must also have a degree of responsibility."

"There isn't enough emphasis on in-depth newscasting," Ford said. "The press' responsibility is to give the public the facts with minimal editorial comment."

THE CLASS was then transformed into a question-and-answer period, but surprisingly, (See FORD, page 7)

Presents from K-State; visor, purple golf balls and a book on K-State's history.

Photos by Tom Bell and Bo Rader

Security men, who accompanied Ford throughout the day, were oblivious to Ford's remarks, but watched the crowd closely.

Ford addressed an audience of more than 7,000 for about 45 minutes.

Ford says press has responsibility; suggests he'll 'be around' in 1980

the press wasn't allowed to participate.

Ford was asked if he thought it appropriate that Republican senator Bob Dole of Kansas was campaigning for the presidential nomination with over two years to go before the election.

"Jimmy Carter did it," Ford said, adding that Carter achieved success by covering the country in "a grass roots way" and later said Dole was a good vice-presidential running mate.

The inevitable question was then asked: would Gerald Ford be a candidate for the presidency of the United States in 1980?

"I don't want to give any indication if I am going to run," Ford said. "I'll be around. I may or may not be a candidate."

Ford then took the opportunity to blast Carter and Attorney General Griffin Bell for their handling of the firing of David Marston, U.S. Attorney from Philadelphia, who was fired for uncovering corruption among the Democrats.

"I believe the Carter Administration handled the whole problem in a very amateurish way," Ford said. "Normally, the removal of an attorney from a previous administration takes place very quickly. But they kept him on for over a year."

Kansans may get to choose future presidential nominees

TOPEKA (AP)—Kansans would indicate their preference for the presidential nominations of their parties in a primary election under a bill recommended to the full membership of the House Monday by its Elections Committee.

The bill calls for the primary election to be moved up to the first Tuesday in June in presidential election years.

A candidate for the presidential nomination could get his or her name on the ballot by filing a declaration of intent and paying a fee of $100 or by filing a nominating petition signed by 1,000 registered voters affiliated with the candidate's party.

The state convention of the party would pick delegates from lists supplied by the candidates in proportion to the vote received by the candidate, with provision for uncommitted delegates to be named in proportion to the uncommitted vote.

FORD ANALOGIZED Carter's handling of the situation as similar to a minor league coach trying to prepare to play the New York Yankees.

Ford also said the Carter Administration should utilize the negotiation process to help resolve the coal strike.

He denounced a proposal by Carter to ask Congress for help in resolving the strike.

"By the time Congress acted, we'd be in for a very cold winter," Ford said.

The former president said Carter should investigate the possibility of having former labor secretaries join in the negotiations to form a fact-finding committee, citing the "prestige" of the group as a major selling point.

Ford also suggesting utilizing the assistance of Bill Usuary, who he called "the most effective negotiator with labor and management in the country today."

After answering a few more questions, the bell rang and the crowd slowly began to leave the room.

Outside the hall, Ford, surrounded by Secret Service agents, donned his black overcoat, and with his collar ruffled over his right shoulder, slowly made his way to Anderson Hall, passing students who were oblivious to the presence of the former president of the United States.

Jim Dickey happy with 'best' coaches and 17 'fine' recruits

By JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

First year head football coach Jim Dickey knew he had a tough job ahead of him when he accepted the job at K-State.

But Dickey established his game plan and has proceeded to execute it.

The first priority was the hiring of a coaching staff. Dickey stressed youth, even hiring two Kansas high school coaches, Dennis Franchione, from Peabody-Burns, and Jim Davie, former head coach at powerful Wichita Southeast.

Many people considered this a stroke of genius. Others felt it a somewhat unethical ploy to influence Kansas high school players to attend K-State.

"Some people criticized me," Dickey said, "they felt the only reason I hired Davie and Franchione was to get their kids. But we went after the coach first. The coach was our first priority."

"If I'd hired the coaches just to bring their kids," Dickey said, "I could have waited until after national letter signing day to hire them. I could have stipulated that if they didn't sign the kid, they didn't get the job."

"But I felt that would have been an unfair situation," he said. "I had 51 applications from around the state but could only hire two coaches. I feel we got the best."

ALTHOUGH Dickey did stress youth, with most of his coaching staff in their late twenties or early thirties, he also added experience in the person of Carl Selmer, who served 11 seasons as offensive line coach for the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

Sports

"Carl is considered in the coaching profession as one of the finest coaches in America," Dickey said.

Dickey also hired fellow North Carolina assistant Jim Donnan, who will handle the quarterbacks. Donnan was an all-Atlantic Conference quarterback for North Carolina State and coached at Florida State in addition to his alma mater.

"Jim has a tremendous knowledge of the game and the ability to communicate his expertise," Dickey said.

K-STATE signed 17 players to national football letters. Nine of the signees are from Kansas, two each from Oklahoma, Texas and North Carolina, one from Pennsylvania and one from California.

"We've been pretty pleased with our recruiting," Dickey said. "We had a late start, but I feel the quality of athlete we signed was very high."

One of the more promising athletes is Keith Dearing, a 6-2, 195 pound running back from Pittsburg. He gained 1,114 yards and scored 10 touchdowns his senior year. He also is the Pennsylvania 100-yard dash champion with a time of 9.5.

A highly touted quarterback is Darrell Dickey, the coach's son.

"There'll be a lot of pressure on Darrell," Dickey said. "He'll have to perform superbly to dispell any cries of favoritism."

The line is another area where the Wildcats recruited well.

"Obviously, we need good offensive and defensive linemen and in (Amos) Donaldson, (Wade) Wentling, (Doug) Hoppock and (Stan) Shapley we think we have recruited some fine ones," Dickey said.

DESPITE his happiness with the recruiting, Dickey did have some disappointments. He had hoped they could sign Jim Meyer, a center for Wichita Southeast, and Roger Foote, a quarterback from Peabody-Burns.

"Obviously you can't sign everybody you want to," Dickey said, "but I was especially disappointed over Meyer and Foote."

The last six recruits who visited K-State signed with the Wildcats.

"We have to find out what we did right on that last visit," Dickey said, "and see if we can't duplicate it next time. It's very unusual to sign all the players from one visit."

Dickey doubted any freshmen players would step immediately into a starting role.

"I hope not," Dickey said, "that usually means your program is not that strong."

Track women fifth at Indoor; Hancock and Vetter grab gold

The K-State women's track team finished fifth Sunday in the Big Eight Indoor Track Championships in Lincoln, Nebraska.

The Wildcats compiled 54 points to place them behind champion Iowa State's 93 points. Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado finished second, third and fourth, respectively.

K-State received strong performances from Freda Hancock and Deb Vetter. Hancock set a new school record in the preliminaries of the 60-yard dash, then took second in the finals with a time 6.97. Hancock also set a school record while grabbing first place in the 440-yard dash with a 55.99 time.

Vetter placed first in the 600-yard run with a clocking of 1:21.06.

LINDA LONG and Melanie Benneke placed second and fifth respectively, in the shot put with throws of 45 feet, two and one-half inches, and 40 feet, four and three-fourths inches.

Jan Smith finished fourth in the 300-yard dash with a time of 36.67. Teammate Patty Bundy was fifth in the high jump at 5-2 and Wanda Trent was fifth in the 440-yard dash at 57.51.

The mile relay team of Lorraine Davidson, Jan Smith, Hancock and Trent finished second behind Colorado, but established a new school record of 3:51.2.

'Cats go for conference title

The K-State women's basketball team could capture its seventh straight state title and clinch a berth in the AIAW Region VI Championships when it hosts the Kansas Lady Jayhawks in Ahearn Field House tonight. Tipoff is scheduled for 7:30 p.m.

The Wildcats stand 16-13 overall and boast a perfect 2-0 state conference record heading into their fourth meeting with the Lady Jayhawks this season.

The 'Cats, who hold a 19-5 advantage in the series with Kansas, are 1-2 against the Lady 'Hawks on the year. K-State fell 75-53 to KU in the semi-finals of the Big Eight Tournament in Lawrence, avenged that with a 66-65 state conference win there, then fell again to the 'Hawks 76-63 in the finals of the Kansas Lady Jayhawk Classic.

THE WILDCATS, who had a five game winning streak going before their 73-57 loss at Central Missouri a week ago, have never lost to Kansas in Ahearn.

Eileen Feeney continues to lead the 'Cats in scoring, averaging 13.5 points a contest, while Beth Boggs is first in rebounding and second in scoring with an average of 11.6 points and 7.6 rebounds an outing.

The 'Cats former starting center, Margo Jones, who has missed the club's last 13 games with a broken finger, should be back in uniform. But veteran forward Laurie Miller and backup forward Michelle Campbell aren't expected to see action.

Miller is suffering from a strained knee and Campbell is sidelined with a stress fracture of the left foot.

Teenagers, store clerk shot in execution-style slayings

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP)—Three teen-age boys, well-liked and active in school, were going to be in a musical program at their church next month. Instead, their funeral will be at the church. The three died in a weekend gangland-style slaying with no apparent motive.

On the day the boys were killed, a clerk in a nearby adult bookstore was found shot to death in the same manner. Police were searching for three men seen in the area near the time of the slayings.

Officers said that although the boys and the bookstore clerk were killed in a similar manner—shot in the head—and the vacant building where the boys were killed once housed an adult bookstore, there was no indication the killings were related.

ROBBERY appeared to have been the motive in the clerk's killing, police said. No motive could be established for the slayings of brothers Gerald and Jeff Hoffman and a friend, Jeff Beavers.

"The boys had no enemies. All three of them were pretty good kids," said Gerald Hoffman Sr., father of the dead brothers.

"The boys were very well liked at school, very socially and athletically active. They were good students and never were in trouble of any kind."

Hoffman, a West Des Moines contractor, said the boys were helping clean up a building he was remodeling for a restaurant.

He said he dropped the boys off Sunday morning at the site, showed them what they were to do and then left. A restaurant equipment supplier stopped by to check on the work and found the boys, lying side-by-side, less than two hours later.

Jeff Hoffman, 14, and Jeff Beavers, 15, were pronounced dead at the site. Gerald Hoffman Jr., 15, died several hours later after surgery.

POLK COUNTY Medical Examiner R.C. Wooters said wounds in the backs of the boys' heads appeared to have been inflicted with a .38-caliber revolver in "execution style." The similar fatal shooting took place a few hours later about three blocks away.

William Baldwin, 30, was found dead behind a counter at the Adult Center bookstore. The compartments of an open cash drawer were empty, but there was some money in the back of the drawer, police said. Officers estimated that $160 was taken.

Suicide note states Goering wanted 'to escape the indignity of hanging'

BONN, West Germany (AP)—A German newspaper has published a suicide note attributed to Hermann Goering in which the Nazi Reichsmarshal told his wife, Emmy, he would have accepted an Allied firing squad but was killing himself to escape the indignity of hanging.

The newspaper, Welt am Sonntag, said the former air force chief and No. 2 man in the Nazi hierarchy wrote the letter in his prison cell shortly before poisoning himself on Oct. 15, 1946, two hours before the scheduled hanging.

The paper did not say how it obtained the letter.

"Death by shooting I would have accepted at any time. But the Reichsmarshal of Germany cannot allow himself to be hanged," the letter said.

"my heart's only love," was said to have been confiscated by the Allied authorities who found it in Goering's death row cell at Nuernberg prison.

He was jailed there after World War II with 21 other top Nazi officials convicted by the Allied war crimes tribunals. The remainder of the 11 sentenced to death were hanged between December 1945 and May 1947.

The note indicated that Goering possessed the fatal cyanide capsule from the start of his captivity—thus appearing to rule out the possibility that an accomplice slipped it to him in his cell.

"I take it as a sign from God that he allowed me to keep the means to free myself from all earthly things, through all the months of captivity, and that it was not discovered," said the letter.

"God in his goodness thereby spared me the ultimate."

Goering said he objected also to his execution being photographed and given press coverage.

OFFICIAL Allied military photographers took pictures of the hanged bodies but did not photograph the actual executions, according to Robert Kempner, former U.S. deputy chief of counsel at the Nuernberg trials. These pictures were then released to the press.

"Sensation is the main thing. But I want to die quietly without public (witnesses)," Goering was quoted as writing.

The letter concluded: "All my thoughts are for you, Edda (his daughter)....The last beats of my heart are for our great, eternal love."

"Your Hermann."

THE LETTER, addressed to Syrian president flies to Moscow to purchase arms

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Syrian President Hafez Assad flew to Moscow on an arms-buying trip Monday—the fourth hardline Arab leader opposed to Egypt's Middle East peace initiative to visit the Soviet Union within a month.

As the Soviets laid on a red carpet welcome for Assad, a top U.S. envoy returned to Jerusalem to try to resuscitate the stalled Egyptian-Israeli talks, and the Israeli cabinet began a major reassessment of its attitude towards the peace bid.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton told reporters at the airport that he will try to draw Jordan into the negotiations.

Head colds wanted: doctor will pay $30 for day of sneezing and sniffing

NEWARK, N.J. (AP)—Got a cold? John Connell will pay you $30 to $50 a day to sit in his office and sneeze.

Connell, a specialist in nose problems and allergies, is one of dozens of experts throughout the country who test cold remedies for drug companies trying to find out how well their products work.

"I'm an independent investigator," he said. "They come to me. I design an experiment to try to solve their problems and then we talk about a fee."

Connell ran an ad, "Head Colds Wanted," on Jan. 9 in connection with his latest test. Since then, he has heard from more than 600 suffering volunteers, of whom 200 qualified.

"I don't want people who are only doing it for the money," he said in a telephone interview from his Englewood office. "They have to be between 18 and 60, and not have a history of heart disease, high blood pressure or other complications."

ON A recent winter day, Connell ushered eight cold victims into his office at 8:20 a.m. and fitted their nostrils with plastic cups connected to a machine that measures nasal airflow.

He was testing a liquid cold medicine with an alcohol and sugar base, one of the 50,000 non-prescription cold remedies on which Americans spend an estimated $700 million a year.

The subjects were given varying potions: the decongestant part of the medicine, the cough suppressant ingredient, an aspirin substitute, a plain mixture of sugar and alcohol or the medicine itself.

Each hour, the test subjects filled out a computer program card telling how many times they sneezed and blew their noses. Every half hour, Connell measured the airflow through their nostrils.

IN BETWEEN, the volunteers watched television, shot pool or played games. They were served meals and got $30 for staying all day; anyone who stayed past 7:30 p.m. got an extra $20.

"What cold medicines do is relieve a set of symptoms, temporarily," he said. "Sometimes products don't work. If we feel that we have the right test and still can't show results, we would go back to the drug company and say, "This isn't working. If you can't make it work, you'd better take it off the market."

"When we design the right experiment, we find that most of the drugs are quite effective at doing something."

A 1976 study by a Food and Drug Administration panel of 90 active ingredients used in products for coughs, colds and related ailments concluded that none of the medicines will prevent, cure or even shorten the course of the common cold, although they do relieve some of the symptoms.

Connell said the cold virus changes just enough each year to elude a cure, but he said the level of misery is about the same.

Grief-stricken mother leaps to an icy death

KANSAS CITY (AP)—A woman whose two daughters met violent deaths within the past five years apparently jumped to her death from an Interstate 635 bridge over the Kansas River Sunday.

Police said Mrs. Mildred Whisler left a note for her husband, Melvin Whisler Jr., saying she was sorry for what she was going to do.

"She just wanted to be with her daughters," a distraught Whisler said.

He said his wife felt both her daughters had been murdered and she was upset because the slayings had not been solved.

ONE DAUGHTER, Kana Rae Whisler Buck, 23, died Jan. 30 of injuries suffered in a traffic accident eight days earlier. The other daughter, Dana Whisler, 20, was shot in the head Aug. 14, 1973, as she sat in her car at a stop sign in Overland Park.

Both women are buried in a cemetery about three miles from the bridge where Whisler apparently leaped to her death. She apparently visited the gravesites Sunday morning before she jumped. Her car was located on the bridge and police spotted a pair of women's shoes on the ice-choked river. They were unable to recover the shoes or drag the river because of the heavy ice.

The Dana Whisler case is one of the most unusual and frustrating facing Johnson County officers, they say. They believe they know the killers of the attractive Turner High School honor graduate, but do not have enough proof for a conviction. No charges have ever been filed.

"We know where they (the prime suspect) are all the time, but we need a break to get the evidence to connect them with the crime," said Overland Park Detective Chief Ron Jackson.

WHISLER said he thinks police have stopped trying to solve the murder. "They told me they are both known hoodlums, dope addicts," Whisler said. "I'll tell you how they phrased it. They told me they belong to an organization just about as powerful as the Mafia. If they know all that and can't do anything about it—there's something wrong with our laws."

Buck suffered the fatal injuries when her car crashed into a highway sign, then a light pole along Interstate 70 on Kansas City's east side. She was alone at the time, traveling on a straight, dry section of I-70 about 5 a.m. Police speculated she fell asleep or swerved to avoid another car.

Whisler said officers told his family some things about the accident that never appeared on the accident report, leading the parents to believe Buck's car was hit by another vehicle before the crash.

"My wife thought somebody killed her," Whisler said. "In the (suicide) note she said she couldn't stand it anymore, her two daughters being killed and not knowing who did it."

NIGHT OF THE HUNTER

Cast: Robert Mitchum, Peter Graves, Shelley Winters, Lillian Gish

Charles Laughton's only film as a director has over the years achieved a deserved reputation as a unique masterpiece of American cinema. He gives the film an exquisite visual sense of menace. The story is of a ruthless killer's furious pursuit of two children who innocently carry the secret of his sinister past.

Citizens' petition to city commission puts the bite on run-around canines

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

A petition from Manhattan citizens has stirred the Manhattan city commission to propose amendments to the city's dog control ordinance.

Last November, Michael Klinker brought to the Manhattan city commission a petition signed by 89 Northview residents interested in changing the dog ordinance to prohibit dogs running at large.

The present ordinance is five years old and needs to be updated, Klinker said. "I proposed a progressive fine," he said. "The first offense would cost $15. The second offense would be $30. The third offense would be $60 and the fourth would be $100.

KLINKER ALSO proposed the first fine be automatically

12-day stakeout ends with arrest of armed widow

QUINCY, Mass. (AP)—A 71-year-old reclusive widow was taken into custody Monday after keeping police at bay from her bungalow with a shotgun for 12 days, threatening to kill herself and anyone who approached.

Detective Guido Pettanelli grabbed Mary Connor when she opened the door of her home early in the afternoon. Officers found a loaded shotgun inside the door, Quincy Police Lt. James Fay said.

Paul Graham, a neighbor, said Connor opened the door after Pettanelli had knocked to check on her condition when she did not answer her phone.

She was arrested on an assault charge stemming from a threat she made with the gun, police said.

No shots were fired throughout the siege, which started Feb. 8 and turned Connor's little white bungalow with a Valentine heart on the door into a symbol of fear in her neighborhood.

Neighbors quickened their pace when they passed the house and a round-the-clock police stakeout warned loiterers away. A next-door neighbor moved with her children to a relative's home.

Police believe Connor was trained to shoot by her late husband Eugene, "and we understand there are other weapons in the house," said Pettanelli.

Fay said police were seeking a warrant to search the house.

The siege began, according to neighbor William Riordan, when Connor threatened his son, Timothy, and some other boys with a shotgun in a dispute over fees for shoveling snow.

suspended to be fair to the person whose dog is loose accidentally. If the dog is picked up a second time, the owner would pay the $30 plus the $15 from the first time, Klinker said.

"With this type of progressive fine, there would be a definite penalty for owners of dogs running at large, lower the number of dogs running at large and provide additional revenue for the animal shelter," he said. "It would also keep confined animals from being bothered by the dogs running at large."

The City Commission asked City Attorney Ed Horne to draw up a new city dog ordinance, which he presented to the commission during last Tuesday's meeting.

THE ORDINANCE includes a $5 licensing fee for unneutered dogs and would eliminate the $2 licensing fee now charged for neutered dogs. People with neutered dogs, however, would still have to license them.

"The first time a dog is picked up a judge would set a minimum fine ranging from $15 to $25, Horne said.

For the second and subsequent offenses a minimum fine of $50 would be charged, he said.

THE LATTER stipulation was put in at the request of the commissioners, who said there should be a minimum fine for second and subsequent offenses, he said.

Plea-bargain, jury selection in trial

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

One of the four men charged with the rape of a coed in K-State's athletic dormitory last March 30 pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit rape Tuesday in Riley County District Court while lawyers selected a jury for the trial of the remaining three co-defendants.

Kirk Boykin, a former K-State football player, from Houston, pleaded guilty to the lesser charge Tuesday morning in District Court Judge Ronald Innes' chambers after waiving preliminary hearing rights, said James Morrison, Boykin's attorney.

According to Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter, Boykin's plea of guilty to the conspiracy was entered because "in my opinion, that's the charge the facts indicate he is guilty of."

Sauter also said Boykin is on the list of prospective witnesses for the state, but declined to comment on whether his being on that list had anything to do with his pleading guilty to conspiracy to commit rape.

According to Morrison a pre-sentence investigation will be conducted to look into the facts of the case, prior convictions, and Boykin's personal background and determine the severity of the sentence.

BOYKIN COULD be imprisoned for one to five years and fined up to $5,000. No date has been set for sentencing, but Morrison said it could be 60 days before he is sentenced.

Sauter and defense lawyer Charles Scott of Topeka spent eight and one-half hours Tuesday interviewing prospective jurors who will decide the case.

Scott is defending Michael Woodfin, Topeka, Ken Lovely, Dallas, and Nate Jones, Chicago, all members of the K-State football team at the time of the incident. The 80 candidates selected for jury duty were narrowed to 55. Then defense and prosecuting attorneys each can eliminate 21 persons because of possible prejudicial opinions which could hurt their cases. This leaves 12 persons for the jury and one alternate.

Jerome Holiwell, Manhattan, originally charged in the rape, was granted immunity last September in return for testimony against Jones, Woodfin and Lovely.

Jones and Lovely saw some starting duty for the 1977 football team, while Boykin, Holiwell and Woodfin left the squad before the season.

Presentation of evidence is expected to begin today in Riley County District Court.

Lack of information lowers number of minorities in scholarship houses

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

The low number of blacks in K-State scholarship houses is partially the fault of high school counselors who may not be informing them about scholarship house living, according to some K-State administrators.

No blacks live in Smurthwaite this year and only two live in Smith, and both of those residents are foreign students.

Mary Jo Weber, director of Smurthwaite Scholarship House, said it has been three years since a black has lived there.

"We haven't had many apply. No blacks applied last year," Weber said. "I think it's just the fact that people come to school and have in mind ahead of time where they want to live. They want to go where their friends are going."

Weber believes high school counselors are being selective in who they inform about the availability of scholarship-house living.

"A lot of high school counselors don't tell all the people about scholarship houses. I don't think it is presented and pushed as much as dorm living," Weber said.

ONLY Kansas residents can live in Smurthwaite, and Weber said most of the residents come from rural areas where there aren't many blacks. She doesn't think everyone in the larger cities is being informed about scholarship houses. Scholarship house living is pushed more in rural areas, she said.

"We don't have near the population from places like Kansas City and Wichita."

Robert Kapitan, director of Smith Scholarship House, said there are two black students living in Smith—one from Africa and the other from South America.

Kapitan said he doesn't think everyone knows about the scholarship houses before they come to K-State.

"We are trying to get an interest going. Each of the scholarship houses is having open house," Kapitan said.

Blacks may not find scholarship house living appealing, according to Kapitan.

"I come from a black background myself and I have a lot of black friends. The kind of life they have around here isn't the same," Kapitan said.

"I think a lot of blacks are unaware of the scholarship house. A lot of them are unaware of what the challenges are and maybe they are afraid of taking the challenges. Maybe peer pressure has something to do with it."

WEBER said the scholarship houses are campaigning to get more students, including blacks, to consider living there.

"People learn about Smith and Smurthwaite by word of mouth," Weber said. "We want to get more information to high schools."

Elections today

The run-off election for K-State student body president and elections for student senators from the College of Arts and Sciences will be today.

Polls will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. and will be located in the Union and the basement of Farrell Library.

Sam Brownback and Cindy Thomas are candidates in the run-off election, which is being held because no one candidate received more than a 50 percent majority of votes cast for a candidate in elections held Feb. 15.

Senate elections for the College of Arts and Sciences will be held today because of the invalidation of last week's Arts and Sciences senate elections because of a misprint in voter instructions.

City Commission approves ordinance closing section of Houston Street

By PERYN COMINSKY
and KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporters

An ordinance permanently closing the 900 block of Houston Street was unanimously adopted by the Manhattan City Commission last night.

Bruce McCallum, Manhattan's city engineer recommended that June 15 be adopted as the date to close the street.

Harry Wareham, long time resident of Manhattan, said he opposed the ordinance because the closed street would inconvenience the many people wanting to exit the downtown area toward the west part of Manhattan.

The commission also authorized Mayor Russell Reitz to submit a letter of intent requesting funds for a feasibility study for mass transportation in Manhattan.

According to city planner Gary Stith, the funds for study are available through the federal Department of Transportation on an 80-20 federal-city split.

STITH SAID if Manhattan gets the money, the city would only have to pay $5,000, or 20 percent of the bill.

The Commission also rejected a bid by the David White Bus and Equipment Company of Kansas City for a new ATA bus. The bid had exceeded the $15,000 allotted for the bus by an undisclosed amount.

Marvin Butler, director for community development was instructed by the commission to inform all interested equipment companies that the city would take new bids for an ATA bus until March 8.

The commission set March 15 as the day to receive bids on a new mini-pumper fire truck for the Fire Department.

The new truck will cost around $3,000 and will replace the 1959 pumper truck, Fire Chief Bill Smith said.

The zoning ordinance on signs was retabled because Commissioner Terry Glasscock was not present.

Minorities 'not aware' of scholarship houses

"There's a lot of speculation that the program will be revamped on a first-come, first-serve basis," she said.

There's a concern among scholarship-house residents that more information should be distributed to inform people they can live in scholarship houses. Weber said he hopes the reason more blacks don't live in scholarship houses isn't because they aren't informed.

Thomas Frith, director of housing, also said it is a possibility that high school counselors are being selective while counseling student.

"In some schools which are predominately black, I don't think we concentrate on giving them information," Frith said.

"In other years we have had more minority people in scholarship houses and some years we've had none," Frith said.

SINCE Smurthwaite houses only Kansas residents, Frith believes that is why there aren't many minority students living there.

Allen McCormick, academic counselor in the education opportunity center of the minority center, said it is a possibility that information isn't being distributed to everyone.

McCormick believes many blacks have pre-conceived notions about the atmosphere in scholarship houses.

Carter pays for wife's staff

WASHINGTON—Rosallynn Carter, like wives of presidents before her, has a White House staff to help her perform her duties as first lady. But the law makes no provision for paying those workers with taxpayers' money.

A House committee is expected to approve a measure today that, for the first time, would authorize the president and vice president to provide staff assistance to their spouses.

Hugh Carter Jr., special assistant to the president for administration, said current use of presidential funds for Mrs. Carter's staff of 17 is based on tradition.

"Although there is no statutory authority, there is quite a bit of precedent to support the use of those funds," Carter said. "Congress has known for years that the money has been used for that support and no objections have been raised."

'Silver' dollar may be back

WASHINGTON—The Treasury Department, which two years ago resurrected the $2 bill, now wants to bring back a shrunken—and mostly copper—version of the once-popular silver dollar.

The department also told Congress it has rejected proposals to eliminate the half-dollar and that it wants to keep the penny indefinitely.

The reason behind the proposed shift to copper dollar coins is economic. The proposed coin will cost between two and three cents to produce and will last at least 15 years. In comparison, a paper dollar costs only 1.7 cents to produce but wears out quickly.

The Treasury would continue to produce dollar bills if the dollar coin proposal is passed.

Bergland target for farmers

WICHITA—Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland said Tuesday a demonstration by farmers in Amarillo, Tex., in which he was the target of eggs and snowballs, did the farm strike movement "great harm."

"There were a few people there trying to embarrass American Agriculture, but I didn't pay any attention to it," Bergland said in a news conference after arriving here from Texas on his swing to promote participation in the administration's plan to curb grain production.

As he was preparing to leave Amarillo, eggs, snowballs and shouts greeted Bergland and one woman tried to stop a police car attempting to take him to the airport by lying down in front of the car.

"The American Agriculture movement has done a good job in bringing the plight of agriculture to the public's attention, and I'm urging leaders of that and all other organizations to comply with the law," he said.

Academy nominates Allen

HOLLYWOOD—Woody Allen, the stand-up comedian turned filmmaker, scored a personal triumph Tuesday when he was nominated for three Academy Awards, the highest honors in American movies.

Allen's "Annie Hall" was among the five pictures nominated for best film of 1977, and he was nominated for writing it, directing it and starring in it.

Only Orson Welles, with "Citizen Kane" in 1941, was named in those three categories before. He did not win in any of the categories.

Diane Keaton, Allen's co-star in "Annie Hall," was nominated for best actress, along with Jane Fonda of "Julia," Shirley MacLaine and Anne Bancroft of "A Turning Point" and Marsha Mason of "Ths Goodbye Girl."

Besides them and "Annie Hall," the best-picture nominations went to the biggest money-maker of the year, "Star Wars," and to "The Goodbye Girl."

Committee okays farmers' tax cut

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP)—A bill estimated to give Kansas farmers a tax break of about $5 million a year was approved Tuesday by the Assessment and Taxation Committee of the Kansas House.

The bill now goes to the floor of the House for consideration of its entire membership.

The bill would exempt payment of the Kansas sales tax on the sale of used farm machinery and equipment and on repair parts and repair services for such machinery and equipment.

"We've done a lot of talking about helping the farmer but so far we haven't done anything," said Rep. James Braden (R-Wakefield) in urging favorable action on the legislation introduced by a bipartisan group of representatives.

The bill originally had proposed exempting the sales tax on the sale of new farm machinery and equipment. This would have run the cost to the state in lost revenue to an estimated $9.5 million.

But Rep. Dan Thiessen, (R-Independence) one of the sponsors, successfully offered an amendment that would leave the sales tax in force on sales of new machinery and equipment.

Another Thiessen amendment would provide that the exemption would terminate at the end of three years unless there was further legislative action.

Braden said he believes this amendment will make the bill more readily acceptable although he agreed with Rep. Homer Jarchow (D-Wichita) that the legislature can make a change any time it meets.

Opinions

Articles appearing on this page do not necessarily represent the entire Collegian staff or the Board of Student Publications.

Okay, don't vote

Ok, don't vote, let your next student body president be elected by a handful of campaign supporters, relatives and acquaintances.

It is traditional at this time of the year for the Collegian editorial staff to hit their knees and beg and plead with the students of K-State to get out and vote for the student body presidential candidate of their choice.

This year things will be different.

We are not going to beg, nor are we of a mind to plead.

We are merely going to suggest that the student body exercise its democratic right to vote, and hope that a good part of the thousands of students on this campus will think the situation over for themselves and make a decision.

WE ARE fortunate to have two candidates of a high caliber from which to choose our new president.

The Collegian, after vigorous and energetic debate among the staff, has decided not to endorse a candidate for the presidency at this late date in the campaign.

As was stated earlier in this campaign, we at the Collegian want the winning candidate to be chosen by the student body on the basis of the student's own judgment—unswayed by the possible influence of the editorial power of the Collegian.

And then there is the matter of pride.

FRIDAY'S University Daily Kansan reported a "record low voter turnout" in the student body senate and presidential elections held at KU last week.

It seems only 2,025 persons turned out to vote in the election, the lowest turnout since the KU Senate was formed in 1969.

Will K-State choose to mimic the performance of the voters in the school down the Kaw, or will it take advantage of this opportunity to show that we do, indeed, have some class?

Students can vote at the K-State Union and at Farrell Library.

You will need your K-State ID and your spring fee card.

Get out and vote. May the best candidate win.

Introducing: Deviant 'punk journalism'

Manhattan, Kansas is on the map.

No, Gerald Ford didn't fall down the steps of Anderson Hall (though almost everyone else has), but a new institution has been conceived in this very town.

Nipping at the heels of the punk rock, is a growing, dynamic movement called punk journalism.

A recent news story, which was never published, quotes the creator of punk journalism, Billy Putrid, as saying he felt the need for a new style of reporting which would be a healthy mix of information, personality and perversion.

"Deviation is where it is at for today's youth," Putrid said.

"Sex, crime and the general perversion of life have shown through the different mediums of communication and have finally rotted away the minds of today's youth and tomorrow's adults."

The use of foul language in stories and pictures of political candidates with safety-pins through their cheeks would make the press more interesting to the youth of today, Putrid said.

"What we are trying to do is to enhance the learning process for young people so they will want to read newspapers and learn what is going on in the world," he said.

PUTRID said he could achieve those goals by combining practices of good journalism with deviant acts and sexual perversions.

Deviant acts would include vomiting blood during press conferences, relieving oneself on the desks of sources and using unbecoming language in news and feature stories.

"In this way, not only would we have the cold hard facts of a story but the rare insight into what a national personality would do when faced with a sickening act," Putrid said.

Putrid, freshman in journalism and pre-natal anthropology, said he got the idea for the deviant medium by watching a punk-rock group distribute dismembered cocker spaniel puppies to punk groupies at a concert.

Putrid said though he was still alone in the punk journalism movement, it was gaining momentum and had gained the backing of several key journalism instructors here at K-State.

Putrid says he plans to take his new form of printed perversion to such infamous publications as Rolling Stoned Magazine and the National Requirer.

PUNK journalism can add a whole-new light to covering such hot topics as the Panama Canal treaties, presidential elections and Cher and Gregg, Putrid said.

Putrid said he saw the need for the new form of journalism to match the mood of contemporary politics.

"If politicians are going to defecate on reporters during interviews, reporters ought to be able to do the same," Putrid said.

When asked if Putrid thought he was carrying the perverse press movement a little too far, he replied:

"Too far? Nonsense! It is time the press responded to the utter obliteration of morals and ethics in contemporary affairs.

"Remember the first amendment, 'Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of perversion.'"

"Sure maybe some people will be a little repulsed by Dan Rather with a ring in his nose, but face it, this is the shape of the future of public affairs.

"Once they get use to it, they will love it," Putrid said.

Letters to the editor

Sit down and listen

Editor,

Those who attended former President Ford's lecture on Monday probably could not help noticing the rather discourteous individuals who thought it necessary to fight extremely cold weather, slippery sidewalks and blowing snow to attend the lecture, only to get up and leave during his presentation.

Besides the fact that there were many interested and loyal people who would have gladly occupied those seats so rudely vacated by those certain individuals, this type of action only displayed the type of unwarranted antics that people in every crowd feel impelled to flaunt.

I know I can speak for several people on this matter, and I think that Gerald Ford deserves more respect than that shown by the disrespectful few who abused this fine performance. I also felt that in front of what was almost the entire list of top officials in Kansas, this activity was most unfortunate, not only for Gerald Ford's impression of Kansas State's student body, but for the overall effect of the entire lecture.

In the future, I would sincerely hope that those individuals who take the time and trouble to attend any future lectures given by such distinguished men of our country as Gerald Ford will at least reward that speaker the junior high courtesy of remaining seated until the guest has finished his presentation.

Don't blame apathy on fee cards

Editor,

RE: Mark Owens' comment on voting policy in Friday's Collegian.

Obviously, Mr. Owens has never heard of ballot-stuffing, at least not on K-State campus.

The purpose of having any kind of identification is to keep someone from voting twice.

I do agree that two forms of identification may not be needed. If there was a place to punch a hole in your I.D. card for elections, I'm sure this would suffice.

But after buying football tickets, basketball tickets and voting several times a year for four years, my I.D. card would be "holey" enough to be a saint.

I'd rather get a new fee card each year than pay several dollars for a new I.D.

Complaining about having to carry a fee card along with your I.D. is about like complaining that several dollars in your pocket is too much to carry. Don't blame apathy on a fee card.

Beccy, get married

Dear kid,

I thought we made it clear. We are broke. Give up this journalism thing. There is no money in it. If you are so smart, why aren't you rich? Your father can't go on forever. He needs help. Why don't you marry a doctor or a priest? They make good money. Lance Sneddy just got into medical school. He's your age. Marry him.

I wish your Uncle Ned would stop dating that woman in Ellsworth. What he sees in that floozy, I'll never know. We are thankful, though. It's the first time in 10 years he's been sober.

What's all this talk about a religious experience? What do you mean you've been "born-again"? Wasn't once enough? Your father and I think you are going through a phase—substituting God for a man. It's all psychological. Once you are married you won't have those type of thoughts.

NOTHING new around the neighborhood. Oh, except when the electricity was off during the blizzard, 10 of Jone's milk cows suffered from bursted bags 'cause the milking machine wouldn't run. And Mrs. J. had an attack of the rheumatiz and her fingers froze in the clutch position.

Your younger brother has gotten into trouble, again. Sheriff Swade and his boys came by yesterday to search his room. What is cocaine? They didn't find him here. Have you seen him? Two days ago, he said he was leaving for Acapulco. I didn't know there was gold in Mexico.

By the way, what's all this mail we've been getting addressed to you from the Native American Indian Student Body at K-State? I opened your mail. It says you are a descendant of the American Indians. What does this mean? You'll never amount to a hill of beans. You come from poor white trash.

AUNT MARY died two weeks ago. We were going to tell you when she became ill, but she threatened to change her will. Little did we know she was leaving us a '54 DeSoto. I hope she is burning right now. God knows we were patient with her.

Your father went quail hunting the other day. He took one of your dogs, Groucho, the Brittany with him. They hunted all day and didn't find a thing. Finally, Groucho came down on point with a covey of 30 quail.

But he flushed them before your father could get there. Your father was so mad he shot Groucho. Enclosed are Groucho's tags. Dad wanted you to have them.

Father Ogalvie stopped by the house to chat. He asked how you were. We talked for a long time. He is going to come up to Manhattan next week to talk to you. Don't be rude to him, he's only trying to help. By the way, are you pregnant?

WE ARE really concerned about you. When are you going to get married? You can't stay married to a typewriter forever. Besides, with the type of articles you write, only the freaks will hire you.

A vacuum cleaner salesman was here today. A pushy sort of guy. We turned off all the lights in the house and sicced the dogs on him.

He took off down the dirt road—the one with Wild Horse Creek running through it. His car went right off the bridge. Arthur towed him out and charged 40 bucks. That bridge has been our livelihood ever since the cattle got shipping fever and died. Your father is out hosing down the slick areas now.

We got your package yesterday afternoon. We thought how nice it was for you to send something. Your laundry is all washed, dried and folded. Really, now—you have got to start having better personal hygiene.

Buckle down and get off of probation. Try and lose whatever you found. Come home soon, your father needs you.

Home pregnancy testing kit: Blessing or waste of money?

By CARLA SPEHART
Collegian Reporter

Pregnancy testing kits for home use have found space on the drugstore counter.

An "in-home" early pregnancy test (e.p.t.) has been produced by the Warner-Chilcott Company and is now available at local drugstores.

The e.p.t. test involves testing the urine for a special hormone, Human Chorionic Gonadotropin

The e.p.t. kit retails for about $10 at local drugstores. Lafene Student Health Center conducts a urine pregnancy test for $4. The six-week time span from a last menstrual period is also required, since both tests work in detecting the HCG hormone.

Inquiries at the Holtz Hall counseling center about the e.p.t. kits have been handled by Ivri Messinger, a pregnancy counselor. "I do not recommend the e.p.t.

"You have got to have someone who is not involved emotionally to do a pregnancy test," she said. "The woman herself could easily mess up. She should not face this alone."

SALLY (fictitious name) is a K-State coed who was faced with the dilemma of a suspected pregnancy. She had heard about the e.p.t. test and was giving it serious consideration.

"I figured it would be more discreet," Sally said. "I didn't want to go to the doctor because I wasn't sure of the questions I would be asked. Besides, I was scared of seeing someone I know and being embarrassed."

Sally tried to obtain the e.p.t. kit at a local drugstore, but it was not yet available. This was the reason she had a professional urine test taken.

"I hardly believed the doctor's test when it came up negative," Sally said. "I know I would've doubted myself more than a lab."

Sally said she would definitely seek professional pregnancy testing in the future instead of using the drugstore e.p.t. kit.

"When it is something that important," she said, "you would always imagine something could and probably would go wrong when doing it yourself."

'It could save some girl who may be contemplating suicide.'

(HCG), which a woman's body produces when she's pregnant.

The kit's directions advises waiting at least until the ninth day after missing a menstrual period before conducting the test.

A detailed description and procedure is outlined with the e.p.t. instructions. Limits of the test are given:

"Not reusable. Use once and discard. The e.p.t. works only if instructions are carried out properly."

THE ACCURACY of the e.p.t. test is also stated in the kit's enclosed directions. The first test is 97 percent accurate if a positive reading is obtained. It is 80 percent accurate if a negative reading is obtained. However, a repeat test one week later improves this accuracy to 91 percent.

Pat Dunne, a local pharmacist, said the kits haven't become too popular yet. He reported selling one within a three week span, to a girl who made it clear she was "purchasing it for a friend."

"Girls who are promiscuous and more afraid would be most likely to buy the kit," Dunne said.

He said he could see how girls away from home in a college town might benefit from this private test.

"It could save some girl who may be contemplating suicide," he said.

"We are dealing with more of an age group market, maybe 14 or 15, rather than a locality which would affect sales," Dunne said. "This is something that comes about as society becomes more sophisticated and advanced."

BOB RILEY, another local pharmacist, reported selling two e.p.t. kits in a couple of weeks.

"It is nice that they are available," he said. "but if you used the test and it came up positive—you would probably go to the doctor anyway and he would rerun the test."

Riley said he didn't believe Manhattan or a university town would provide a broader market for the e.p.t. kit.

"That would be like assuming more would be sold in Junction City because of prostitution," he said.

kit, or even mention it unless the woman does. I figure they are going to be wasting their money," Messinger said.

MESSINGER said she advises having a professional pregnancy test run the first time, because it is going to have to be done anyway.

"A clinic would not take the word of an at-home product," she said.

Messinger added that this is a factor in either a wanted pregnancy or in terms of seeking abortion measures.

A blood test to determine pregnancy is also available at Lafene for $12.50. This test can detect the same hormone in the blood faster.

"If a woman really wants to relieve her tension—this blood test would be the best method," Messinger said.

Candidates to fight apathy with open forums, surveys

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

Candidates for student body president in today's run-off election agree that apathy toward student government is a problem at K-State.

Candidates Cindy Thomas and Sam Brownback said student leaders could help fight apathy by reaching students through informal discussions and conversations about student problems and concerns.

"Students who are apathetic toward student government are the ones that we're evidently not meeting the needs they have, or they don't feel that they (Student Governing Association-SGA) are," Thomas said.

Student government may not be meeting the needs of graduate students, possibly because SGA isn't aware of the problems they face, she said.

"One thing that we can do would be to work harder on getting the graduate research assistant included in the Governor's budget," Thomas said.

THE STUDENT body president, SGA cabinet and student senators should get out and talk to living groups, organizations and have open forums where students can discuss their problems and concerns, Thomas said.

The open forum would be an informal situation that all students could attend and which would reach those not in living groups or organizations, she said.

"Opinion polls are important," Thomas said. "We used to do more of that than we have the past year or two."

The opinion poll, probably in the form of a telephone survey, would be used to get a random sample of student opinion on different issues, she said.

"There are a lot of ways to make a contact with students," Thomas said.

Cypriot president ready to reconcile with Sadat, Egypt

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — President Spyros Kyprianou blamed Egypt Tuesday for the shootout between Cypriot troops and Egyptian commandos at Larnaca airport but said he was ready to hold a reconciliation meeting with President Anwar Sadat.

"We are ready to do everything possible for the restoration of friendly relations between Cyprus and Egypt," Kyprianou told a news conference. "I hope there will be a favorable response from the Egyptian side."

Kyprianou said the Egyptian ambassador and military attache had been advised that two Arab gunmen holding 15 hostages aboard a commandeered Cyprus Airways DC-8 had agreed to release their captives and surrender Sunday night. Despite this and Egyptian assurances the commandos would not be employed, the armed assault was launched, he said.

"State forces had no alternative but to intervene and take action to save the hostages and to protect the sovereign rights of the Cypriot state," he said.

Kyprianou told reporters he had received no official word from Egypt on its decision to have Cypriot and Egyptian diplomats withdrawn from Cairo and Nicosia. He said judging from news reports, the action "does not mean the breaking off of relations."

The unilateral action was announced after a cabinet meeting in Cairo Monday night.

Brownback said apathy for student government may be more a matter of priorities because academics, a social life or finding a job would be higher priority items to most students than SGA.

"If students were to see their student government doing things for them in the lines of parking, in the lines of solving the Nichols Gymnasium problem, then I don't think that students would attack student government and term it worthless," Brownback said.

SGA SHOULD work on problems affecting all student and make visible what SGA is doing and let students know SGA is doing it, he said.

Communication between students and SGA would give student government more credibility and would let students know SGA is worthwhile, he said.

One way to combat student apathy would be to have a "Dialogue with SGA" every two weeks in the K-State Union where the student body president and others would answer questions about SGA and the total University picture, Brownback said.

"Students could ask question back and forth about what's going on," he said.

"It's bringing the University to the students. Informing students is one of the best ways to combat apathy," he said.

Episcopalian split won't affect local congregation

By BONNIE KIMPLE
Collegian Reporter

The split of the National Episcopal Church won't have much effect on the Episcopalian Church of Manhattan.

The split is a result of the national convention of the Episcopal Church in 1976, when delegates voted to ordain women into the priesthood. According to the Rev. David Fly of the Manhattan Episcopal Church, this is only one of the issues which caused the separation.

Another issue which caused the split was the revision of the Episcopal prayer book.

"A lot of people are just reacting to change," Fly said.

Some people are against the rewording of the prayer book, which is written in beautiful Elizabethan English, Fly said.

"In the current form, the wording is too short and choppy."

"I think the change is simply an attempt to bring liturgy (worship) into change with modern times—make it the language of the people," he said.

"The issues deal with major changes from past traditions," Fly said. The result is a group of conservative Episcopalians that have gone off to form what they understand to be a new branch of the Anglican Communion.

At a meeting in Denver, Colo., conservative church members tried to ordain new bishops. They set up three dioceses (jurisdictions within the church).

"Some think they will attract a large number of people but I think the majority of people in the Episcopal Church will not follow them," Fly said.

"They're attempting to keep tradition 'pure,' as if anyone could do that," he said.

These few dissidents are deciding what makes a "pure" church, Fly said.

"That's a little bit bold—to assume that one can pick and choose within the church tradition. To me it's folly and not reasonable."

FEW LOCAL church members have been attracted to the movement, Fly said.

"No one I know personally has been a part or joined it," he said. Basically the reform movement has been on the west coast around Los Angeles and around Denver.

Fly said he has no qualms about women being ordained as Episcopal priests.

"It's a perfectly logical move and one long over due," Fly said.

Traditionally priests in the church have been male. Therefore, church members believe since Christ was a male and chose 12 male disciples, all priests should be males.

"Jesus was talking in a certain place and in a certain time," Fly said. "Times are changing."

"It's not a sexual thing and shouldn't be. The priesthood is something greater than a sexual thing."

Series of micro-earthquakes goes unnoticed around Kansas

LAWRENCE (AP)—A series of seven small earthquakes has shaken parts of Kansas during the last several months, although they were probably too small to be felt by most people, according to researchers of the Kansas Geological Survey at the University of Kansas.

The earthquakes, all measuring less than three on the Richter scale, were so small that survey geologist Frank Wilson and seismologist Donald Steeples labeled them micro-earthquakes.

Three of the quakes originated near Norton and Decatur counties in northwest Kansas. Two of these came early in December and the third during the first week in February. All measured about 2.6 on the Richter scale.

Several more had their center in southern Kansas, one near Winfield, measuring about 1.8, and an even smaller quake close to Caldwell.

Perhaps the most important tremor, according to the researchers, occurred southeast of Seneca, about 5:30 a.m., Jan. 27. It measured about 2.3.

Single coal strike agreement unacceptable industry-wide

WASHINGTON (AP)—The nation's soft-coal industry said Tuesday that a tentative contract agreement between the striking United Mine Workers union and a major independent operator is unacceptable as an industry-wide settlement.

However, top officials of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association said they were ready for a prompt resumption of contract talks in the 78-day-old strike.

Meanwhile, President Carter won bipartisan congressional support to take strong steps to end the walkout, but the administration continued to play a waiting game in hopes the two parties would settle the dispute themselves.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said after meeting with the president that he felt it would be at least 25 days more before the coal strike could tie up the nation economically. The strike already has led to power curtailments and job layoffs in some areas.

KEY EXECUTIVES of the BCOA, the industry's bargaining arm, met for several hours to study a tentative contract agreement reached Monday by the union and the Pittsburgh & Midway Coal Mining Co., a major independent producer.

The industry's response came in a letter from BCOA President E.B. Leisenring to West Virginia Gov. Jay Rockefeller.

"So that no one is under any illusions, we plan to vigorously present our case to the union bargainers so that true collective bargaining in good faith can be accomplished in the interests of all concerned," Leisenring wrote.

"Free collective bargaining means just that: each party must be free to bargain in good faith without the threat of reprisals."

Leisenring also told Rockefeller that "certain collective bargaining matters which we negotiated in good faith ... were not dealt with adequately" in the P&M agreement.

Rockefeller and other coal state governors had urged the industry negotiators to go back to the bargaining table. Government and industry sources said several BCOA member companies were pressuring the group to consider the proposal as the basis for an industry-wide settlement.

"Obviously, everybody is going to take a look at it," said an industry source.

ALTHOUGH the P&M agreement still requires ratification by its 700 UMW employees, it gives an indication of what the union's bargaining council will accept.

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger said the administration was watching to see whether the P&M agreement would lead to productive talks between BCOA and the union. He said the administration will "wait it out a bit longer" before resorting to tougher actions.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell declined to issue a precise timetable for a decision. "This is the week in which a major decision is going to have to be made," he said.

Carter, meeting with Republican and Democratic congressional leaders at the White House, won support for "whatever he needs to do," according to Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee.

Closer ties with foreign students purpose of ASIA

A new organization on campus, designed to bring American students into contact with international students, will take active measures to increase membership through a membership drive.

American Students for International Awareness (ASIA) will begin the drive at 8:30 a.m. today in the K-State Union.

ASIA is the newest of many international groups currently recognized by the Union Governing Board at K-State, according to Ken Bowie, graduate student in Adult and Occupational Education and president of ASIA.

THE PURPOSE of this group and others, such as the Nigerian Student Association and the Arab Student Association, is to design programs to bring American students in contact with other international students at the University, Bowie said.

Active membership is limited to American students, faculty and staff, he said. The group constitution allows foreign students to become honorary members. This is common practice among all the international organizations, Bowie said.

The group, which received its charter on Feb. 10, has 25 members. It meets twice a month at the International Student Center. Meetings consist of programs and interaction with other international groups.

JOSEPH COUSINS, graduate assistant to the foreign student adviser, stressed the importance of international groups.

"I think that the majority of American students don't really attempt to get to know foreign students. They don't have the interest — or they're just busy in their own thing," he said.

"Foreign students, themselves, are here to study and maybe they don't have enough time to promote their culture or their country. Through groups like ASIA, we're hoping to get the international students on campus and the American students closer together," Cousins said.

'Cats deflate Lady Jayhawks for top regional tourney seed

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats showed the Kansas Lady Jayhawks that they are still the state's best in women's basketball last night as they defeated KU, 74-68, in Ahearn Field House to clinch the state conference title and a spot in the AIAW Region VI championships for the seventh straight year.

The 'Cats put the Lady 'Hawks, ranked 17th in the nation, away with a late first half surge and clutch final minute free throws.

With four minutes left in the first half and the 'Cats leading 30-28, K-State put on a surge that ultimately spelled the doom for the Lady 'Hawks as the 'Cats outscored Kansas 10-3 to build their lead to 40-31.

Although K-State led at one time by 11 points, KU cut the lead to 68-66 with 57 seconds left. From then on, it was a parade to the free throw line for K-State.

It's Marquette's turn for top dance

By The Associated Press

It seems some teams simply can't cope with success. Consider Kentucky and Arkansas. And how about Marquette, too?

A couple of weeks ago Kentucky sat atop the Associated Press major college basketball poll. Then the Wildcats got whupped by Louisiana State and tumbled from their lofty perch. It was taken over by Arkansas, but the Razorbacks lost their grip on the top spot after just one week as well.

Now it's Marquette's turn at the top of the rankings. The Warriors, defending national champions and owners of a 20-2 record this year (no team in the Top Twenty has fewer than two losses) received 40 of 55 first-place votes and 1,034 points in Monday's nationwide balloting of sports writers and broadcasters.

WILL the Warriors still be there next week at this time? Tune in Sunday to find out. That's when Marquette visits South Bend, Ind., for its next game, a nationally televised encounter with Notre Dame.

The Fighting Irish hold a whopping 54-22 edge over the Warriors in games played since the series began nearly 60 years ago. But that can be misleading. Marquette has won the last three meetings, including an 81-75 thriller two seasons ago, the last time the two teams played in South Bend, and 78-69 last year.

Kentucky's Wildcats, 20-2, received 11 first-place votes and 936 points for second place, up one notch from a week ago. UCLA also moved up one place to third. The Bruins, 20-2, received two first-place votes and 857 points.

Arkansas, 25-2, was defeated 84-75 by Houston and slid from first place to fourth with 695 points. New Mexico, 21-2, stayed fifth with 614 points and Kansas, 22-3, held sixth with 571 points.

DEPAUL got the remaining two first-place votes and with them the Blue Demons, 22-2, inched up one position to seventh with 547 points, followed by North Carolina, 22-5, with 361 points.

Notre Dame, 17-5, fell to South Carolina, then fell a couple of rungs to ninth with 300. Michigan State, 19-4, garnered 266 points to round out the Top Ten.

In the Second Ten are Providence, Florida State, Duke, Texas, Illinois State, Detroit, Syracuse, Georgetown, Minnesota and Louisville. Minnesota is the only newcomer in the Top 20, replacing Virginia.

GAYLA WILLIAMS hit both ends of a one and one with 53 seconds left to make the score 70-66.

"I just concentrated," Williams said of the pressure free throws. "I just knew I could hit them."

Eileen Feeney then erased any doubt of the outcome by hitting two

"On the inside we faked them," said Beth Boggs, who played one of the better games of her career. "She (Woodard) seemed to leave the ground pretty easy."

"They got to yelling at each other. That's when team's fall apart."

K-STATE outrebounded the Lady 'Hawks 40-33.

"We tried to keep the low people in our zone back," Akers said. "We had to deny her (Woodard) from getting the ball."

"We kept her from penetrating pretty well. We tried to get two people around her every time she got the ball."

"She forced too many shots," Feeney said, who finished the night with 14 points. "We were on her real well." Woodard hit only nine-of-29 shots in the game.

The 'Cats hit 44 percent of their shots from the field, compared to the 'Hawks who hit only 35 percent from the field and played well only in spurts.

The 'Cats had three other players who scored in double figures. Williams and Beth Boggs scored 13 points each and Kristi Short added 11.

Sports

free throws with 43 seconds left, making it 72-66.

As a team, the 'Cats were 20-of-24 from the free throw line, hitting 10 of their final 12 attempts in the last 2:10 of the game.

K-State head coach Judy Akers credited the 'Cats' bench, poise in the final minutes and free throws as the keys to K-State's victory.

But Akers said the secret to defeating the Lady 'Hawks was to "beat them on the boards".

Lynette Woodard, KU's 6-0 standout freshman, who scored 33 points and pulled in 33 rebounds against the 'Cats in their last meeting, was held to 20 points and nine rebounds.

Reintroduction of election revision measure predicted

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

Despite the defeat of a bill calling for the yearly election of Student Senate, some senators said they will try to bring the issue back for the new senate to consider.

The bill, which would change the current system of two elections per year to one per year, was defeated by a 29-10 vote of senate Feb. 16. The bill fell short of the 34 votes required for passage because a constitutional revision requires three-fourths majority approval to become law.

Brian Rasette, business senator and a sponsor of the bill, said a bill similar to the one that failed will be brought up before the new senate, but said he would like to wait and see the mood of senate before bringing it up again.

"If it looks like it won't pass, I'm not going to bring it up and contribute to the inefficiency of Senate by putting in a bill that won't pass," Rasette said.

RASSETTE said one reason the bill failed was because it was a constitutional revision and senators are afraid to make big changes.

"It failed, in my opinion, because people are afraid to make major changes," Rasette said.

Rasette said senators are looking for a perfect solution to the problem of inefficiency in senate, and although the bill isn't a perfect solution, the change would help.

"Senate expects one major solution to the problem of inefficiency, well, there isn't one solution," he said.

Lori Bergen, arts and sciences senator and a sponsor of the bill, said she would like to see the bill brought up before senate again. She said the interest in the change is in senate, but the votes were hard to get because a three-fourths majority is required.

"The way it was before, we had the support for the bill by votes, but it just needs to be brought up to a new senate to pass," Bergen said.

Bergen said a similar bill should be easier to pass through the new senate because most of the opposition to the bill consisted of senators leaving office.

Both Bergen and Rasette said any changes in the bill that failed would be minimal.

"I don't see where there is any major thing that needs to be changed about it," Bergen said.

"Any changes I would make would be in the wording, the content of the bill would stay the same," Rasette said.

Summer job facts available in Union

K-State students looking for summer employment might find some help through the Recreation Career Days scheduled to begin at 10:30 a.m. today in the Union Courtyard.

The career day, sponsored by the K-State Recreation Club and the outdoor recreation committee of the Union Program Council, will offer information to students in all majors who are interested in recreation work.

Representatives from 17 agencies are expected to participate, providing displays and exhibits dealing with all types of recreation.

K-Staters wanting to interview for recreation jobs can sign up in the Union Courtyard this morning.

Interviews will be conducted this afternoon from 2:00 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. in Union 205 and 206.

HOW DO YOU FIND WOLFE'S?

If you can find Topeka, you can find Wolfe's Camera Shop. Both are easy to find and well worth your time to drive over. Follow Interstate 70 to the Downtown 4th Street Exit. You will have to turn right on to 4th Street for a couple of blocks to Kansas Avenue. Turn left on Kansas Avenue. Wolfe's is right on the corner of 7th and Kansas Avenue. If you don't find any parking place available on the Avenue, there is a huge parking lot behind Wolfe's. Easy access is made from Jackson Avenue. (that is one block West of Kansas Avenue). And, we have a convenient 7th Street Entrance you can use. See the map on our logo.

WHY COME TO WOLFE'S?

Well, we think we are unique in camera shops. We have large wide aisles, with beautiful displays (and the girls aren't too bad either) and lots of merchandise. You won't have to face a forced decision between two or three cameras—we have a bunch. Even more important, we have the trained sales help to show you how to determine the best camera for you. And, Wolfe's has discount prices: you don't need to show an I.D. or say you're a professional. Wolfe's has discount prices for everyone.

WHAT KINDS OF EQUIPMENT?

Wolfe's stocks most major brand names of cameras and lenses—and they are instock. You can also find everything from Swiss Army knives to an 8 inch telescope. Wolfe's offers an extensive array of professional and amateur lighting equipment and an assortment of gadgets, bags to put your gadgets in, and miscellaneous gear that you can't live without. And, if you are needing darkroom supplies, look no further. Wolfe's has a great selection of Kodak, Ilford, Acufine, and more. Hurry over today.

WHEN SHOULD YOU COME TO WOLFE'S?

Well, Wolfe's is open Tuesday thru Saturday from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. And, on Monday we are open from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. But, if you can't make it over, we are always as close as your phone. Give us a call today, and your order should arrive within 24 to 48 hours later by UPS. So, call or come over today. (Call 235-1386)

WHERE IS WOLFE'S?

We are conveniently located on the corner of 7th and Kansas Avenue in Downtown Topeka. And we have two convenient store entrances. Our main entrance is in front of the store on Kansas Avenue. Our other entrance is on 7th street. That way you can use the nice big parking lot behind our store on Jackson Avenue. Either way, drive over, park your car, and come on in. 635 Kansas Avenue, Topeka, Kansas.

Thieves pilfer Farrell library items from top of desks, shelves, offices

By PHILLIS GROTH
Collegian Reporter

A hanging plant is missing from its corner of Farrell Library's first floor browsing room.

The plant wasn't borrowed or taken down by a member of the library staff, it was stolen, said Virginia Quiring, one of the library's assistant directors.

"On Friday, I discovered that somebody had lifted the whole bit. All they left was the hook in the ceiling," she said.

Besides plants, other library items are appropriated by patrons. Quiring said. Staplers and small desktop items are most likely to be stolen.

"Someone even took a desk clock from my office," Quiring said.

QUIRING said she feels that students need to be more aware of both the cost of acquiring and of maintaining fixtures and furnishings in the library. She emphasized that the majority of students are considerate of library property. But a few students create extra work and expense for the library staff, she said.

Besides disappearing greenery, according to Quiring, lobby furniture is taking considerable wear.

"Students just put their wet, muddy shoes on those benches. They're getting so soiled that I don't think we can get them cleaned," Quiring said.

Quiring said she was especially concerned with the appearance of the library lobby since it was the first glimpse of the building visitors would see. She said that as such, it was important for the entire University's image.

Besides the lobby, the basement vending machine area is a problem, Quiring said.

"The basement area is very untidy. Students leave food, cups and papers on the tables," Quiring said.

ALTHOUGH the area is supervised by the K-State Union, Quiring said, it is difficult to obtain enough janitorial help. Students dislike that type of work, she said, so the Union and the Library find the extra cleanup a problem.

These concerns are in addition to the library's annual loss of books and journals.

Each year, Quiring said, out of about 13,000 periodicals to which the library subscribes, about 800 issues turn up missing or damaged. At a replacement cost of $12 per issue, this loss totals $9,600 per year, Quiring said.

Annual book loss averages one-half of one percent of the library's total volumes, or 4,000 books per year. At a per-volume cost of $15, replacement cost runs $60,000 annually, Quiring said.

But the problem, Quiring said, isn't just a matter of dollar loss.

"It is the principle of the thing," she said.

UGB opens the Catskellar for students' weekend use

By JUDY WELTSCH
Collegian Reporter

The Union Governing Board (UGB) decided to keep the Catskellar open on Saturdays and Sundays at its regular bi-weekly meeting Tuesday night.

The Catskellar will be open on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sundays from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. provided no program is scheduled for the room.

K-State Union Director Walt Smith added the board would try to keep the room open on Sundays even if a program had been scheduled.

In other business, Smith reported the mail-order ticket sales for the March 3 "America" concert have been successful and have raised $39,000 so far.

"The mail-order sales for the concert, 'America', were better than we had anticipated. We've sold over 6,000 tickets," he said.

UGB also discussed the Union's policy for room rental and costs for keeping the Union open after hours.

"Maybe those people who request the Union after hours can pay for the operating costs—this still won't pay for the utilities," Smith said.

The proposed change would increase the fee from $5 to $10 per hour for room usage after 10:30 p.m. The board will vote on the policy at its March 7 meeting.

UGB also heard from Lonnie Barnes, senior in pre-dentistry and president of the Black Greek Council, who spoke to the board on minorities on campus and their use of the Union.

Panamanian press attacks drug trafficking investigation

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Panama's government-controlled press has attacked a U.S. Senate inquiry into reports of drug trafficking by the Panamanian ruling family, and one columnist said the investigation is as reasonable as would be a probe of admitted marijuana use by President Carter's son Jack.

Meanwhile, in New York, a U.S. district judge unsealed a three-count federal indictment against Moises Torrijos Hernandez, brother of Gen. Omar Torrijos, Panamanian chief of government.

The indictment, accusing Hernandez of smuggling heroin into the United States in 1971, was unsealed by Judge Jack Weinstein.

THE SPATE of newspaper criticism is directed against an inquiry spurred by Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) a vocal opponent of the new treaties that would turn the canal over to Panama by the year 2000.

Opponents of the proposed Panama Canal treaties raised the drug questions in hopes the information would torpedo ratification efforts. But pro-treaty senators, who contend the charges are only a "peripheral" issue to the treaties, predicted the effort would fail.

Some of the material being discussed in the Senate's 18th secret session of the last 15 years had already been leaked to news media, and Dole, at whose request the closed-door meeting was called, said he wants it all made public.

However, the committee found "no conclusive evidence" that Torrijos himself was involved in any drug trafficking, although it said he was aware of such activities. The committee said it found reports linking Torrijos to the drug market were "largely secondhand and of varying reliability."

THE PANAMANIAN newspaper Critica said accusations against the Torrijos family were "uncouth and stupid."

"No member of this decent family could be involved in a crime of this nature...They have built a reputation of honor in Panamanian society," the paper said.

The daily La Republica said in an editorial that U.S. senators have assumed "the function of inquisitors in the case of Panama, functions that offend the dignity of our nation."

Senators slipping out for lunch or to their offices would not furnish details, but indicated there had been no bombshell revelations in the closed-door proceedings.

Assistant Majority Leader Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) a strong treaty supporter, said he had heard "nothing damaging." He estimated that the private session would last the rest of the day, however.

SEN. CHARLES PERCY (R-Ill.), who also is pro-treaty, called the opponents' effort "a desperation move" and said nothing had been revealed that, in his judgment, would change votes or sway the approximately 15 senators who are still undecided on the treaties.

Meanwhile, President Carter said resistance to the accord "is still very formidable but decreasing."

State Senate eyes bill opposing canal treaty

TOPEKA (AP)—A resolution calling on the U.S. Senate to reject the proposed Panama Canal treaties unless Panama can guarantee its protection and free U.S. access was endorsed Tuesday by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on a 6-5 party-line vote.

Sen. Edward Reilly Jr. (R-Leavenworth) cast the tie-breaking vote for the resolution after the five Republicans and five Democrats on the panel split 5-5 for and against it. Reilly said he thinks the proposal deserves Senate floor debate.

The committee also recommended for passage three other resolutions, which would:

—Establish Oct. 14 each year as "Dwight Eisenhower Day" in Kansas in observance of the birthday of the former president who is buried in Abilene.

—Ask Congress to either submit an amendment to the U.S. Constitution which would, if ratified by three-fourths of the states within five years, require the federal government to balance its budget, or in the alternative called a federal constitutional convention limited to the single issue of putting into the Constitution the budget-balancing requirement.

—Urge Congress to submit to the states a proposed constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget. Its sponsor, Sen. Joe Warren (D-Maple City) said he wouldn't put a time limit on it, "I just hoped they'd do it sometime."

SEN. JOHN CROFOOT (R-Cedar Point) one of the sponsors of the Panama Canal resolution, said he doesn't think the United States ought to "give it away because somebody is bullying us," and said former heads of the joint chiefs of staff have pointed out the security threat turning greater control of the canal over to Panama presents.

He cited articles which imply the treaties were initiated by communists, an allegation ridiculed by some committee members.

Sen. Tom Rehorn (D-Kansas City) said there is good evidence the U.S. would suffer great diplomatic harm in Latin America if it didn't ratify the treaties, and a real threat of an uprising is present in Panama.

"How many troops do you think it will take to defend the canal when this happens?" Rehorn asked. Crofoot said he thought that was a hypothetical question because the U.S. has never had to defend the canal and nobody knows.

"You're going to get some bad press, and you're going to have some people upset in Panama," Crofoot said.

JUDGE WILLIAM H. HASTIE was born in Knoxville, Tennessee, November 17, 1904, the son of William Henry Hastie and Roberta Child Hastie.

He graduated from Dunbar High School, Washington, D.C. in 1921 and subsequently earned the following degrees: A.B. Amherst College, 1925; LL.B. Harvard University 1930; S.J.D. Harvard University 1933.

Judge Hastie has received honorary degrees of Doctor of Law from the following colleges and universities: Hampton Institute 1946; Virginia State College 1947; Lincoln University 1950; Ohio Wesleyan University 1951; Knoxville College 1952; Rutgers University 1953; Howard University 1955; Morgan State College 1956; Yale University 1957; Central State College 1959; Amherst College 1960; Temple University 1961; University of Pennsylvania 1961; Atlanta University 1964; Allegheny College 1965; University of the State of New York 1970; Brown University 1971; University of California at Berkeley 1971; College of The Holy Cross 1973; and Harvard University 1975. Judge Hastie has also received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters from the Dropsie College 1965 and Bates College 1966; and a Doctor of Civil Law from Widener College 1975.

Judge Hastie was the recipient of The Philadelphia Award for 1974.

From 1925-1927, Judge Hastie taught at Manual Training School, Bordentown, New Jersey. He was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia in 1931. There he began the active practice of law with the firm of Houston & Houston of Washington, D.C.

Judge Hastie has held the following positions: member of faculty, Howard University School of Law, 1930-1937; assistant solicitor United States Department of Interior, 1933-1937; judge of the District Court of the Virgin Islands, 1937-1939; dean Howard University School of Law, 1939-1946; civilian aide to Secretary of War, 1940-1942; Governor of Virgin Islands, 1946-1949; member, Caribbean Commission, 1947-1950; United States Circuit Judge 1949-1968; Chief Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit 1968-1971.

At the time of his sudden death on April 14, 1976, he was serving as a Senior United States Circuit Judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. He was formerly a member and Chairman of the President's Commission White House Fellows.

Judge Hastie was a Fellow, American Academy of Arts and Sciences; a member of the American Philosophical Society and of the Phi Beta Kappa and Omega Psi Phi fraternities.

Judge Hastie had two children, Mrs. Wesley Samuel Williams, Jr., (Karen Roberta) and William Henry Hastie, Jr., and one grandchild, Amanda Pedersen Williams. A grandson Wesley Hastie Williams was born on April 23, 1976.

REP. BARBARA C. JORDAN is the brilliant Texan who dazzled the nation during the Watergate Judiciary Committee hearings and as a keynote speaker for the 1976 Democratic National Convention. Early on, rumors spread that she would be appointed U.S. Attorney General and, indeed, she told President Carter that was the only position she would consider. Within 24 hours after she was turned down, the politician who had seemed above criticism was being criticized by both colleagues and the press. Her alleged poor relationship with the Congressional Black Caucus, her unpopular alliance with Texas oil interests, and charges of her political opportunism were openly discussed.

Nevertheless, to Blacks in general, Rep. Jordan is a skilled, knowledgeable legislator who gets things done with a minimum of empty rhetoric and ostentatious posturing. She is a hard-working member of the House Committee on the Judiciary, the House Committee on Government Operations, and the Steering and Policy Committee of the House Democratic Caucus. Her major legislative achievements enacted into law have been 1) amendments to the Voting Rights Act which expanded its coverage and provided for the printing of bilingual ballots; 2) repeal of federal authorization for state "fair trade" laws which sanctioned vertical price fixing schemes, and 3) detailed mandatory civil rights enforcement procedures for the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration and the Office of Revenue Sharing.

Because she is intensely conscientious about her legislative work on Capitol Hill, Rep. Jordan limits her speaking engagements around the nation. She asks: "What am I in the House of Representatives to do? To scurry around the country and make speeches or to try to thoughtfully study the legislation which appears before and vote the interests of my constituency and the national interests at the same time? In order to do that, I have to be on the job."

143 votes separated candidates

Close vote puts Brownback on top

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

Sam Brownback was elected K-State student body president over contender Cindy Thomas by a narrow margin of 143 votes in Wednesday's run-off election.

Out of a total of 3,031 votes cast for student body president, Brownback received 1,587 votes while Thomas received 1,444.

Winning by a slim margin of 4.8 percent of total votes cast,

(SGA) provides for the student body president to take office the third meeting after the new senate is seated.

BROWNBACK said he was happy the election was over and that he won.

"It was a long, hard-fought battle against an excellent candidate, and I'm happy it's over with," Brownback said.

"I think there were a lot of surprised people on campus that didn't think we could do it, but we're on top," he said.

Brownback said his number one priority as student body president will be implementing a proposal to start research on the construction of a new fieldhouse at K-State.

During the campaign and after the defeat of a fieldhouse referendum calling for an increase in student fees to help finance a new fieldhouse, Brownback proposed holding meetings with representatives of groups interested in funding a new fieldhouse.

BROWNBACK said he also planned to work on a proposal to create a student lobbying effort on the part of K-State to be supported by students interested in contacting their state legislators.

Brownback attributed the success of his campaign to the students who worked on his campaign and supported his candidacy in residence halls, greek houses and throughout the campus community.

"It wasn't just a group running things on top but the people that supported me," he said. "I just can't praise the people who worked for me enough."

Brownback also praised his presidential contender Thomas as an excellent person and a great candidate.

Thomas said she will support Brownback as student body president and wishes him the best of luck.

"I hope all K-State students will be supportive of him and give him their input," Thomas said.

Voter turnout in Wednesday's election was heavier than election officials had anticipated, according to Lisa Zahn, elections committee chairman.

Only 2,348 votes were cast in last year's run-off election for student body president, 683 votes less than the 3,031 votes cast in Wednesday's run-off election.

Holiwell contradicts prior testimony at rape trial

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

A witness for the state, Jerome Holiwell, contradicted and failed to recall parts of his prior testimonies under cross examination Wednesday in the Riley County District Court trial of three K-Staters accused of raping a coed at Edwards Hall last March.

The defendants on trial for the rape are Michael Woodfin, Topeka, Nate Jones, Chicago, and Ken Lovely, Dallas.

Kirk Boykin, Houston, also charged in connection with the incident, pleaded guilty Tuesday to a charge of conspiracy to commit rape.

Holiwell, 20, contradicted testimonies taken by police on April 14 and April 27 (the day he was arrested) and those he gave during preliminary hearings on June 1 and Sept. 26.

ACCORDING to the testimonies, on April 14 Holiwell didn't admit to raping the victim. On April 27 he said he went to Aggieville to buy hot dogs, prepared and ate them in Woodfin's room during the time the rape occurred.

Holiwell implicated all three defendants and Boykin at their preliminary hearing on Sept. 26.

Wednesday, he said Boykin didn't participate in the rape, only held the victim down.

Also, he changed the order of the men who allegedly had intercourse with the woman.

Holiwell also failed to recall the date he was offered immunity by the county attorney's office. When asked by defense attorney Charles Scott, Holiwell murmured: "I don't remember."

Holiwell recalled so little about when immunity was offered that District Court Judge Ronald Innes called the two lawyers to the bench, then recessed the case for the day.

HOLIWELL WAS originally charged with the rape, but was granted immunity in return for testimony against the present defendants.

The victim of the incident answered questions from both the prosecuting and defense attorneys for almost two and one-half hours Wednesday.

She recounted the events of March 29 and 30 but parts of her testimony were contradicted by Holiwell, who took the stand later in the day.

Derby complex residents 'rough it'; pipe break cuts off heat, hot water

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Residents of Moore, Ford and Haymaker Halls were without silverware and hot water for several hours Wednesday after a hot-water pipe in Derby Food Center broke early Wednesday cutting off heat and hot water to the four buildings.

According to Lloyd Davenport, physical plant supervisor, the water line broke between midnight and 3 a.m. He said the copper-lined pipe broke at a welded joint and that there has been trouble with the older pipes with welded joints.

"We lost a three-inch water line. It burst and started filling up the mechanical room (in Derby)," Davenport said. "The water got into the pumps and we couldn't pump the water out of the room."

THE MOTORS that heat the buildings got wet, Davenport said. The Physical Plant has found a replacement motor and another one is being sent from Topeka. He said with two motors the buildings can be heated.

Davenport said damage to the power panel wasn't as bad as he expected. There is a short in the power panel which has caused the break down of elevators in Derby Food Center, but the short can't be found until the power panel dries.

"We don't know how many motors are burned out yet," Davenport said. "We could be fortunate and not have many burned out but we won't know until they dry out."

Estimates on damages won't be made until the machinery dries, but Davenport said if the motors work then the expense will be $3,000 or $4,000. If some of the motors don't work, the cost could be several thousand dollars.

Davenport said some water seeped into the corridor of Derby and got some carpeting wet, but no serious damage resulted outside of the mechanical room.

Arla Block, production dietician at Derby Food Center, said the main problem at Derby is the break down of the elevators due to the electrical power short in the power panel.

Anderson Hall gets facelift with $2.25 million price tag

By MICHELE COCHRAN
Collegian Reporter

The cost of renovating Anderson Hall, scheduled for completion in late 1981, is expected to total almost $2.25 million.

"There are a number of changes taking place," said Paul Young, vice president for University Facilities.

"In the first place, the president is rearranging offices in the suite of offices that he has. This is to get the kind of proximity to the president's own office that helps him most in carrying out his responsibilities," Young said.

The construction now taking place will primarily affect the president and his immediate staff, he said.

Acker's office will be moved to the southeast corner of Anderson. There will be a connecting hall to provide easier access to all offices in that suite.

THE CONSTRUCTION being done now, is financed with $20,000 made available by the administration, while the Physical Plant is absorbing the labor costs, Young said.

"Two years from now when the general classroom building is finished, the Department of Psychology will be moved out of the second and third floors (of Anderson)," Young said.

State witness in rape trial unsure of immunity offer

She said she drove around town on the evening of March 29 in her car with Holiwell, Woodfin and Jones. According to her, the others drank two bottles of wine and smoked at least four marijuana cigarettes but she only sampled the wine and "had only one puff" of the marijuana.

Holiwell, however, said undercross examination by Scott, that everyone, including the victim drank wine and smoked marijuana.

"Everybody was smoking and drinking," Holiwell said.

"Everybody was getting high including (the woman)," Scott asked?

"Right," Holiwell replied.

WHEN THE four returned to the athletic dormitory the woman fell asleep in Holiwell's room but was awakened by the alleged assailants entering the room.

She said she couldn't identify any of those in the room because the lights went out when they entered.

She did say they were black males because of the "color of their skin in comparison to mine and the texture of their hair."

The men entered the room and held her down, she said. She started screaming and fighting but her screams were smothered under the hand of one of the men holding her.

She said she was raped by all the men in the room. She estimated four or five men were present at the time of the incident.

Holiwell said four of the five men in the room had intercourse with the women: Jones, Woodfin, Lovely and himself, but Boykin only held her down and undressed her.

County Attorney Dennis Sauter summoned the nurse and medical technician who were at Lafene Student Health Center on the night of the incident to testify about the victim's examination.

The results, according to their testimonies, showed that she had had intercourse about four hours before the examination.

"At that time, we want to do a major renovation of the building," he said. "Eventually, the whole building will be administration."

The renovation will include: Structural renovation, $500,000; Retrofit of mechanical system to provide heating, cooling and ventilating, $500,000; Replacing electrical system, $100,000; Replace plumbing, $100,000; Remodeling, $500,000; Elevators, $250,000; Insulation, $100,000; Window replacement, $105,000; Restoration of interior, $300,000; Total, $2,245,000.

The request for funds to pay for the project will be presented to the Board of Regents in June 1978 and, if approved, would go before the legislature in January 1979.

THE FIRST year, $147,000 will be requested for planning and the second year, $2,098,000 will be requested to complete the renovation, Young said.

These funds will be on the priority list for capital improvements, he said.

"We will also be asking for $1.9 million for Fairchild and $1 million for Holton at the same time," Young said.

"Something like this (the request) is entirely up to the legislature," he said. "If the request is not approved it will be presented to the legislature the following year."

The legislature would rather upgrade present buildings than build new ones because renovation is less expensive, Young said.

"I personally favor, wherever possible, the renovation of old buildings," said Glee Smith, a Board of Regents member. "If possible, it is always a good idea."

IF THE request is on the K-State list and if presented well, then it stands a good chance of passing, Smith said.

"It depends on where it stands in order of priorities," he said.

The main reason for renovating Anderson, Fairchild and Holton is to decrease the dislocation of staff.

"In the long run, we will try to accomplish several things. We will try to meet the fire code, the code for the handicapped, make the spaces more useable and conserve energy," Young said.

In the fall of 1976, a measure was done of the total space needed by the University. The figure totaled 900,000 square feet, Young said.

K-State now has 121,196 square feet of classroom space, he said. K-State should have 180,000 to 200,000 square feet.

The University is 50 percent short of classroom space, he said.

PART OF this shortage will be eliminated with the completion of the general classroom building in spring of 1980, the Plant Science building in the spring of 1981, and the addition to Durland Hall with its earliest possible completion date in 1982, Young said.

There hasn't been any authorization from the legislature yet on the engineering addition, he said. With the completion of the engineering building, K-State will still lack 300,000 square feet of total space, he said.

"We have had a shortage of classroom space, there's no question about it," Young said. "We also have a shortage of office space."

"We don't have classroom space to convert into office space and we don't have office space to convert into classroom space."

"I'm not sure where I'd go to look for classroom space," Young said.

Laetrile bill passes Senate

TOPEKA—The Kansas Senate gave its final approval Wednesday to a bill which would legalize the manufacture, sale and use of Laetrile in the treatment of cancer in Kansas.

On a vote of 30-7, the Senate sent the bill to the House. If it wins approval there, it would go to Gov. Robert Bennett, who has indicated in the past he is not necessarily opposed to legalizing the substance in this state.

Sen. Tom Rehorn, (D-Kansas City), took strong exception to the Laetrile bill and asked to explain his vote against the measure.

Rehorn said Laetrile may be "a panacea for one of the greatest diseases in history," but said it is strange the Legislature isn't willing to wait for medical science to make that decision. He accused some of his colleagues of being "sold" a bill of goods by Laetrile supporters on the basis of "a filmstrip shown to legislators in a motel room."

Coal strikers refuse offer

WASHINGTON—The United Mine Workers rejected an industry call Wednesday for arbitration to end their 79-day coal strike and made it clear the union would accept nothing less than a deal made earlier with an independent coal company.

As Labor Secretary Ray Marshall resumed intensive efforts at negotiating a settlement of the economically damaging strike, the union bargaining council voted 25-13 to set a tentative agreement with the Pittsburg & Midway Coal Mining Co. as its "bottom line" for an industry-wide agreement, said union sources.

In announcing the resumption of intensive negotiations, Marshall declared "There are grounds for a settlement now.... Whether that's enough to reach a settlement remains to be seen."

FBI captures gunman

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio—A bank robbery suspect was captured on a rural road after an abortive bank robbery and his hostage of more than 24 hours was freed late Wednesday night, authorities said.

He had traded two young hostages for a getaway car Wednesday, but he kept their father captive as he fled 57 miles eastward before authorities stopped him again.

The gunman, who had sworn he would not be captured alive, was brought to a halt on a street in an industrial area here about an hour after authorities allowed him to leave a highway near the Ohio-Indiana line where he had been trapped since Tuesday evening.

FBI agents and police persuaded the man, identified only as Don, to surrender and release his remaining hostage, postal worker Robert Hermann of West Manchester, Ohio.

Sadat answers for attack

CAIRO, Egypt—President Anwar Sadat said Wednesday it was he who ordered Egyptian commandos to Larnaca airport on the ill-fated rescue mission that resulted in bloody fighting with Cypriot forces. In an emotional speech to his troops, Sadat also withdrew recognition of Cyprus President Spyros Kyprianou, calling him a "dwarf."

Sadat said the decision to use force Sunday night to capture the two terrorists who killed Egyptian newspaper editor Youssef el Sebaei and held 11 Arab diplomats and four crew-members aboard a Cyprus Airways DC-8 was his own and not the personal initiative of Brig. Nabil Shukry, leader of the commandos.

Bottles and cans reused in SB 147

An important bill may die in the Kansas Senate today.

The bill, SB 147, would attach a deposit of at least five cents to all beverage containers (glass, plastic and metal) in order to encourage their return for reuse.

This bill would be a valuable weapon in the over-all attack on litter in this state.

Equally important, the bill would be a key to conserving nonrenewable resources that are poured into the production of beverage containers. Bills of this type have been passed in Oregon and other states and have been reported to be effective.

IT IS only logical—even if there are people in this state who would still insist on throwing these containers out on the highways and countryside, there would be plenty of kids and civic groups eager to pick them up as soon as they hit the ground to raise funds for their causes.

A similar bottle bill drifted into semi-dead limbo in House committee last week because of concern for can and bottle producers and retail outlets—and if SB 147 isn't out of Senate committee by today, it will also die.

Our legislators should take into account the responsibilities of the people who are selling these containers in the first place. Why shouldn't they help recycle the products of their own creation?

It's not as if they are going to suffer financially. As businessmen, they will promptly find a way to turn a profit at this new enterprise.

Kansas needs SB 147. It should be passed.

Tired voters, handsome frogs

A lot, I mean a lot, has been said about student and voter apathy over the past several years. Everyone has their own theories and opinions on why students all over the country don't bother to use the right to vote.

I've heard every excuse possible. Rain, snow and even sunshine have been blamed. I've heard the "I was sick that day" excuse, the "student government may not be meeting the needs of graduate students," the "off campus students don't have a ballot box close by" and the "student government may be last of a long line of student priorities" with Aggieville being the first reason.

But they only beat around the real reason.

FIRST THE student government isn't fulfilling the needs of the majority of students.

Take, for example, the referendum last week. It's true that the majority of students who voted favored the idea of students showing support for the new fieldhouse by paying for part of it, but less than a third of the student population voted. However, since less than a third voted, it's obvious the majority of students didn't like the idea.

If they did they would have voted.

So why then did the two candidates in the run-off election say they still planned to push the proposal through senate. They surely didn't have the students in mind. No wonder a small percent votes—those that do are only wasting their time.

HOPEFULLY, the new president will reconsider or future voters will get turned off. Instead of pushing the idea through, a good president would be looking for other ideas.

First get some commitments from alumni and have some plans written down. Then answer questions like, how many seats will the fieldhouse hold, how many of these will be for the students who helped pay for the area, where will the building be built, who will pay for the cost of operation (Terry Matlack seemed to think it'd be the athletic department, but I'd like to hear it from the athletic director) and how much control over operations will the students have? Answer these questions, then ask the students to support a new fieldhouse.

A SECOND THEORY of low voter turnout is called voter exhaustion. Students are being asked to vote on everything from Queen to the Most Handsome Frog.

There's no excuse for holding the presidential election twice.

Anytime more than two candidates run there will be a run-off election. We had one last year, this year and will probably have one next year. It's not that students don't like to vote, they just don't want to vote every other day.

Students really do care.

The growing number of letters to the Collegian editor prove it—but too many times student input has ended with administrative apathy.

Take parking, for example.

It's been over a year and still nothing but talk has been done.

Students need a chance to voice their opinions and they need to see results, not just a friendly ear.

Letters to the editor

Female teams show athletic talent but campus support is lacking

Editor,

This letter is in reference to the Collegian's Jan. 27 article, "IAC, women set for battle."

It is unfortunate that the issue of equal opportunity for K-State's women's athletics has been reduced to the level of a battle.

Generally, I found the article replete with innuendos of sexism, e.g., "to move women's basketball and volleyball up to I-A status would be giving it to them and would seriously undermine the entire foundation for athletics at K-State..." etc. Furthermore, the implications are that women's athletics will never become self-supporting due to their inability to attract large crowds.

Traditionally, women's athletics have been viewed as being an intramural sport as opposed to a competitive sport. Unless women's sports are supported at the level of those sports in Level I-A, they will continue to draw small crowds.

THE WOMEN'S basketball and volleyball teams have already achieved national recognition. Last year they qualified for national tournaments. They have more than adequately demonstrated their competitive ability. Perhaps what is needed is more participatory support from the University community.

Since the Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC) Title IX Compliance Plan was first adopted on Oct. 1, 1976, it appears that it is too soon to categorically state the University has met its obligations to women's athletics. We simply don't know yet. The existing level structure has not been reviewed to determine if it provides comparable opportunities for women's sports.

In light of Title IX, I think a continued effort should be made to insure that equal opportunity does exist for women's athletics within the University's intercollegiate athletic program.

Senate stops move by treaty opponents; results of drug inquiry clear Torrijos

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate conducted its first vote on the Panama Canal treaties Wednesday, rejecting a parliamentary move by treaty foes aimed at torpedoing the twin pacts.

The Senate rejected by a 67-30 vote an effort by treaty opponents to first take up the pact that would turn over control of the canal to Panama instead of taking up the neutrality treaty first, as Senate leaders wanted.

Had this move passed, it would have meant that the Senate would have had to decide whether to turn over the canal to Panama before passing the treaty which guarantees the canal's neutrality, gives U.S. ships priority access and guarantees U.S. rights to defend the waterway.

ALTHOUGH most of those voting no are expected to oppose the treaties, the 67-30 result was only a procedural question and did not provide a clear test of strength on the treaties themselves.

It followed a 14-hour closed-door debate on the alleged Panamanian drug connection Wednesday which ended with a declaration by Majority Leader

Robert Byrd that the charges should be "put to rest."

Sen. James Allen (D-Ala.), a leading treaty foe, sought to have the Senate reverse the order, but the vote came on a motion by Byrd to table that proposal.

Senators on both sides expressed strong doubts that the secret session changed any minds on the Panama Canal treaties, but anti-treaty spokesmen vowed to keep the issue alive.

IMMEDIATELY following the end of the secret session, the Senate resumed general debate on the treaties.

After doors to the chamber galleries were reopened, Byrd declared that the results of an inquiry by the intelligence committee had produced findings that were "negative on all counts."

He said the "exhaustive investigation" showed "no evidence that would stand up in any U.S. court of law linking Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos to illegal narcotics operations, or that the issue had affected the treaty negotiations or their outcome."

Senators sworn in tonight; Brownback's ceremony later

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

The new K-State Student Senate will be sworn into office during tonight's senate meeting at 7 in the Union Big 8 Room.

The old senate will finish any business on the agenda and then adjourn to allow the new senate members to be sworn in and consider a new agenda.

The old senate will consider a bill requiring all senators, except graduate and veterinary medicine senators, to serve on senate standing committees.

CINDY THOMAS, senate chairman and a sponsor of the bill, said senators should have more responsibilities than just being required to attend senate meetings.

"Most senate work should be done in committees," Thomas said.

Although the bill will have impeachment provisions for senators failing to attend meetings, Thomas said she didn't know if any senators would be impeached as a result of absence from meetings.

Skip Boyd, senate vice-chairman and a sponsor of the bill, said senators have a responsibility to their constituency to attend the committee meetings because the work of senate is done in the standing committees.

"In the past our work has been done in committees, not by a single individual," Boyd said.

Boyd said senators have been missing standing committee meetings for a long time.

"They more or less have a more obligation (to attend)," he said.

A REVISION of the Student Governing Association (SGA) by-laws, the bill requires a two-thirds vote of senate to pass and must be approved by the college councils.

The new senate will hear the first reading of a bill approving 1978 summer school final allocations of $36,000 proposed by the Summer Session Allocations Board.

The new senate will also hear the first reading of a resolution calling for a student petition to be sent to the NBC and TVS television networks thanking them for their past and future coverage of K-State basketball.

Matlack leaves on a reflective note; impressed with student involvement

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

On the eve of leaving office, K-State Student Body President Terry Matlack reflected on both his failures and accomplishments during his term as leader of the students.

Matlack, who officially leaves office after the new student body president is sworn in, said he was surprised to find there were many students interested in participating in student government.

"I thought apathy was a big problem and I think a lot of people think it is, but I think it isn't," Matlack said.

"Probably one of the most rewarding things I saw in office were students taking an interest in several issues," he said.

MATLACK SAID student involvement in intercollegiate ticket sales, long-range planning committees and intercollegiate councils was encouraging.

"The number of people we had who wanted to get involved was rewarding and pleasantly surprising."

Matlack said he wasn't pleased with the lack of desire on the part of the students to get involved in long-range projects as well as the problems that can be solved in a short amount of time.

"I'd like to see students take the larger view more often," he said.

Student Senate has the same fault of the student body, the hesitance to work on the large problems on campus, Matlack said.

"They've tackled some large problems, but yet a lot of times they're apt to jump into the small things rather than the large ones," he said.

Criticizing the University administration, Matlack said administrators should make definite commitments on University issues that need to be solved.

"For example, the administration hasn't really committed itself to a direction in moving on the parking problem," Matlack said.

"I wish the University would take the stand that it's not that bad or that they are going to do something," he said.

IN HIS usual style, Matlack criticized his own mistakes more than the actions of the people with whom he has worked.

Matlack said he should have backed the fieldhouse referendum earlier in the semester to allow students to become more informed on the proposal, and that he should have spent more time lobbying Student Senate and pushing the proposed legislation he wanted to see passed.

"I'm very bullish on student government," he said.

"If the only thing student government does is teach people the aspects of leadership, even if we didn't do a thing all year, it would be worth the time for those people involved."

"If I could say anything, I'm just pleased that the student body has been so cooperative and given me this great honor."

BARTLESVILLE — This small, usually quiet town is teeming with anticipation and excitement as the much ballyhooed Kedzie South Caper draws nearer.

It is with great pleasure and appreciation that the former kids of Kedzie announce their first ever annual coming out (sts) bash. Warmups for the bacchanal are scheduled for the 24th, and festivities are expected to crank up (sts) the following day, providing the house is still standing and at least a quorum of the celebrants are not in the local area hoosegow.

Bartlesville's finest bondsman has been retained for the affair, and said he will keep his weekend free "just in case." But the seven maintain such precautions are uncalled for because of the high social standing they have earned for themselves in the short time they have been here. In any event, the county jail is known throughout the state for its superb roast duckling, peach cobbler, delicious salads and excellent service.

The fete promises to be the social event of the season.

It will be a welcome reprieve for the B'ville seven, who have been wallowing blissfully in this town of charm and laid back Bartians, and to show their hospitality, door prizes will be drawn every hour for such prizes as a walking tour of the Phillips research center and a quart of SAE 30 oil.

Beverages will be vast and varied, ranging from Oklahoma's finest mineral water to Phillip's highest octane fuel; and snacks will be equally colorful, and may include won tons and omelets, providing their respective creators are able to mount (sts) the omelet-maker's two-humped (sts) camel and make the delightful trip.

The occupants of the house where this revelry will take place have graciously offered the use of their driveway and floor to accommodate the heartiest of cars and Collegios.

All are welcome. The time is Feb. 24, 25, and 26. The place is 1714 McKinley, B'ville.

Be there or be square. Aloha.

Bartian Broad Bamoes Brownie

Kevin Brown, Examiner-Enterprise sports reporter, was struck broadside in his car (a 1978 Monte Carlo) by a broad on Friday the 13th. His car was damaged to the tune of $1,400.

Brown was heard mumbling as he awaited the police, "Darn, they never should have let broads vote or have driver's licenses.

Did somebody get the number of that truck that hit me?"

To top it off, Brown's car insurance company dropped his policy, something the great sports reporter still doesn't understand.

"Why is it always me? Why is it always me that gets bammoed?"

It's 10:30 a.m.; do you know where your students are?

One of the things that sets college life a cut above the hassles of the "real world" is the class attendance policy of the faculty member who doesn't really care if you show up or not.

But then again, there are those who make attendance mandatory and take all the fun out of a college education.

Class attendance policies at K-State are up to individual faculty members, said John Chalmers, vice president for Academic Affairs.

"It is up to the individual teachers to decide whether they want to make class attendance mandatory, and each teacher has a different way of doing it," Chalmers said.

"I have been in a lot of universities where teachers were required to take attendance," he said. "I could never make myself do it.

"Basically, the university is a permissive society. We would hope that students would make their own mature decisions about cutting classes," he said.

FRANK ORAZEM, president of Faculty Senate, reinforced the fact that it is up to teachers to make their own attendance policies. He added, however, that when a student does miss class it is his responsibility to find out about missed work, not the teacher's responsibility.

Computer center gets input on bids

The K-State Computing Center will begin accepting bids next week for a new computer system, and primary contenders for the contract are ITEL Corporation and IBM, according to Tom Gallagher, director of computing facilities.

The Computing Center is divided into a Computing Service Center and a Data Processing Center. The former provides administrative support to the University, while DPC is responsible for instructional and instructional support activities.

The new computer system will replace the IBM 370-158 which was installed in the Computing Service Center in December 1973 at a cost of $2 million, Gallagher said.

"On February 10, we had a meeting of the University Digital Computer Committee, which is the academic committee that oversees the activities of the Computing Center. At that time, we made them aware of a proposal we had received from the ITEL Corporation. That proposal was then discussed with the committee. Prior to that time I had discussed whether it seemed in the best interest of the University to pursue the investigation with the ITEL Corporation. Their response was 'pursue away.' And we are still pursuing," he said.

Tests on K-State computers and on computers in Topeka were used to determine the requirements of a new system.

The problem with the current system is that it does not have a big enough memory bank to satisfy user demands. The one million-character memory capacity of the IBM 370-158 is saturated by input from the 12 existing terminals on campus.

"A new system should be able to handle 20 terminals," Gallagher said. The ITEL AS-5 now under consideration has a two million-character capacity.

Bidding will continue until March 21 so specific costs and details are not yet available. Gallagher said, however, that there is a possibility of trading in current equipment as a part of an overall deal.

Class dismissal during all University convocations is also up to individual faculty members, Orazem said.

"I think the memo that President Acker sends out tells professors about the Landon Lectures and all University convocations and encourages them to dismiss class, but it is optional," he said.

The reason that the policy is this way is because the lectures might not be interesting to all students.

"An engineering lecture might be more interesting to engineering students than to other students. In such a case, engineering teachers might want to dismiss class so that their students can attend the lecture, and other teachers might not," Orazem said.

THE MANDATORY dismissal of classes during all University convocations has been considered, but the idea was rejected, Chalmers said. The only time classes were dismissed was when former President Nixon spoke at K-State while he was still in office.

"When Scott Momaday, the Pulitzer-Prize-winning author, spoke at a convocation, we thought he would draw quite a crowd, but very few people came. If dismissal of classes would have been required that day, you would not have been able to get into the Union," Chalmers said.

TV: how do you spell relief?

"Put in the RIGHT drain cleaner," booms the ethereal voice from some obscure spot above the kitchen ceiling. Hildegard Homemaker complies, tossing aside wretched Brand X for super-new-improved-will-not-harm-the-ozone-layer drain cleaner in a zombie-like trance.

God has gone commercial.

Different speculations concerning the divine sell-out include a massive public relations campaign for the Man Himself to back up dial-a-prayer and the great radio pray-a-thon, a new image to up sales and collections, and a stab at leveling church attendance ratings with "Charlie's Angels." (For additional info, see p. 103; Farrah is ordained.)

The real inside story, as seen in the Enquirer opposite the "I put my baby in the deep-freeze" special feature, is that advertisers will do just about anything to sell, sell, sell. Is nothing sacred?

This week, Ragtime takes a brief look at the wonderful world of television commercials, those 30 second spots of visual vomit that appear between your favorite soap opera and game show.

AN ANECDOTE: Little Bobby and Bertha are watching Sesame Street in their suburban home with a two-car garage, sitting on the Congoleum floor, eating their breakfast bars.

"What does your daddy do for a living?" asks Bertha, reaching for her high-energy cheese snack.

"He's an actor," says Bobby, with a smug look on his blank little face. "He's coming on in just a few minutes."

"Wow," says Bertha. "I'm impressed," as she turns her soon-to-be-adolescently pock-marked face towards the screen.

Ragtime

"There's daddy now," cries Bobby, girating with excitement.

Several grown men dressed as giant fruits crowd the screen, chatting about the merits of a certain brand of undies.

"That's my dad," says Bobby, "He's the grapes that fell through the dresser drawer."

"You sure are lucky," says Bertha, "My daddy's only a brain surgeon."

Yes, Bobby is a lucky little boy. The only kid in Hollywood Elementary that holds a candle to his dad the fruit is the one whose dad is the "Big Fig."

ON THE other end of the extreme lies the pain commercial, the one that gives you a headache so you have to take the product.

Sitting there watching Ida Irregular's stomach blow up to preposterous proportions through unsurpassed special effects while she moans "Pepto (ummmph!) Bismol" is enough to make the possessed puke. Add that to a construction worker spelling "Relief" on a chalk board and a secretary clutching her head in agony, and you contract every disease known to man after two half-hour sit-coms.

If one is a dedicated viewer, and has been comparing commercials over the years, one is bound to notice some frightening discrepancies in advertising.

A few years ago, Odor-Off deodorant was bombarding the screen with blurbs screaming "contains secret ingredient X43-Q." Now, the people at O-O are relieving the viewer's carcinogenic nightmares by boasting "Does not contain harmful additive X43-Q." Great. Now that a million consumer's armpits have been eaten away, the rest of the population that had yet to go through puberty can file X43-Q away with the rest of Nader's No-No's.

The worst part of the situation is the knowledge that some TV writer is giving his daughter Masseratis and straight teeth on a salary earned by writing the dialogue backing up the larger-than-life can of feminine hygiene spray that flashes on the seven-foot screen at Mother's.

Where has taste gone in advertising? Certainly not in the Hamburger Helper that causes cancer of the colon, or the slice-and-bake cookies that make children think chocolate milk comes from cows that listen to LTD and Marvin Gaye.

No, taste in advertising has gone down the drain. And in case it clogs it up, make sure you put in the RIGHT drain cleaner.

Front Row

Slipped discs: listening to low profits

By SCOTT FARINA
Contributing Writer

Serious record collectors know that many fine albums slip by the public unnoticed. That's the way of the marketplace. Music today is a multi-million-dollar industry, and generally artistic merit is not financially rewarding. Record companies just aren't going to give big promotion to records that have a limited audience (translation: small profits).

That is why we will examine a few albums that have failed to arouse mass interest. These albums are unconditionally recommended to all whose musical tastebuds have not become numb through constant exposure to Top 40 drivel.

"Katharsis" by Jane Schaffer: Schaffer is the Swedish-born guitarist who backs the group

Abba, but don't reach for the barf bag. This solo album is solid evidence that Schaffer does the Abba gig for the money.

"Katharsis" is a prime example of world music, smoothly synthesizing Eastern, Western, African and Latin influences, and it is a true blend.

THE MUSIC does not have the feel of a recipe, of "let's add a little bit of this and a dash of that." Schaffer has toured the world over and has picked up on many musical ideas which are incorporated into the songs on this LP.

Schaffer plays with both power and lyricism. His ideas are sometimes subtle, such as on "Bromma Struttin'." The lines on the surface sound repetitious. In fact, Schaffer is substituting phrasing, color and tone for changes in the melodic structure. Throughout the album a high energy level is maintained, but this is not to be confused with loud, fast, cluttered playing.

Fusion music this is not, if we take fusion to mean heavy reliance on electronic instrumentation and studio wizardry. This is adventurous music which can be listened to by anyone. It is not 'spacy' or 'outside.' It is accessible, and it is what the music world will eventually be coming to.

"Go" by Stomu Yamashta: A friend referred to this as 'intelligent Pink Floyd,' and the description may have some merit. Floyd has done some remarkable tunes ("Us and Them" on "Dark Side of the Moon") but has never sustained a high level of musicianship throughout an entire album. "Go" will hold your attention from start to finish.

YAMASHTA is a classical percussionist who also composes and plays keyboards. He wrote all the songs but one on this album, and the melodies are haunting and original. They stay in your head after only one listening.

Yamashta also knows how to pick other musicians to help on his projects. The lineup includes Steve Winwood, Michael Shrieve, (formerly of Santana), Al DiMeola (of Return to Forever) and Klaus Schulz (of Tangerine Dream). It's like a supersession that works.

WINWOOD'S organ playing and singing are full of feeling, although his enunciation is extremely sloppy. Shrieve, perhaps the finest drummer around, does precisely what is needed and no more. He becomes a central force in the music by virtue of not trying to be the center of attention. (Billy Cobham take note!)

There is a follow-up album which lacks both the fine packaging and the cohesiveness of the original. Entitled "Go Too," the absence of Winwood is immediately apparent. Jess Roden does a fair enough job on vocals, but Linda Lewis' mousy, little-girl voice only does the lyrics an injustice.

"Go Too" is not a bad album, especially compared to the usual record product tossed at the consumer. But it suffers next to its predecessor. "Go" for the original.

Starting (puff-puff) quitting; book asuages eager fingers

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

For once it is really refreshing to sit down, take a couple of deep breaths, open a book and do some self-analysis.

For those trying to cut down on smoking and are serious about eventually quitting, but somehow can't keep those eager fingers away from that pack, Jacquelyn Rogers' "You Can Stop" is a good start.

Many smokers are frustrated when hearing phrases and questions like: "I wish you would stop smoking" or "Say, could ya put that thing out?"

Or how about wanting to compliment an offended friend who prepared a luscious meal, but the smoker is unable to savor the true flavor because his taste buds are temporarily stifled by an intake of smoke?

It is not for the smoker to be defensive and act disgusted only to snuff out those people who attack him.

personal experiences that might contribute to his smoking.

To accomplish looking at these experiences, she gives concrete examples of people in the SmokEnder program (an eight-week seminar of which she is a co-founder) who had used smoking to quiet anxieties at work, home, school and in relationships.

Some of these episodes are frightening, and at times she paints an uncomfortable and touchy picture. Her aim, however, is not to scare the smoker by saying "most smokers are tempted by danger" anyway.

ANOTHER method she uses to help smokers learn about themselves is questionnaires. Smokers scrutinize questions about people and events in their lives that have some relation to why they smoke.

While most of these questions are reasonable in emotional, physical and mental characteristics, some are downright ridiculous and insulting.

For example, Rogers goes as far back as first childhood friends, dates and loves, implying that the smoker might have been bruised and retreated behind his trustworthy buddy, the cigarette. (She adds a little Freudian twist every now and then.)

Some different ideas and good suggestions are offered by Rogers to find out why one smokes and to help him quit.

FOR INSTANCE listing an intake of foods and drinks that don't mix with cigarettes and her theory about a smoker's irregular acidity balance is one technique.

There are, however, some matters worth quibbling over when she says "most smokers are unhappy with their jobs" and the insinuation that their life is as rotten one filled with little self-worth. By quitting, Rogers says they discover talents they never realized they had.

Sometimes, she seems to get lost in the conflict of smoker and non-smoker. She categorizes them and says if smokers quit, they'll be back to "normal" like everyone else.

It is disappointing not to have Rogers explain more about her SmokEnder program. She qualifies this by informing readers she would destroy the suspense and secret of the individual technique.

All in all, her book benefits the smoker and anyone who wants help with inner problems. It's a head start in the right direction.

Apathy dulls black culture interest

By BERNARD NORMAN
Collegian Reporter

For many black Americans, February is Black History Month.

During the second or third week in February, black students attending K-State display their cultural heritage through numerous social programs. This week is referred to as Black Awareness Week.

Black Awareness Week usually has a high level of student, University and community participation. Yet apathy, the killer of activity, has deadened this year's events, according to the leaders of various K-State black organizations.

"On our campus, we have a case of apathy from the students and the staff. The level of participation is minimized compared to what it should be. More participation and awareness is needed from groups other than blacks to enable Black Awareness Week to accomplish its goals," said Yvonne Loud, senior in horticulture therapy and president of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority.

"Black Awareness Week is supposed to last seven days, yet there aren't enough events of cultural awareness to fill a weekend," said Lonnie Barnes, senior in pre-dentistry and president of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

"Right now everybody is thinking about themselves, the energy needed to produce information exists on a very small scale," said Camilla Pace, junior in physical therapy and arts and sciences senator.

OTHER BLACK collegiate leaders expressed similar views, but said they believed Black Awareness Week is still a necessity at K-State.

Anthony Seals, junior in journalism and mass communications and president of the Black Student Union, said, "I feel there's a definite need for Black Awareness Week at K-State. There's a need to bring about an awareness of a culture that has played a very important role in the history of the building of America."

"Everyone is aware of a white culture, even over in Japan, but very few people are aware of a black culture, and I might add Black History Month is only reasserting and re-establishing that which has been neglected in the white educational processes," Seals said.

"Prominent whites are recognized throughout the year, for example, George Washington's birthday, but in return, people don't recognize black men and women of the same stature in our white society," said Lorenzo

Matthews, senior in electrical engineering and president of Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity.

"I feel there shouldn't be just a Black Awareness Week, but black awareness year round. We deserve some days on the calendar for the black men and women of equal stature," Matthews said.

"There's most definitely a need for Black Awareness Week on this campus," said Valerie Pope, junior in home economics and journalism and president of Delta Sigma Theta sorority, said, "I feel for every ethnic group, especially on a predominantly white campus, there's a need to express our culture and background so that other groups can become enlightened on other people besides their own race."

Tennis team opens indoors

By JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

The K-State tennis team opens its 1978 season on an unusual note Saturday afternoon in Ahearn Field House against Nebraska.

The first indoor meet in the history of K-State tennis begins at 1:30 and should conclude by 4:30. Admission is free to all students, college age and younger. K-State ID's are required. Admission for non-students is $1.

The format will be similar to professional Team Tennis, said Steve Snodgrass, K-State's head tennis coach. Each match consists of one set, not the traditional two or three. The deuce system won't be used. Instead, the first player winning four points wins the game, even if he's ahead by only one point.

"This will speed the matches up," Snodgrass said, "and eliminate the monotony of deuce points. The games won't be dragged out as they are when the traditional system is used."

TEAM scoring is based on total games won and not matches won. The team winning the most games wins the meet. This makes it possible to lose three-of-five matches, but still win the meet. The scores of the sets will be crucial.

The basketball floor of the fieldhouse will be taped off to the dimensions of a tennis court. This will make for a fast surface because of the slickness of the floor.

"At this time of year the players are used to playing indoors,"

"We have five returning starters and several promising freshmen who should give us much better overall strength and depth," Snodgrass said, "but I expect we'll compete with Colorado and Nebraska for the number four spot. I'll be very disappointed if we don't have at least a break-even season."

DESPITE the problems of a low budget and no scholarships, Snodgrass is optimistic about the future. He said he hopes the tennis team could offer scholarships again in two years. And he feels there is enough support for tennis to solidly establish the team.

"All of our budget right now goes for travel, balls and strings," Snodgrass said. "And we're running out of money for the women's tennis team and may have to discontinue the spring season. Eventually the women will probably have to compete just during the spring season. But, overall, things are looking better."

Snodgrass said he's fighting an uphill battle, trying to reestablish a sport which was dropped for three years. But he said he has the backing of Jersey Jermier, athletic director, and Conrad Colbert, assistant athletic director.

"Jermier has shown great support," Snodgrass said, "and President Acker will also be attending the meet to give his support."

K-STATE'S number one men's doubles team will be seniors Jeff Hall and John Cope. They return from last year's team and Snodgrass said they've shown improvement.

In the men's singles for K-State will be Kansas City Junior College transfer John Mathies.

K-State's women players will be Candie Gwin, freshman, in singles and Pam Boggs and Mary Lou Kultgen, seniors, in doubles.

The mixed double's team will be Laurie Friesenborg, freshman, and Greg Last, sophomore.

John Nelson, sophomore transfer from Purdue, is ineligible under NCAA transfer rules until next year.

Sports

Snodgrass said, so the surface won't bother them. As a matter of fact, the players would have more trouble outside on concrete courts because their timing would be way off."

The meet consists of five events: men's singles, men's doubles, women's singles, women's doubles and mixed doubles.

SNODGRASS expects this year's team to be much improved over the squad which went 5-20 last season. K-State, the only Big Eight school not awarding tennis scholarships, finished last in the conference in 1977.

Kuhn fines Angels $5,000

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—The California Angels apparently have been slapped with a $5,000 fine by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn for tampering with Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog.

Neither the Angels nor the commissioner's officer would verify news reports of the fine Wednesday, but the man in the middle—Herzog—had plenty to say about the matter.

"I think the fine is very unfair and I don't think (Angels owner) Gene Autry is guilty or anyone in the Angel organization is guilty," Herzog said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from Florida. "As far as I'm concerned, they never tampered with me."

A SPOKESMAN for Commissioner Bowie Kuhn said a decision had been reached on the matter but added any information would have to come from the Angels.

E.J. "Buzzie" Bavasi, executive vice president of the Angels, said the team would have no official comment until it received a reply to its protest of the decision, but Autry said, "I'm not guilty of a thing."

Joe Burke, Kansas City general manager, said he was aware of reports last year that Herzog might go to the Angels, but he emphasized the Royals had filed no complaint with the commissioner's office.

Ticket sales begin Sunday

Ticket policies and procedures if K-State is a Big Eight first-round basketball site:

Sales will begin at 1 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 26 at the Athletic Ticket Office in Ahearn Field House.

Student tickets will be priced at $2 each. K-State students must present current semester fee receipts. One ticket per student unless they are married. Allotments of student reserved and non-reserved tickets are available.

Public ticket prices are $5.15 each. The public may buy an unlimited number of tickets per person. All seats are reserved.

For those persons who ordered the same seats they held as season tickets, the tickets will not be mailed. They may be picked up at the Athletic Ticket Office, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday and Tuesday, or at the "will call" window in the north lobby of Ahearn Field House Tuesday night.

Wildcats look for surprises in track indoor championships

By FRANK GARDNER
Contributing Writer

They're young. They're confident. They're determined.

This is the K-State track team that on Feb. 24-25 runs up against Olympians, world record holders, NCAA champions and all-American runners at the Big Eight Indoor Track Meet in Lincoln, Nebraska.

"You never now how a young team will respond (in a meet like this)," said Assistant Track Coach Jerome Howe. "I think our kids are ready to run, and excited about the Big Eight Indoor," Howe said.

The 60-yard dash will feature K-State's Mack Green and Vince Parrette against Clifford Wiley of KU. Parrette has qualified for the NCAA championships in this event with a time of 6.05 seconds, as has Wiley at 6.0. Wiley is a three-time all-American who holds the record at 300-yards and shares the world mark in the 400-meter relay.

PARRETTE, sophomore from Kansas City, is the defending Big Eight champion in the triple jump. Ajai Agbekaku, one of six Nigerians on the University of Missouri squad, holds the top mark in the conference. Parrette and Agbekaku have qualified for the NCAA meet with leaps of 52 feet, five inches and 53 feet, five inches, respectively. Wildcats Kevin Sloan and Keith Linck hold the number three and four spots in the conference. Sloan and Parrette are also in contention for the long jump title.

Because K-State has few nationally ranked runners, points in the field events will be vital. In the shot-put, Ray Bradley has improved in the past few weeks. He was not pleased with his win in the Oklahoma dual meet at 54 feet, 10 inches.

"I should have gone 60 feet," Bradley said. Missouri's Steve Moore is the conference leader at 59 feet, 6 inches.

Doug Knauss is ranked third in the conference pole vault at 16 feet, one inch, with Ron Nofsinger and Dana Morris not far behind.

WILLIE MAJOR will face Nebraska's Jeff Lee in both the 60-yard low hurdles and the 60-yard highs. Lee is the defending Big Eight champ in both events, and the NCAA champ in the highs. Major will also test world record holder Wiley in the 300-yard dash, and run a leg on the 'Cats' mile relay team. The relay team of Bill Tanner, Ray Hanf, Darnell Washington and Major is ranked third in the conference, and needs to lower its time of 3:15.5 by only .5 seconds to qualify for the NCAA meet.

Washington, who placed third at Oklahoma City, will run in the 600. Tanner and Hanf are expected to shadow conference leader Stan Whitaker of KU and All-American Dele Udo of Missouri in the 440.

Freshman Ed DeLashmutt is the conference leader in the mile and is third in the 1,000. He has yet to be pressed in the mile this year while running 4:07.1, and could qualify for the NCAA this weekend by running 4:06. Bryan Sanchez is due for a good race in the mile as well, Howe said.

In the 880, Greg Schlatter and Greg Glass stunned everyone at the Oklahoma dual meet by finishing one-two. "If they can get into the finals, they could surprise some people," Howe said.

The experts pick KU, Nebraska, OU and Missouri to battle for the title this weekend. Ross and Howe said they may have a surprise or two for the experts.

All Big Eight team

It's that time of year again when everyone starts naming their basketball all-star teams. Pretty soon the Associated Press and United Press International will bestow such honors on the best in the Big Eight.

But I'm going to divert from that procedure in several ways. First, I'll give thumbnail sketches on who I believe are the best ten players in the conference. Next I'll pick who I think are the five most talented players in the conference.

Finally, I'm going to select the five players I believe played the best basketball this conference season. I don't expect everyone to agree with me, but then that's all part of the fun of choosing all-star squads.

John McCullough, 6-4, junior, Oklahoma. Mr. Steady...Never loses his cool...Nothing ever flashy, he just beats you...Averaged 13.6 points a game...an underrated player...Defensively, one of the best...The guy girls would take home to mother.

Dean Uthoff, 6-11, 247, sophomore, Iowa State. Want a rebound? Call Uthoff...One of the nation's leading rebounders with 14.1 a game...Scored 12.4 a game...Offensively, like a bull in a china shop...Won't win many footraces, either...Ex-football player and plays like it...Could be second cousin to Big Foot.

Andrew Parker, 6-5, 196, junior, Iowa State. Good shooter and knows it...Conference's leading scorer at 22.8...Has been known to pass off occasionally, like Mother's Day, Labor Day...A pure south-paw...Defense? Not this guy...Will take off for offensive end of court at slightest hint of a shot.

Brian Banks, 6-0, 155, junior, Nebraska. Small, but that doesn't stop him...Great defensive player...Dealt misery to both Evans and Valentine...One of the few players in the conference who looks for the pass before the shot...From same hometown as Carl McPipe, Hammond, Ind...Averaged 14 points, 3.1 assists a game.

Mike Evans, 6-1, 170, senior, K-State. Conference's all-time leading scorer...Was premier guard in Big Eight until Darnell Valentine...Has no peer in league on 20-foot jumper...Great for K-State's perimeter offense...Plays a lot of zone defense so his man-to-man is suspect...Averaged 19.5 points, 3.2 assists a game...Could play pro ball if he finds team that needs pop-up shooter...Has career high of 40.

Carl McPipe, 6-8, 200, junior, Nebraska. There are better scorers, better rebounders, better defenders, but McPipe is most complete center in league...Strong... Can score, but you have to tell him to...Averaged 15.6 points, 7.8 rebounds a contest...Would get eaten up on national level, but unfortunately, he's the best the Big Eight has to offer.

Clay Johnson, 6-4, 165, senior, Missouri. Quick with awesome jumping ability...Can dunk with the best of them...Defense? What's defense?...If he had some teammates, it would take some pressure off him...Averaged 16.4 points, 7.9 boards a game...Could be a pro if he discovers how to dribble and the dinner table...Captain of Big Eight All-Afro team.

No cheers from the pressbox

Rolando Blackman, 6-6, 185, freshman, K-State. Makes team on his defensive ability alone...Cat-quick with jet-like moves...Good jumper...Best one-handed rebounder in league...Will be great in time...Good kid, very coachable...Averaged 10.8 points, 6.4 rebounds a game...Longest arms in league...Deadly around the hoop...Weakness? Has trouble hitting 38-foot bank shot.

Darnell Valentine, 6-2, 185, freshman, KU. By far, the best player in Big Eight...does it all...One problem, he drives the lane like he's Franco Harris...Averages 14.0 points, 4.4 assists, 2.9 steals a game...Quiet type of superstar...Thinks he has never made a foul...His thighs are matched only by King Kong's...Strong, but quick for his size...Could turn pro anytime.

Curtis Redding, 6-5, 200, sophomore, K-State. Hard to put on first team, but hard to leave off...Bundle of talent and energy...New York City player-of-the-year two years ago...No one knows the game better...Very emotional and thus, unpredictable...Will put up a shot at slightest dare from anywhere on the court...Occasionally will toss up a brick...Will make a spectacular play, then a dumb one...Big hit with women and himself.

Those are the ten. The toughest part is trying to place them on the different teams. The most talented squad was the easiest to choose.

They are Johnson, Redding, Evans, Valentine and Blackman. These are the players I think have demonstrated the skills and knowledge which put them heads above everyone else.

HOWEVER, not all of these players had tremendous seasons. Only two of them I believe were among the top five players in the league.

My choices for the 1977-78 All-Big Eight team are Evans, Valentine, Banks, Parker and Uthoff. Of those five, Valentine is the Most Valuable Player.

Kuhn under fire

NEW YORK (AP)—A backroom movement by a handful of baseball owners intent on firing Commissioner Bowie Kuhn has gained support from roughly one-third of the teams, The Associated Press has learned.

Brad Corbett of Texas, the anti-Kuhn ringleader, has approached several sympathetic owners for support in the project.

An Associated Press survey has revealed that at least nine of the 26 teams would vote to fire Kuhn if a secret ballot were held today. Those teams are Baltimore, New York, Oakland, California, Texas and Chicago in the American League and Cincinnati, San Diego and Atlanta in the National League.

Workers' compensation fund profits from fatal incidents

By ALAN MONTGOMERY
Staff Writer

The Kansas Senate Ways and Means Committee decided last Thursday to recommend the application of the Kansas Workers' Compensation rule to Senate Bills 3036 and 3054.

SB 3036 is a bill seeking compensation for the death of Paula Fabrizio who, at age 16, was murdered on Aug. 21, 1976, while working as a rangerette at Cedar Bluff Reservoir. Her parents are seeking $25,000 above funeral expenses.

SB 3054 is a bill seeking compensation for the death of Elizabeth Bush who, at age 20, was murdered on May 17, 1974, while working as a rangerette at Milford Lake. Her parents are seeking $25,000 above funeral expenses.

Miss Bush, a resident of Junction City, was a K-State student.

If the Kansas Ways and Means Committee was to apply the state workers' compensation rule to the claims of the parents of the two slain park rangerettes, each set of parents would receive a check for exactly $1,000—and the state Workers' Compensation Fund (WCF) would receive a deposit of $10,000.

THE WCF has received more than $50,000 this year from collections from the deaths of unmarried Kansas workers, according to Tim Brazil, special attorney for the State Insurance Department and administrator of the WCF.

The fund, designed "to relieve an employer of any additional liability that he may incur as a result of having hired or retained a handicapped employee," was called the "second-injury fund" until 1974, he said.

The fund now carries a balance of "about $2 million," and is financed by the Kansas General Fund, special assessments on insurance companies and by the collection of $5,000 from insurance agencies at the time of death claims paid on unmarried workers (with no dependents), Brazil said.

Workers' Compensation coverage is carried by private insurance companies in Kansas in compliance with the state Workers' Compensation laws, he said.

WORKERS' compensation coverage for state employees is carried by the state Self-Insurance Fund, but complies with the Workers' Compensation laws as well, he said.

A special "clipping service" is employed by the WCF to scan newspapers in Kansas, clip out articles involving job-related deaths and transfer the information to the WCF office in Topeka, he said.

Upon receiving information concerning a death, the WCF sends out a "form letter" to the business in which the worker was employed. The letter inquires about whether the worker had any dependents and, if there are none, the WCF demands a payment of $5,000 to be deposited in the fund, he said.

And, because it is Kansas law, the demands must be met.

"The nature of the deaths may not be compensable under workers' compensation law, since it involved criminal acts," he said.

SINCE THE rangerettes were employed by the state, the Workers' Compensation coverage would be carried by the State Self-Insurance Fund and this fund would pay the $1,000 to each of the families and would transfer $10,000 to the state WCF to comply with the law, he said.

"When a person's job places them in a position to get killed, it is a compensable claim," said George Welch, administrator of the state Self-Insurance Fund.

"The Fabrizio girl was killed because her job put her in a particular place and she was killed because she happened to be there. It was a random killing," Welch said.

"But let's say that the killer knows the worker and comes in and kills the worker for a personal reason—that would be a factor that would make it a uncompensable claim," he said.

Under the Workers' Compensation law in effect at the time of the rangerette murders, death benefits would be $1,000 for each claim and a $5,000 payment for each claim to be sent to the WCF, he said.

The law was amended in July of 1977 to raise the death benefit to $2,000, and the payment to the WCF is still $5,000. But the 1974 law will be the one applied to these cases, since the incidents happened at that time, he said.

AND THERE is no legal recourse for the parents to seek compensation, other than special legislation being passed for these cases.

Under present workers' compensation laws, there is no provision for bringing civil suit against the employer for damages in the case of the job-related death of an unmarried Kansas worker, Brazil said.

Under the law, the employer and his insurance company (who is carrying his workers' compensation coverage) are immune from any liability other than the $2,000 funeral benefit to next of kin and the $5,000 payment to the WCF, even in cases where there is clear indication of gross and wanton negligence on the part of the employer leading to the death of the employee, he said.

"The whole procedure (workers' compensation death benefits for an unmarried worker) is not only defective, but it's simply not fair," said Kansas Attorney General Curt Schneider in an interview in Manhattan Monday.

"I think the Kansas legislature will catch up one of these days and will provide the protection that these people need."

"I don't know if they will do it through workers' compensation or a tort claims bill or by some other means."

"Sooner or later the legislature will have to react and remove themselves and employers in general from immunity to civil suits," he said.

When asked about the morality of the WCF collecting $5,000 for each fatal accident involving an unmarried Kansas worker with no dependents, Schneider said, "I'd rather not get into that at this time."

Amended bill compensates parents of slain rangerettes

The Kansas Senate Tuesday voted in floor debate to pay each set of parents of two slain park rangerettes $25,000 above funeral expenses.

Sen. Donn Everett (R-Manhattan) was instrumental in amending the bill which was passed out of the Senate Ways and Means Committee with only funeral expenses being covered under the Workers' Compensation rule.

Opponents to the compensation awards of $25,000 expressed fear that it will set a precedent in cases involving single workers on the job.

After official action in the Senate Wednesday, the bill will be sent to the House Ways and Means Committee for its consideration.

The House Ways and Means Committee has had hearings on similar bills regarding the rangerette claims, and attitudes of the members of the committee vary regarding whether to approve the claims.

There are some members who are concerned with the possibility of setting precedents that may bring on a rush of death claims, according to Ann Nimic, secretary for the House Ways and Means Committee.

It's still not too late to take Army ROTC.

Because there's a two-year Army ROTC program, in case you missed taking ROTC in your first two years of college.

You'll have to work to catch up, during the summer before your Junior year. At the summer make-up you will earn approximately $500.00 and four semester hours of credit. In two years you'll earn about $2,900 . . . more than half of which is tax free, and 16 semester hours of credit. Then you'll earn an officer's commission at the same time you earn a college degree. Taxation class takes burden of filing returns off students

By SALLY PEREZ
Collegian Reporter

A tax lab program which gives practical experience to Taxation I students also offers free assistance to K-State students with their income tax returns.

Naomi McCarthy, assistant professor of business administration and instructor of the tax lab program, said some students who have taken Taxation I or who are now enrolled in the class volunteer to work in the program.

"I had training sessions for the students that did the returns. First, I created a problem. Then I gave it to the students and they did both federal and Kansas returns," McCarthy said.

McCarthy said students will be available to help complete tax forms today from 1-4 p.m. in Calvin Hall Room 204, and if this time is not convenient, appointments can be arranged.

"We can do U.S. forms and non-resident alien forms," McCarthy said. "Student volunteers do the work, but I look over everything before we actually mail the forms out."

McCarthy has been a Certified Public Accountant since 1970, worked at a large firm with tax practices for two and one half years, and has been a tax consultant since then.

The program has been very popular so far and many students have come in for help," McCarthy said.

McCarthy said completing tax forms is much easier to do for someone who does a lot of tax returns than it is for a person who does only one a year.

McCarthy said that so far they haven't done any foreign non-resident returns, but they are doing many non-resident Missouri returns.

"We're professionals at these non-resident Missouri returns now," McCarthy said. "Last week it was a mad house."

McCarthy said she wanted to have the program for two reasons. First, the students get to practice a tax accountant's work and second, it provides practice for completing difficult tax forms.

"I feel that students get to see what a real tax accountant does," McCarthy said.

"Students in the class have liked this program so far and enjoy doing a real tax problem rather than a textbook problem," McCarthy said.

McCarthy said not only is this program good practical experience for the students, but also makes tax more interesting for them.

McCarthy said she believes she will have the program again next year.

Kenny Starr to sing at horseshow

Country Western singer Kenny Starr will perform at the K-State Block and Bridle Intercollegiate Horseshow Friday and Saturday at Weber Hall Arena.

Starr will perform during each session of the horseshow starting with the first session 7 p.m. Friday. There will be a session at 1 p.m. Saturday and the finals of horseshow will be at 7 p.m. Saturday.

The horseshow will include 10 events: showmanship, western pleasure, western horsemanship, English pleasure, barrel racing, pole bending, ribbon roping, team roping, reining and the rescue race.

With the exception of three events, the top six contestants in each event Friday night and Saturday afternoon will advance to the finals Saturday night. The English pleasure class, rescue race and reining class will each have only one section.

The English pleasure class will be Friday night, the rescue race Saturday afternoon and reining will be during the Saturday night performance. The judge for the show will be Ray Brown of Copan, Okla.

Tickets are available at Weber Hall. The price is $2.50 for adults and $1.25 for children per performance in advance and 50 cents more at the door.

There will be a dance following the Saturday night performance at the Knights of Columbus Hall.

Dow Jones drops to a 3-year low

NEW YORK (AP)—The stock market turned in a mixed showing Wednesday, getting little mileage out of an attempted technical rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, on the plus side most of the day, faded near the close and finished with a .26 loss at 749.05, a new low since it stood at 742.88 on April 7, 1975.

New plant for K-State

Coal power fires energy debate

By SCOTT STUCKEY
Staff Writer

A coal-fired power plant will be K-State's major source of energy by the mid 1980s.

The advantages and disadvantages of the future plant were discussed Wednesday at the Catskeller as part of the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas series.

"Our present power plant is undersized. The equipment is obsolete," said Vincent Cool, assistant vice-president for University facilities. "We are very close to having more load than we can handle."

The present power plant is gas-fired and relies on oil as a standby fuel, Cool said. It consists of seven boilers, including one which has been in use since 1928.

Cool said the coal plant is necessary because gas, oil and other forms of energy are becoming very limited. Gas and oil will not be economically feasible after the mid-1980s, he said.

SOLAR AND wind systems are only supplemental systems at this time and couldn't handle the needs of the University, Cool said. Hydro-electric power from Tuttle Creek and the burning of Riley County's wastes are other possible supplemental systems, but they couldn't take the place of a coal plant, he said.

"Nuclear power would be tremendously more expensive and would cause many more problems than a coal-fired plant," he said.

Cool said a state-funded study of available energy sources conducted by Stone and Webster, an international engineering firm, concluded that coal is the only economical source available.

In their report completed in March 1976, the firm recommended K-State use the present plan as long as gas and oil are available and to start planning immediately for the construction of a coal-fired plant.

ANOTHER engineering firm, Lutz, Daily and Brain, is now studying possible sites for the plant. Cool said their report will be out in two or three months.

"The initial engineering study dismissed all possible energy sources except coal," said Frank Locker, representative of the Manhattan Environmental Board. "The first stage of this plant would require a large outlay of capital. This would commit the University to coal use even after other sources become viable."

"As time progresses, alternative energy sources become more and more attractive," he said.

The coal-fired plant would require an enormous open storage area which would create dust, water drainage and aesthetic problems, Locker said.

THE TRUCKS used to deliver coal from the storage area to the plant would be very noisy and would require the upgrading of Manhattan's streets, Locker said.

"The plant will have a negative impact on Manhattan. We don't want the quality of life around the University to be a trade-off for this plant," Locker said. "Judgments about the plant should be made from many points of view, not just from that which would mean the least economic cost to the University."

"If present planning doesn't include the integration of alternative energy sources, we will be locked into using coal for a long time," said Gary Coates, associate professor in architecture.

Coates said the coal plant is a necessary evil because alternative energy sources would not be used economically in the present physical plant.

All three speakers agreed that K-State's energy requirements could be reduced if better conservation measures were practiced.

"Through measures of conservation and the use of solar energy in future construction, the University could save 30 to 50 percent of its energy," he said.

Cool said many of the older buildings on campus need insulation and better windows.

Pi Kappa Phi gains K-State charter, awaits national fraternity sanctioning

By PEGGY PATCHEN
Collegian Reporter

The Pi Kappa Phi colony was granted a University charter at K-State by the Council on Student Affairs Wednesday.

The colony had previously received approval from the Interfraternity Council (IFC) and is now eligible to receive a national charter from the national Pi Kappa Phi fraternity.

Pi Kappa Phi is the first fraternity to be granted a University charter at K-State since the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity in 1968 and the reactivation of the Theta Xi fraternity in 1972, according to Jerry Lilly, IFC advisor.

ANY NEW colony must recruit members, have financial solvency, acquire permanent housing and be able to function as a group. Pi Kappa Phi has been working hard to fill these and other requirements, according to Mitch Holtus, president of IFC.

A leadership lab conducted by Jerry Mathews, Pi Kappa Phi National Director of Development, and Mark Ashley, field advisor, initiated the existence of the Pi Kapps at K-State.

The colony began recruiting members in spring of 1977 with the help of Mike Wamsley, who serves as chapter advisor. Wamsley is a charter member of the Delta Epsilon chapter of Pi Kappa Phi at Jacksonville State University.

"There are 34 in our fraternity now. Four guys just recently pledged. We hope to have 40 or 50 by the end of this semester," said Ron Smith, junior in journalism.

THE PI Kapps are also recruiting alumni, Steve Dreiling, president of Pi Kappa Phi, said. Since K-State is the first university in the state to have a chapter of Pi Kappa Phi, there are few alumni in the area.

"Tradition plays an important part in the success of a chapter. The older chapters have more alumni, which give them a bigger recruiting base and second and third generation members of legacies," Holtus said. "Pi Kappa Phi has no legacy and no great number of alumni."

Among the alumni at K-State is John Eck, associate professor of physics. Eck is a Pi Kapp who attended the Poly-Technical Institute of Brooklyn, now known as Poly-Tech of New York.

"I was divorced from the whole thing for so many years until I saw their (Pi Kappa Phi) symbol on a house. I found out I live in the same neighborhood," he said.

J.A. Shellenberger, emeritus professor at K-State, became a Pi Kapp at the University of Washington. He was recently honored as a 50-year member.

LOCAL ALUMNI being recruited are Father Dan Sheetz and Mike Sheely. They will be initiated along with the fraternity members when Pi Kappa Phi is approved for the national charter.

"But the seniors going out of here will be the bases of alumni. Right now we're building it for future members," Dreiling said.

Housing and scholarship have been the two main concerns with the colony, according to Holtus.

"The Pi Kapp scholarship was not nearly as good as it should have been," Holtus said. "The scholarship committee will be working with Pi Kappa Phi and other bottom chapters to help them out."

"We're trying to improve, but with this chartering going on, it's a strain on a lot of people," said Tom Cox, junior in chemical engineering.

Most of the Pi Kapp members live out of the house, so it is hard to set up a scholarship program, according to Dreiling.

Market system exchanges family farms for 'fascism'

By NORMAN PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

Unless the present market system is modified to provide a profit for farmers, the future of agriculture is a corporate market system.

"We are not destroying agriculture, just the family farmer—the private enterprise system," said Dale Lyon, president of the Kansas Farmers Union. "Which probably is the most vicious form of socialism in the world. In Europe many years ago they called it fascism."

Food prices under a corporate agricultural system would be higher than they are now, Lyon said to an introduction to political science class Wednesday.

"In the free market system, if the farmer sells something there is no consideration of the cost of production," he said.

"But when a corporation gets involved, they have a different system. They figure what it costs to produce an item, they figure a fair return, a fair amount of capital for expansion, a fair return for the stockholder, then they set the price.

"If you think food is high now think about it then," he said.

LYON discussed several possible solutions to the farm problem.

One of the more popular solutions to the agriculture problem is to get government out of agriculture, Lyon said.

"The family farm was created by the government. What do you think the homestead act was?"

"It was a planned, premeditated act on the part of the government through the various homestead acts to create an entity in the midlands of this country.

"That 160 acres was never considered to be an economic entity. It was a social and political entity," he said.

"When you talk about government in agriculture the question is not whether or not it should be in agriculture, but is it in to benefit the farmer, just as a referee, or to provide cheap food and to hell with the farmer," Lyon said.

ANOTHER popular solution is to expand markets for agricultural products.

"You can't expand the market for food, just manipulate preference. Which means you run your neighbor out of business," Lyon said.

"If you promote beef and increase the beef bought, you are just decreasing the amount of pork sold," Lyon said.

"It's every human stomach times four every 24 hours. You can give people food and they're not going to eat more than four pounds a day. You can overcharge them and they will drag up every last dime to buy food.

"The market is expanding—by 25,000 stomachs each day."

A solution often heard is to expand farmers' credit, Lyon said.

"Credit is not a substitute for income. All credit is for is to borrow money to invest in something to make a buck."

"If you're not making a profit, credit is just simply giving part of yourself to somebody else."

"Credit is no solution to any problem.

"You give me a fair price for what I raise and my credit problems will fade away like snow on a warm day," he said.

ACCORDING TO Lyon a favorite solution of economists is for the farmer to expand his operation.

"I started with 320 acres, rented. Today I farm 1,920 acres. I lost $18,000 last year.

"I'd like to have those people who believe in larger farms to explain to me just how a bigger farm solved my problem."

"Another 160 acres is not the answer."

Lyon also commented on the current farm strike.

"What protests have been made by farmers against the market system have failed to modify the market system in this country except by federal policy and federal law.

If this present protest doesn't succeed in modifying the market structure, we will have lost again.

"If the market system is going to be successful it has to provide a fair return to the producer."

Handicap awareness growing on campus

As public awareness of problems of the handicapped has grown, so too has the participation in handicap-interest groups, such as the Students for Handicapped Concerns here on campus.

According to Donna Gore, president of the organization, participation is increasing in activities and other schools with similar organizations are contacting SHC here.

"There's a school in St. Joseph, Mo., interested in becoming a chapter of our organization," she said.

EMPORIA STATE has had an organization for the handicapped for eight years. Gore said she hopes their organizations will get involved in some projects together.

"If they would like to get in-involved with us it would be great," Gore said.

There are major problems which handicapped people face at K-State, such as accessibility into buildings, Gore said.

"There are many architectural barriers. In Ahearn Field House, for example, there is only one entrance they can get in without encountering stairs," Gore said.

Jane Rowlett, instructor at the Center for Student Development, said parking is also a problem for the handicapped.

"We have ten stalls for handicapped people to park in but in some places they have to park illegally to get to class," Rowlett said.

ROWLETT and Gore both said there is not much help for the blind at K-State.

"Presently we have no mobility training for blind students when they enroll in K-State," Rowlett said.

Another problem is the need for counseling in scheduling classes for the handicapped. Their classes may be too close together or the buildings may be inaccessible.

Gore said Students for Handicapped Concerns will serve as an organization in which handicapped people can meet other people, to socialize and try to understand each other. The group wants to create an awareness of handicap problems and try to encourage people not to view handicaps "as some type of freaks."

"Our program is making headway," Rowlett said. "I'd say K-State is really giving this attention—we are better off than some schools."

Atherton returns from Jerusalem

CAIRO (AP)—Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton arrived Wednesday from "very important" talks in Jerusalem and said his shuttle mission proved U.S. rededication to bring Egypt and Israel back to the bargaining table.

"When President Anwar Sadat was in Washington, President Carter pledged that the United States would redouble its efforts and I am here to carry out that pledge and to help maintain the continuity of the negotiating process," Atherton said after landing at Cairo airport.

Prosecution rests case in rape trial

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

The prosecution rested its case Thursday after testimony from two key witnesses was presented at the trial in Riley County Court of three men accused of raping a coed in K-State's athletic dormitory last March 30.

Charged in the case are Ken Lovely, Dallas, and Nate Jones, Chicago, members of K-State's football team, and former teammate Michael Woodfin, Topeka.

Jerome Holiwell, who was granted immunity last August for his testimony, returned to the stand Thursday morning and admitted he lied on parts of his previous testimonies.

He said he had not been in his room when the incident occurred.

"Everything you said to Romine (Bryce Romine of K-State Traffic and Security) was a lie?" Charles Scott, defense attorney asked.

"Everything after 12:30" (a.m., the time the incident occurred)," Holiwell replied.

HE SAID he also lied when he said (Kirk) Boykin had intercourse with the victim.

Boykin, Houston, who also testified for the state, said he was in the room and held the victim and pulled her jeans off. He said, however, that he did not see anyone have intercourse with her, claiming he left when he realized the woman would not give consent to sexual relations with the men.

"Everyone (except Lovely) was on the bed tugging and pulling at each other (to get to the victim)," Boykin said.

Boykin pleaded guilty Tuesday to a charge of conspiracy to commit rape.

The defense produced a battery of character witnesses, including Ellis Rainsberger, former football coach at K-State.

Rainsberger testified that all three defendants were peaceful, law abiding and truthful, as did others. But Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter questioned the honesty of Woodfin in his cross-examination of Rainsberger.

This led to an exchange in which Rainsberger and Sauter attributed to each other statements concerning the honesty of Woodfin.

RAINSBERGER also testified that he talked to Holiwell, Woodfin, Jones and Boykin a couple of days after the incident when the victim of the rape met with Rainsberger to discuss the matter.

Rainsberger talked to Holiwell, Jones and Woodfin because they were in the car with the victim before the rape occurred. He also questioned Boykin because "she (the victim) felt Kirk was involved."

When Rainsberger asked the four if they were involved in the incident, they all told him they weren't.

Rainsberger told Sauter that he had taken notes of the conversations with the players, but said he doubted if the notes still existed.

"I think I destroyed them when I left KSU," he said. "But they may still be there in a personal file."

Scott brought in several teachers and administrators from campus and others who knew the defendants enough to attest to their character.

Last chance negotiation hopes alive before Carter forces coal strike end

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter kept alive hopes for a negotiated settlement to the coal strike Thursday as the 80-day-old dispute brought the first major layoffs in the auto industry.

The president said he has decided against immediate government intervention in hopes of getting the striking United Mine Workers and coal industry officials back to the bargaining table.

"We're still trying to get the parties to negotiate with each other," he told a reporter at swearing-in ceremonies for William Webster, the new FBI director.

The president met earlier with bipartisan congressional leaders and was to confer later with the governors of West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Kentucky—states hard hit by the bitter walkout.

ADMINISTRATION officials said the president told the lawmakers there was still a last chance for a negotiated agreement and that he could not wait past the weekend to act. The officials said Carter stressed there was a need to keep options open for a few days and that congressional support was needed to let industry and union know that backing exists for seizing the mines or invoking the back-to-work orders of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker Jr., who was among those meeting with Carter, said it could be late April or May before Congress could act on special legislation. By then, he said, there could be 90 percent power cutbacks in some areas and millions of people out of work.

Although Carter still hoped for a resumption of negotiations, the two sides appeared deadlocked. The industry had said Wednesday it could not accept the union's proposal calling for a settlement nearly identical to one reached earlier with a major independent producer, Pittsburg & Midway Coal Mining Co. The union declared it could accept nothing less.

Hays to give politics another whirl in Ohio

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)—Wayne Hays, whose career as one of the nation's most powerful congressmen was cut short by the Elizabeth Ray sex scandal, re-entered politics Thursday as a candidate for the Ohio Legislature.

Hays, 67, said he will seek the Democratic nomination in June for the 99th district seat now held by Rep. A.G. Lancione, a Democrat who is retiring at age 72.

"I have had a lot of people ask me to run. I don't mean 20 or 30, I mean in the hundreds," Hays said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from a St. Clairsville bank where he serves on the board.

Hays said backers have told him that any references to the 1976 affair with Miss Ray, a Capitol Hill secretary, would only strengthen their support.

"I think people are inclined to say that has no bearing on this," Hays said. "If they (constituents) hold it as a major bar to my being a representative, I wouldn't run."

IN AN interview with a Wheeling, W. Va., radio station, Hays added, "I'm sick and tired of that Elizabeth Ray scandal. Since when has it been a scandal for a single man to have an affair with a single girl? It has been blown out of proportion."

Miss Ray said at the time that she could not even type and was on a congressional committee payroll only because she provided Hays sexual favors. Hays denied that she was hired solely for sexual reasons.

Bombs away

A group of K-State students who wanted to be identified as "a bunch of wild and crazy guys" spent the sunny afternoon Thursday bombarding cars and passerbys with snowballs on North Manhattan Ave.

With temperatures reaching into the 40s, the melting snow made ideal material for a rip-roaring fight.

New Student Senate convenes despite Wednesday election validity controversy

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

The new K-State Student Senate was seated during Thursday night's senate meeting despite a protest motion to postpone the seating because of a dispute over Wednesday's election.

Several senators disputed the validity of Wednesday's student body president and College of Arts and Sciences senate elections because several voters were turned away from the polls when workers ran out of ballots.

Lisa Zahn, elections committee chairman, said only about three people apparently didn't vote because of the lack of ballots.

"When we saw we were getting low on ballots at the voting polls, we immediately saw to it that more ballots were taken to data processing to get punched," Zahn said.

"During the time they were being punched, in case they did run out of ballots, we took over to the polls the unpunched ballots," she said.

ZAHN SAID there was only a ten-minute gap in which ballots were not available and said it was not a serious problem.

Brad Henson, agricultural senator, said he moved to table the bill officially seating the new senate and then withdrew the motion to draw attention to the ballot problem.

Henson said he questioned the validity of the elections because of the polls running out of ballots and the possibility some people didn't vote because of the shortage of ballots.

Henson said he hoped his motion would draw attention to the election system and the possibility of an investigation.

"I had to bring it up. The whole (election) system needs to be investigated," Henson said.

HANK SPENCER, arts and sciences senator, said the election committee is at fault for running out of ballots.

"I think it's incompetency on the part of the election committee," Spencer said. "It's mismanagement."

"It's a legitimate gripe," he said. "It's up to the candidates to write a complaint to the election committee if they don't find that it was valid."

Webster takes the FBI reins to drive home law enforcement

WASHINGTON (AP)—William Webster, a federal judge for the last seven years, took over direction of the FBI Thursday with a promise to make his tenure a symbol of integrity and the agency a standard for law enforcement.

"Let there be no doubt about it, the FBI exists to uphold the law," said Webster. "We will do the work the American people expect of us in a way the Constitution demands of us, so help us God."

In a 20-minute swearing-in ceremony held for the first time in the FBI building named for J. Edgar Hoover, Webster, 53, took the oath of office from Chief Justice Warren Burger and was given praise and good wishes by President Carter, the man who picked him for the job.

ATTORNEY GENERAL Griffin Bell handed Webster a standard gold FBI badge with the number "3" on it. Bell, who had a moment's difficulty locating the badge on a lectern on the stage of the FBI auditorium, told Webster, "It's good I found it. Otherwise you wouldn't be able to get into or out of the building."

The shield bears a replica of an American eagle and a blind-folded woman holding the scales of justice, the same as badges carried by all FBI agents and officials.

"My pledge to all of you is that 10 years from now this badge will be just as bright and shiny as it is today," said Webster.

Dale Lyon, president of the Kansas Farmers Union, was incorrectly quoted in Thursday's paper. The quote should have read, "We are not destroying agriculture, just the family farmer—the private enterprise system—and exchanging it for a corporate enterprise system, which probably is the most vicious form of socialism in the world. In Europe many years ago they called it fascism."

Britain's biggest drug bust

BRISTOL—The last of 31 defendants will be sentenced next week in the windup of the biggest drug bust in the annals of British crime, a "British Connection" police say was supplying 60 percent of the world's street-corner LSD.

The operation, which police said pulled in an estimated $230 million, was begun by a university-educated gang in 1971 with distribution links in New York, Paris, Amsterdam and Sydney. It was smashed last March in raids by 800 police on locations across Britain.

Among the alleged masterminds were British chemist Richard Kemp, 33, and an American, Paul Annibaldi, who is still at large.

Seventeen convicted defendants face sentencing next week in Bristol Crown Court. Judge Sir Hugh Park has already sentenced 14 others to jail terms of one to eight years. Most defendants are British.

Cold at 60 below

'CHEGDOMYN, U.S.S.R.—When the temperature drops below minus 60 degrees Fahrenheit in this remote Siberian town, a fog of ice crystals blots out the sun, branches snap off trees, even rail lines sometimes crack, but children still go to school.

At minus 60, people walk slowly because even the tiny breeze created by a fast pace would freeze their faces. Children learn early to breathe through their noses to save their throats.

At temperatures like this, people don't leave town alone, because, as one resident says, "if you fall and break a leg, you're done for."

Construction machines are never turned off because restarting them would be too difficult in this cold. Drivers pour vodka, a handy anti-freeze, into their hydraulic brake systems on the cold-weather principle of "more vodka into your car and less into yourself," as one policeman put it.

Here in remotest Far-Eastern Siberia, 200 miles from the Chinese border, people adapt.

Kansas' own Big Foot

CHETOPA—Worried that there was not enough excitement in this tiny southeast Kansas town, Chuck Bentley left his mark in a way residents won't quickly forget.

The 20-year-old resident of nearby Oswego fashioned two plywood feet, 17 inches long and 10 inches wide, went bounding across the snowy countryside, and sparked a "Big Foot" monster hunt that drew some 5,000 participants.

The spooky case was abruptly solved two days after it began when Bentley, alias "Big Foot," appeared on a newscast of a Pittsburgh television station.

He said he was trying to add some excitement to life in Chetopa.

American air harmful

WASHINGTON—A majority of Americans breathe air that is considered harmful to their health despite evidence that the nation's air generally is cleaner than in the past, the Environmental Protection Agency said Thursday.

This conclusion is based on a new study by the EPA showing that air in nearly all major metropolitan areas, where most of the U.S. population lives, violates national pollution standards.

The EPA, which is responsible for enforcing pollution control laws, concluded that the nation's urban areas "must develop new strategies for continuing their progress towards meeting...national air pollution standards."

EPA Administrator Douglas Costle said the findings show, "we still have many specific areas of the country, especially in our cities, where a significant clean-up task remains."

ANA cancels out on Kansas City

The American Nurses Association (ANA) has cancelled two conventions—one in Kansas City, Mo., and one in Atlanta, Ga.—because the lawmakers of these two states have not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment.

A round of applause is in order for the decision.

According to ANA president Anne Zimmerman, a successful 1974 resolution stated "the nursing community would take every possible measure, individually and collectively, to secure the enactment of the ERA."

ON THE basis of that resolution, ANA's Board of Directors announced last week that future conventions and conferences will be held only in states which have ratified the ERA.

A defeated 1976 resolution to hold workshops and meetings only in such states has caused opposing ANA members to report to the Kansas City Star that the convention boycott decision is illegal.

Technically speaking, however, conventions involve more people, business and dollars than workshops. ANA communications director Bill Kuehn says the 1981 convention scheduled for Kansas City will draw about 12,000 people.

THE FACT is, the ANA is a national association of 200,000 who are striving to better the position and treatment of nurses in the U.S.—both male and female.

For decades, the nurse has played a subservient role in the medical community. Nursing requires rigorous training, and nurses work more closely with patients than doctors themselves.

Some goals of the ANA and ERA are similar, and by supporting the amendment, the organization is reinforcing its own work.

The 15 states that have not ratified the ERA have indirectly put a detour on ANA's road to its objectives. It is only fitting that ANA would channel its conventions and conferences full of conventioners (and their money) to supportive states.

The great weapons market

There is one store in the world that is so large it would make Macy's look like a Seven Eleven. It does billions of dollars worth of business each year.

However, this store sells many items you can't get in other stores and has millions of employees.

Its manager, Jimmy Carter, who took over in Nov. 1976, is a very good salesman. His store, USA, Inc., has some unique items.

Where else can you get an F-15, one of the most effective jet-fighters in the world today? They will even throw in a 20mm cannon and a computer-guided gun site.

For the near-sighted, options include medium-range radar AIM-75 Sparrow and short-range, heat-seeking AIM-75 Sidewinder air-to-air missiles; and it flies at Mach 2.5 and beyond (batteries not included, of course). You can have this cool little number for about $1,500,000—or a few thousand barrels of oil, depending on who you are and where you live.

USA, INC., does not restrict its business to jets. It sells a variety of things: wheat, nuclear generators, ships, bombs, tanks—just about anything you could want, provided you can pay the price.

Of course, the price varies depending on who you are. For instance, if you are a communist the price will probably be quite expensive, unless you work out some kind of deal with the manager and his board of directors (like, say, agree to not build over 100 or so nuclear warheads, or not so many missiles as you had originally planned).

If you're a Shah, you may find it quite easy to buy goods at USA, Inc. It's almost like having a charge account.

If you're Arab and you own a large gas station, you might only have to convince the manager that if you don't get the goods you ordered that peace would be endangered. We all know that if you get enough weapons, peace will be insured.

RECENTLY, Saudi Arabia (your local gas station in the Middle East) ordered a large shipment of those dandy little F-15 (the one with all the missiles and cannons). They say they want them for peace, but I feel they wouldn't be too good for peacetime use unless they consider dusting crops in Israel with missiles a "peaceful act."

The Egypt Co., a sometime affiliate of Saudi Arabia, wanted a few of the F-15s but had to settle for the F-5Es—probably because they have a lot fewer gas pumps than their buddies.

Israel, one of the big stockholders in USA, Inc., wasn't too happy about the sales. They want the board of directors to tell the manager to go to hell. But they feel it would be all right if the board let them buy a few of those F-15s and maybe throw in an F-16 or two.

THEY FIGURE if they get enough weapons it will help peace, seeing as how they would never use them, so they say. It seems they are like some of us in that they use them for a status symbol. You know, keeping up with the Joneses, or the Sadats.

At the rate Israel buys jets and tanks from USA, Inc., they'll have to start painting some of them yellow and put taxi signs on top, just to help pay for them.

Well, what ever the board decides to do, it's doubtful that it will affect us. Why bite the hand that feeds you?

I only hope there's enough left of the Middle East to put back together after all these countries looking for peace get through with each other.

Letters to the editor

Students see hospital 'discrimination'

Editor,

After reading the finished article concerning the refusal of certain hospitals in Manhattan to treat K-State students, I want to make some clarifications.

There were some very vital facts that would have enlightened the situation that Cheryl and I were in when trying to get admitted to Memorial Hospital that were not in the article.

First, the main reason that I did not go to Lafene was because it was late at night and from previous experience I knew that there were no doctors on duty.

Also, I knew from the pain I was experiencing that I need medical attention right away.

As for the account on the other student that was refused, there were some details left out.

She waited at Memorial Hospital for close to an hour, bleeding badly from the mouth, before she found out that they were not going to admit her.

Time is of the essence, in many accidents, to prevent permanent facial and teeth damage.

She was then sent to Lafene, only to find that it was after 5 p.m. and all the doctors had left.

She then waited even longer to get the medical attention that she should have received an hour and a half earlier.

It is illegal in this country to discriminate against someone because of race, religion or sex. But what about students?

I see this as discrimination against us just because we are students.

This is not just a case of someone with flu or a bad cold. This is a case of someone in an emergency situation.

The last thing I would like to say is to Collegian reporters.

In the future, I hope that you quote someone as you say you are going to and not choose just anything that happens to be said in the conversation.

Heating bill no sweat in solar home; rocks soak up the sun to warm house

By PERYN COMINSKY
Collegian Reporter

With winter's falling temperatures and increased fuel prices, apartment dwellers and homeowners alike have discovered their heating bills climbing.

Earl Singleton, however, sits comfortably in his Manhattan home with his thermostat set at 70 degrees and says his heating bills are but a drop in the bucket.

Singleton is by no means a millionaire—but his home is equipped with a solar energy unit that takes care of more than 70 percent of his heating.

Singleton said of the hundreds of different kinds of solar heating systems, his is a rock-air unit. This type of system is manufactured in Manhattan by Solar Industries.

THE ROCK-AIR unit stands independently of the house in a lean-to structure. The unit's solar collectors are situated on the side receiving the most sunlight. Inside the structure are tons of rock absorbing and storing the solar energy. The heat from the rock is transferred to the house through the house's heating ductwork.

Earl Kleiner, owner of Solar Industries, said his system works on a simple principle. It works much like a car left sitting in the sun with the windows rolled up.

Short wave solar energy passes through the aluminum solar collectors and is converted into long wave solar energy which is trapped in the solar storage area. Depending on the size of the unit, between 14 and 21 tons of rock absorbs and stores the long wave energy.

When the temperature in the house falls below the thermostat setting, the cooler air is drawn through the rocks and directed back into the house, bringing the temperature back up to the desired level.

ACCORDING to Singleton, when a solar heating system is installed in already existing houses, the unit can be linked to the ductwork of the conventional heating system. Therefore, no major changes in the house have to be made.

"Of course I've kept a conventional heating system capable of heating 100 percent of the house installed," Singleton said.

"This isn't because my solar system isn't efficient, but because if there's a period when there is very little sunlight, the conventional system can be used to help the solar system heat the house."

He said that in studying the many different types of solar heating units, he has never heard of one installed without some kind of conventional backup unit.

Singleton also said the total efficiency of a solar heating system is dependant on several things. "Insulation," he said "is perhaps the most important factor in a system's overall efficiency." The more insulation a house has, the more heat it will retain.

Singleton said his home is insulated with 14 inches of insulation, but that six or seven inches would make a solar heater just as effective.

ANOTHER factor contributing to the efficiency of a solar system is the behavior of the people living in the house, Singleton said. If the occupants of a house open and close doors and windows frequently the system will be less efficient.

Singleton said he has been thinking about selling his property. He said the fact the house has solar heating has definitely made the property more attractive.

When the house is appraised the amount of money saved on heating per year is computed for a ten year period and added to the price of the house, he said.

"For example," Singleton said, "Before I installed the solar system three years ago, my average heating bill for a year was about $200. Now I only have to pay about $60 to cover my heating expenses."

SINGLETON emphasized that his solar energy system is only equipped to heat his house. There are different systems available which will do more than heat a house. Some systems available are capable of generating electricity and heating water for a house.

"To put it in a nutshell, a house could become totally self-contained by installing a solar energy unit," he said.

Both Kleiner and Singleton said installing a solar energy isn't expensive. For example, a small system like Singleton's costs in the vicinity of $7,500, while a larger version cost $9,000.

The price of the system may vary depending on how much or how little you want the system to do.

Mental health institute okays grant to study rural elderly

The National Institute of Mental Health has approved a $257,000 grant for a two-year research project on environment and mental health of the rural elderly.

The project has been approved for funding but the money won't be available until the project is approved by the National Advisory Council on Aging.

Paul Windley, associate professor of architecture, said the funds are "not in the bag" yet, but he is 95 percent sure the approval from the council will come early in May.

Windley, and Rick Scheidt, assistant professor of Family and Child Development, will be assistants in studying the relationship between the mental health of small-town elderly persons and the psycho-social and ecological-architectural dimensions of small towns. The research will begin in early July in rural eastern Kansas.

"We suspect that the physical environment of towns with less than 2,500 population has something to do with mental health of the elderly and basically we have no research data for small towns," Windley said.

OPPRESSED . . . Lee Willis, cast in the role of Jethro, brought out the suffering of those who felt the oppression of slavery during the performance of "Black Love Song No. 1" last night at the Union Forum Hall.

The Ebony Theatre Company sparkles in rendition of 'Black Love Song No. 1'

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Arts Editor

The Ebony Theatre Company, a group of actors and actresses involved in promoting black theater arts at K-State, made its debut in observance of Black Awareness Week by opening with "Black Love Song No. 1" last night in the Union's Forum Hall.

Dealing with the positive and negative images of the black people from their initial influx into

Collegian Review

North America and slavery to the social bondage endured today, the play was written by Val Ferdinand and directed by Suzanne Bunker.

Turning in an exceptional performance in the role of Jethro was Lee Willis. Cast as a frustrated slave, a militant and an impressionable youth, Willis accepted each role with great depth of character and feeling.

Nita Cobbins portrayed Peaches, a woman coping with society and men by utilizing her female wiles. Cobbins did a marvelous job in the character role, letting realistic bitchiness and bitterness flow from every pore.

THE HIGHLIGHT of the show, however, came in Patrick Miller's portrayal of Beat, an old man with aged views. Miller, ragged to the hilt and knee deep in believability, came on strong in his sad, but comic role.

Also turning in good performances were Rachelle Thomas as Sarah, female lead, Anthony Seals (Slick) second male lead, Valerie Pope and Jerry Walker.

"Black Love Song No. 1" captures the essence of black culture in three parts—the temptation of a useless existence, the hope for a future of meaning, and the fear of the hazy mediocrity that lies somewhere in between. It is a play that reaches out to the audience with a strong message, one applicable to all races, the choice between good and evil as we interpret it.

Black Love Song No. 1, as the title insinuates, is about a love between two people, but taken in the more covert sense, it is a love between a whole race of people, for the country they call home, and for the dreams they hold as dear as life itself.

At the beginning of the play, in a dramatic blackout marred only by candlelight, the chorus asks: "Where has the seed of Africa gone?" The answer comes in the form of a cry of anguish, "They are gone to America, to the new world; to hell they have gone."

The whole meaning of the play stems from this idea; the seed of Africa has been sown, and the product of this seed has been repotted to unfertile soil. Whether it flourishes as would the hearty ivy, or languishes and eventually withers as would an orchid, is up to the path in life taken by the wayfarer.

Discretion is thrown to the winds; impact is more important.

Program more rigorous

Honors students' requirements upped

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

Changes in the Arts and Sciences Honors Program have been made to help student's needs and contribute to a better educational climate.

The new format and eligibility requirements make the program more rigorous, according to Sara Chapman, assistant dean of the college and honors program supervisor.

"The main difference is not considering high school performance (in a student's qualification for membership)," Chapman said. "We're interested in their commitment and performance here at K-State."

To become a member now, students must complete the non-credit seminar, Introduction to Honor Work in Arts and Sciences, and achieve a 3.5 grade point average in the first semester of the freshman year.

STUDENTS who qualify may enter the program in the second semester of the freshman year.

"I think the improvements Dean Chapman made are generally good," said Joann Himick, senior in sociology. "Before, anyone could get in by being in the top 10 percent of their class in high school. It made it sort of a elitist thing where the smart people got to have small classes."

An active advisory council was also set up to help students plan their curriculum and get information, Chapman said.

"We found we had members of the honor program who didn't really know what they were members of," Chapman said.

The changes in the program help meet individual needs. Chapman described one student who designed for herself a program in wildlife illustration.

"If there's a student who would like to have some particular experience in an academic area, he has a chance to create that program with our help."

ANOTHER change implemented was allowing older students to join the program. Chapman said they allow students to enter the program as late as the end of their sophomore year. In this way they include junior college transfers, also.

All students who wish to remain in the program must maintain a 3.3 grade point average.

"Some who joins as late as their sophomore year can complete the program," Chapman said. "But, even if they don't, they can benefit from it."

She said the benefits of the honors program aren't always very tangible.

"I talked to one student leader who said that some students think that there isn't enough in it for them. They're looking for a reward, rather than the experience of the classes themselves."

"It's not a matter of reward, but of opportunity," she said. "We want them to contribute to it as much as they expect to receive from it."

CHAPMAN said there are benefits for the students who are looking for something more practical.

"The biggest benefit for me was the chance to conduct some research while I'm an undergraduate for my senior essay," Hamick said.

The essay is the culmination of the program, following freshman classes, sophomore seminars and junior colloquium.

The arts and sciences program has cooperated with other colleges' programs, especially this year, Chapman said. All honor students had an informal question-and-answer session with Malcolm Forbes when he was on campus last semester. They hope to have a similar conference with Milton Friedman this semester.

Chapman said the honors program gives people a chance to go beyond strictly vocational training in college.

"We think that the honors program in arts and sciences is in the best tradition of liberal studies," she said. "Instead of preparing them for one thing only, a liberal education develops more flexible, more resilient, more hopeful adults than people whose backgrounds are narrowly vocational."

CHAPMAN said she recommends a "good dose" of liberal studies for all students. The honors program will benefit any student who has enthusiasm for learning.

"We don't want to discourage anybody, but we're not really interested in people joining who will not display this type of commitment."

"Our hope is that the honors program will provide an opportunity for (a student) to pursue topics that interest him with greater depth and freedom than otherwise," she said.

'Voice of the Wildcats' for 24 years; Nelson still learning with every game

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

In 24 years of broadcasting Wildcat basketball games, Dev Nelson has learned about K-State basketball thoroughly.

"Every time I do a game, I learn something," said Nelson, radio and television specialist for the K-State Division of Extension.

Nelson said that one thing he is proud of is that in 24 years, he has missed only four games.

"That's home and away," the "Voice of the Wildcats" said.

The four games Nelson has missed were due to an automobile accident he was involved in.

NELSON STARTED broadcasting at K-State in 1954. After two years, he went to WIBW in Topeka for 10 years. In 1966, he came back to K-State as sports information director and for the past five years he has broadcast for the Division of Extension.

Nelson said he has seen almost every K-State basketball team since the late 1940s when he was a K-State student.

Nelson remembers his college years as one of the great periods in basketball. He said K-State made its break into big-time basketball then.

It was right after the war and the GI Bill of Rights allowed lower income people to have the opportunity to attend college, Nelson said. The college athletes were older and they brought a big change into basketball, from a very controlled and disciplined game to a fast-break, go-go game.

Nichols Gym was always packed for the games, Nelson said. Only half of the students could attend each game and no general public tickets were available. Student activity cards were two colors and each color was valid for every other game.

Sports

NELSON SAID the line of students trying to get a good seat stretched from Nichols to Seaton. Students were literally hanging from the rafters at the games.

During Nelson's college days, K-State was working for a new fieldhouse as it is today. He said they worked almost eight years for a new fieldhouse because Nichols was so bad.

He remembered a KU game at Nichols. Everyone knew there would be legislative members there, so some students fixed up a dummy and during the first half, they dropped it from the rafters where the students sat. It had catsup or something in it that splattered when it hit the court.

Nelson said everyone thought that a student had fallen and when someone turned the dummy over, there was sign on it that said, "We need a new fieldhouse."

"We did crazy things then, too," he said.

In 1950, the Wildcats moved into Ahearn. It was one of the finest fieldhouses in the country and "such a blessing," Nelson said.

HE SAID THAT although K-Staters are closely attracted to Ahearn, the University will need a new fieldhouse to keep pace.

"I just think it has to come," he said. "It's imperative. It would be a great advantage to the school itself and Ahearn could be used for other activities."

"I think it will come. It's just a matter of time. I think it'll be a reality within the next six years. That may be optimistic," Nelson said.

He said the arguments come from the theories on what type and size the new fieldhouse should be.

"I'd like to see it go 20,000. If they're going to go for a new fieldhouse, go for the best. That's a sports fan talking."

In spite of his loyalty as a K-State fan, Nelson said he doesn't find it difficult to be objective when broadcasting.

"I'm for K-State and feel the emotion, but I do so many games," he said.

"Purple still stirs you. In my early days I was terrible. I was a cheerleader."

NELSON has been voted Sportscenter of the Year by Kansas writers and broadcasters five times. The organization is 19 years old and he has been on the final ballot 18 times.

"I'm asked a lot to compare teams because I've been around a long time. It makes me cringe. There is such a great basketball tradition here, I would do injustice to some team," he said.

As far as players, Nelson said, "Immediately, Mike Evans comes to mind. He would have to be the greatest player ever to put on a K-State uniform with due respect to all of the great players."

Nelson said the main difference in basketball today from the past is the quality of available athletes. He said average athletes had more opportunity years ago. Today because of better high school coaches, facilities, training and play, only exceptional athletes have the chance to play.

HE THINKS athletics are more competitive than any other facet of society.

"Basically that's what it's all about. I think it keeps the game great. I defend athletics."

"Whether you are a success or not, it's going to make a better person of you. That's what competition is all about," Nelson said.

Nelson admits 24 years is a lot of basketball, but he said learning sports is a matter of making it a part of your life.

"The travel gets tiring, but once that team comes out on the court, you're glad you're there," Nelson said.

Tackle check

With spring around the corner it's time to start preparing for the runs of white bass, crappie and walleye.

When the ice melts and the water starts to warm the fish will start to run. So being a few weeks from that point, it's the perfect time to start doing maintenance work on your fishing gear.

Many problems will be alleviated while fishing if you take care of a good deal of them before you get to the lake.

The place to start is the reel. The action should be smooth and line should come out easily. If it does, it still would not be a bad idea to look into it. Often dirt collects inside, gumming up the mechanisms. After the dirt has been thoroughly removed oil should be wiped onto all parts. If you removed a good deal of the grease inside the reel it should be replaced. On spinning reels you should check the bail to see if it works well and that it has no nicks that will catch when retrieving line.

ANY LINE on the reel should be replaced if the line was used last year. Monofilament line has a tendency to wear out quickly and should be replaced often if you fish quite a bit.

When putting on monofilament line it is important to let it come off of the spool properly. The spool should be placed at your feet and as the line comes off it should be turning around the spool clockwise. This will keep the line from twisting when it is put on.

Once the line is put on you should set the drag by grasping the line at the end of the rod. When you pull down, the rod should bend and the drag should give. If the line breaks obviously you have the drag too tight and should loosen it.

Fishing rods should be checked for nicks or any sign of wear which will cause them to break. The fishing eyes should be smooth. Nothing will cut up line faster than a nick in a fishing eye. If you find a nick it can be smoothed out with a very fine piece of emery cloth. The wrapping on the eyes should also be checked to make sure they are not unraveling.

NOW that we have the rod and reel out of the way it's time to turn to the tacklebox. Lures should be in good condition if you hope to catch fish when many people on the lake are not.

First of all, hooks should be checked on all lures to make sure they are sharp. Many may have been bent on rocks and other objects and they will fail to penetrate a fish's mouth. Even if they look sharp it would be to your advantage to hone them up.

To sharpen hooks all you need is a small, very fine file. A few passes over the end of the hook should be all it needs. If you're fishing and don't have a file, the striker on a match book will sharpen hooks.

SPINNER BLADES should turn easily or they will fail to turn when fished slowly. When using a spinner, swivels should always be used to prevent twisting of the line.

Super teams set Saturday

The Kansas state championship in the Budweiser College Super Stars competition, pitting K-State against Kansas State College of Pittsburg, will begin at 8 a.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

K-State will be represented by the Clydesdales, a team composed of Jane Dembski, graduate in health, physical education and recreation; Laura Barrett, senior in health, physical education and recreation; Anna Barton, freshman in journalism and mass communications; Hunt Barrett, sophomore in journalism and mass communications; John Lavender, sophomore in general business accounting; Bob Riordan, senior in accounting; Jeff Lair, freshman in business; and Mike Littell, freshman in general business accounting.

Athletes from 175 colleges and universities have taken part in the competition this year. Winners advance to state, regional and national finals. The team championship will be decided in May at Busch Gardens in Tampa, Fla.

The competition pits teams of four men and two women (plus alternates) against each other.

High court will take appeal of Nemechek murder case

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas Supreme Court took under advisement Thursday a request that it set aside the conviction a year ago of Francis Nemechek, on grounds the trial court made a mistake in not ordering a verdict innocent by of reason by insanity.

Under usual court procedure a decision would come April 1 on cases heard this month.

Nemechek was convicted Feb. 11, 1977, in Saline County District Court on five counts of first-degree murder. The trial had been moved from Trego County.

He was charged in the deaths of Sheryl Young, her three-year old son, Guy Young, and Diane Lovette on Dec. 13, 1974, and also in the deaths of Carla Baker, 20, of Hays, on June 30, 1974, and Paula Fabrizio, 16, of Ellis, on Aug. 21, 1976.

GENE ANDERSON, Hays attorney who represented Nemechek before the high court, argued that the trial judge, Steven Flood of Ellis County, made mistakes in four rulings.

He contended Flood should have sustained the defense's motion for a directed verdict of innocent by reason of insanity after the state declined to submit psychiatric evidence, and that he should have permitted defense cross-examination of Trego County Sheriff Larry Wade about fingerprints he had with him when investigating the Fabrizio slaying.

Anderson also argued Flood should have permitted the defense to question Kansas Bureau of Investigation Agent Lloyd Gaunt about his observations while he gave Nemechek a lie detector test, and should have relied on the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code definition of insanity rather than the M'Naghten rule used in Kansas.

Trego County Attorney David Harding countered by saying the defense never submitted any evidence to show Nemechek was insane, so the state had no burden to prove him sane, the trial judge properly held certain testimony of Wade and Gaunt irrelevant, and that the state Supreme Court had consistently, including twice recently, upheld use of the M'Naghten rule on insanity.

THAT RULE holds that a person must not be able to distinguish right from wrong at the time of the crime to be declared legally insane. The model code rule holds that a person may know what he is doing and know it is wrong, but can be driven by motivations he can't resist.

"By anybody's standards, the man could not have been sane at the time," Anderson said.

Harding said unless the state Supreme Court is willing to overturn all of its previous rulings on admissibility of psychiatric evidence, burden of proof on insanity pleas and the definition of insanity, "This case should be affirmed."

Sloper patterns help solve problem of clothing elderly

Commercially designed patterns and clothing are made to fit "average" shapes and sizes but are often problems for the elderly, obese or handicapped.

Laura Varney, instructor of clothing, textiles and interior design, is trying to remedy the situation by designing patterns made by measurements of an individual. This will help to obtain the fit in clothes where there are special problems.

"Patterns and clothes made commercially do not fit right for everybody," Varney said. "I make templates by using the measurements of the person and using an instrument to find the slope of the shoulders. This is most often the problem in the elderly. Their clothes don't fit their shoulders right."

The patterns, called Sloper patterns, can be used by men, women and children. The basic pieces for pants, jackets and skirts, can be made into the more fashionable clothing by applying the changes made to a commercial pattern.

VARNEY SAID the patterns are especially helpful to mothers with an obese child.

"The obese child's mother can't buy clothes for them or patterns for them because the patterns are graded up, thinking that when the child gets bigger, he gets bigger all over," she said.

Many times they (the children) get bigger in the upper arms or other places and the larger sizes are larger everywhere."

"All of the patterns are done in the metric measurement to insure a perfect fit," Varney said. "Even the commercial companies with up to 33 sizes still don't fit everyone right."

Although she hasn't tried the patterns on handicapped people, Varney said they should work because many times a handicapped person has different measurements on each side of the body.

Egypt's stand snags U.S. peace effort

JERUSALEM (AP)—American efforts to mediate a Middle East peace settlement are running into snags because of a toughened Egyptian stand, Israeli officials said Thursday.

A pessimistic view of chances for an Egyptian-Israeli agreement leaked out of a closed briefing given Wednesday by Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan to Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Security Committee.

President Anwar Sadat of Egypt appears to be retreating from his acceptance of a U.S. formula to break the negotiating deadlock, the officials said, and they confirmed that Dayan saw an erosion in Egypt's position.

DAYAN consistently has been more cautious in his public assessments than Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who exudes confidence of ultimate success.

Begin will leave for Washington on March 12 to seek a way out of the impasse. Officials said President Carter asked Dayan to return with Begin and Defense Minister Ezer Weizman will extend an arms buying mission to the United States to attend.

Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton returned to the Middle East on Tuesday, but Israel believes his peace mission is worse off now than it was three weeks ago. At that time the Israelis believed they were close to an agreement with Egypt over a set of principles to guide future peace treaties.

Atherton went to Cairo on Wednesday after what he described as "very important" talks in Jerusalem. He said he would meet with Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohamed Ibrahim Kamel to discuss "concrete ideas," but did not elaborate.

ATHERTON was working on a compromise formula based on Carter's Jan. 4 statement in Aswan, Egypt, in which he said a solution to the Palestinian issue should include recognition of the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians and their right to "participate in determining their future."

According to the Israeli analysis, complex inter-Arab politics sandbagged the compromise. Sadat is withdrawing his support, officials said, because he believes Carter's policy is unacceptable to King Hussein of Jordan.

The Israelis do not believe Sadat will conclude a peace agreement without Hussein's backing. Hussein, while not joining the Arab rejection front against Sadat's "sacred mission," has set a high price for his participation.

In an interview Feb. 9, Hussein listed his conditions for throwing his weight behind Sadat—total Israeli withdrawal from all occupied territory, Palestinian self-determination, the right of Arab refugees to return to homes abandoned in Israel and security guarantees for all states.

Israel says these conditions are "impossible."

Where Sadat now stands is unclear.

School system settles desegregation dispute

WASHINGTON (AP)—The federal government and the Kansas City, Mo., school system settled a five-year-old desegregation dispute Thursday that had tied up more than a quarter million dollars in federal funds.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano announced Thursday night that his department had signed the agreement with the Kansas City schools. The school system has agreed to increase non-minority student enrollment to at least 15 percent and no more than 30 percent at a high school formerly designated as the city's school for blacks.

Other terms of the negotiated settlement include a commitment by Kansas City to put any new educational programs at elementary schools which are overwhelmingly or entirely black in order to further desegregation, HEW said.

Keys supports an alternative to tuition tax credit system

By CONNIE STRAND
Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON—With the conclusion of tuition tax credit hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee this week, Second District Congresswoman Martha Keys (D-Manhattan) Wednesday tossed her hat into the ring of supporters for an alternative to the tax credit proposal.

Keys has joined a list of co-sponsors for legislation introduced last week, the Middle Income Student Assistance Act, which closely parallels a program announced by the Carter administration Feb. 8 and is designed to provide more aid to students from middle income families.

"I do not favor use of the tax code as a mechanism for giving more aid to students of middle income families," said Keys, a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

The tuition tax credit "sounded good" when it first arose about a year ago, Keys said, but she has since found the concept based on faulty rationale.

A tax credit which would allow a taxpayer to claim a refundable credit for tuition payments for himself, a spouse or dependent, doesn't give direct aid to students, encourages institutions to raise tuitions, provides a direct flow of money to unaccredited institutions and doesn't provide equal relief for state and private schools, Keys said.

THE ALTERNATIVE proposal, as outlined by the Carter administration, is divided into three parts:

—Students from families earning $16,000 to $25,000 a year would be eligible for $250 under a Basic Educational Opportunity Grant program which would be increased from $2.1 billion to $3.1 billion. The maximum grant available for low-income students would also increase.

—A $165 million increase in the work-study program would expand the program to include more than a million students, one-third of whom would come from families earning more than $16,000 a year.

—Eligibility for guaranteed student loans would be extended to students from families with incomes up to $45,000 a year and the budget for that program would increase from $540 million to $867 million.

Michael Novak, director of financial aid at K-State, said he also prefers the administration's proposal over a tuition tax credit.

"It would get aid to the families that do need it, the middle income group," he said. "It would keep the money in the hands of the students."

"The tax credit may provide relief to the family, but that payment could just as easily go for the next car payment as the student's education."

NOVAK estimated about 15 to 20 percent of K-State's student population are from families with $16,000 to $25,000 in annual income and would therefore gain under the alternative proposal.

The increase in work-study funds is especially significant, he said. K-State has seen a loss of 150 slots under the program since the 1975-76 school year, despite a $40,000 increase in funds, because of an increase in the minimum wage.

Keys said testimony before the Ways and Means Committee during the past two weeks has been overwhelmingly against the tuition tax credit, and predicts the committee will reject the idea.

"I know the members I've talked to prefer grants and direct aid to students," she said.

COORDINATOR APPLICATIONS ARE NOW AVAILABLE

ARTS, COFFEEHOUSE, CONCERTS, FEATURE FILMS, EXECUTIVE, KALEIDOSCOPE, TRAVEL, ISSUES & IDEAS, OUTDOOR RECREATION, PROMOTIONS

Arts and Crafts Fair, Emerson Lake and Palmer, Bryan Bowers, a photography contest, the movie Rocky, hiking in the Ozarks and a ski trip to Colorado. What do all these things have in common? They are all programs sponsored by the K-State Union Program Council. Union Program Council is an exclusively volunteer organization composed of students with an interest in serving the university community by sponsoring cultural, educational, and recreational programs. UPC provides volunteer student workers with a real-life laboratory to test their abilities through program conception, execution and evaluation. Committee coordinators strive to initiate and guide these programs while developing their own leadership skills.

Applications are now available in the Activities Center, 3rd floor of the K-State Union. The filing deadline is noon on February 24, 1978. All applications are to be returned to the Activities Center. No applications will be accepted after this date.

Idea #2

Next party serve some great choices:

Mohave

(Manhattan's dry alternative)
8 to 10 servings

- 1 1/2 cups sugar
- 4 cups water
- 1/2 cup bottled lemon juice
- 1/2 cup bottled lime juice
- 2 bottles (12 oz.) ginger ale
- Mint sprigs
- Lime slices

Heat and stir sugar and water in sauce pan until sugar is dissolved, cool to lukewarm. Stir in lemon and lime juices and pour into large pitcher. Mix in ginger ale, pour into tall glasses filled with ice. Garnish with sprig of mint and lime slice.

Houdini Cocktail

(The alcohol has escaped)
2 servings

- 1/2 pint strawberry ice cream
- 1 cup milk
- 4 teaspoons bottled grenadine syrup
- Whole strawberries

Beat ice cream and milk until foamy-thick in blender, pour into glasses. Pour 2 teaspoons grenadine syrup from spoon down inside each glass (forms a bright crimson layer at the bottom). Garnish with strawberries.

Carioca Fizz

(Irish Coffee's booze-less cousin)
2 servings

- 1/2 teaspoon instant coffee
- 1/2 teaspoon sweetened chocolate flavored drink mix
- 1/2 teaspoon sugar
- 1/2 cup water
- 1 bottle (10-oz.) bitter-lemon carbonated beverage
- 4 orange slices
- 4 maraschino cherries

Combine instant coffee, chocolate flavored drink mix, sugar, and water in a cup, stir until sugar is fully dissolved. Pour over ice (2 glasses), fill with bitter-lemon, garnish with orange slices and cherries.

Forget him Peach—he's too old for you!

Be a super host. It's easy—just serve choices. Great drinks without alcohol, like these. Cut 'em out and include them in your next party, for variety—a change of pace—and a better chance for guests to return home safe!

Corrections bill heads for House

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill to establish a community corrections program in Kansas won committee approval Thursday and went to the House for consideration by its full membership.

The measure is the keystone of a program recommended following a summer-long study by a special legislative committee on corrections.

It also is focus of differences between Gov. Robert Bennett and the executive branch of government on one hand and the Legislature, particularly the Democratic-controlled House, on the other.

Bennett has repeatedly recommended construction of a new medium security prison. The special corrections committee vetoed the idea of a new prison, and called for several alternative actions, including community corrections programs.

In its report, the special committee said its recommendations "will provide a new direction for the future of the Kansas corrections system...will enhance the quality of justice while coping with the increasing problem of crime, and will accomplish the objectives in a fiscally sound fashion."

UAB opens the door for 'Deep Throat' showing

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

The Union Activities Board (UAB) decided Friday it will allow the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) to present the movie "Deep Throat" in the K-State Union.

The movie is part of an ACLU fund-raising project and will be shown in conjunction with a panel discussion on obscenity and the First Amendment.

The movie will be shown at 7 and 9 p.m. Wednesday and 3 and 5 p.m. Thursday in the Union Forum Hall.

ONE concern of UAB was if the film was necessary to the fund-raising project.

"Just a discussion on the First Amendment is bland. You need something to think about," said Ron Nelson, president of the ACLU student chapter.

"It is essential in talking about the First Amendment," said Judy Davis, chairman of the Manhattan ACLU chapter and student grievance counselor.

"Nobody will question their right until they (the rights) are threatened," Davis said.

Another concern of UAB was the legality of showing an X-rated movie.

"It is not our intent to do anything clearly illegal," said Pat Bosco, assistant dean of students.

Though the Union Program Council (UPC) isn't involved with the presentation, the ACLU will follow UPC policy by allowing only K-State students, faculty, staff and families to attend the show.

A UNIFORMED officer, hired by the ACLU, will check IDs at the shows.

State law provides no one under 18 years old can be allowed to view an X-rated movie.

The ACLU will also submit a copy of the film contract before the showing and an audit of the receipts of the film after the showing to the UAB.

UAB offers professional assistance to any group that enters into a contract to make sure everything in the contract is in order.

Surprise witness testifies to a previous A-dorm rape

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

A surprise witness for the state told a packed Riley County District Court room that she was forced to have sex with one of the defendants charged in the rape of a coed at K-State's athletic dormitory last March 30.

The woman, a 19 year-old K-State student from Beloit, said Nate Jones and another man forced her to have intercourse with her in Jones' room two or three weeks before the March 30 rape for which Jones is being tried.

THE WOMAN said she did not want to testify but was encouraged to by County Attorney Dennis Sauter.

The defense brought its case to a close with the testimony of the three defendants: Mike Woodfin, Topeka; Nate Jones, Chicago, and Ken Lovely, Dallas.

When Woodfin took the stand he testified he and Jones left Jerome Holiwell's room, in which the rape allegedly occurred, and went to their own rooms for the rest of the night.

Holiwell originally was charged with rape but was granted immunity in exchange for testimony against the defendants.

According to Holiwell's testimony Wednesday, only Woodfin left the room but shortly returned to take part in allegedly raping the victim with Jones, Lovely, and himself. He said Kirk Boykin also was present but did not have intercourse with the victim.

BOYKIN who pleaded guilty Tuesday to conspiracy to commit rape, said the defendants were in the room but said he saw no one have intercourse with the victim before he left the room.

Eight killed after derailment spills gas across highway

YOUNGSTOWN, Fla. (AP)—A freight train derailed near this Florida Panhandle community early Sunday, rupturing a tank car and spewing a cloud of deadly chlorine across a busy highway. Authorities said eight persons were killed and at least 67 were hospitalized.

"It was instant death," said Al Smith, an emergency troubleshooter for the Environmental Protection Agency from Atlanta. "The kind of death we're talking about, it literally burns your lungs up."

AUTOMOBILE engines apparently stalled as the the chlorine cut off the oxygen needed for combustion. Cars careened into roadside ditches. Some motorists fled into a swamp near the tracks, only to be enveloped by the searing greenish-yellow cloud.

Bay County Sheriff's Deputy Tom Loftin said he was driving to the scene before he knew what had happened, when he found people

Defendant implicated in second rape

Jones said he left with Woodfin, went to his room and went to bed after short visit to Holiwell's room.

Ken Lovely drank beer with a friend in the athletic dorm parking lot then went to bed. He said he got up to go to the bathroom and smelled incense coming from Holiwell's room. Assuming the incense was used to mask the odor of marijuana, he went into the room to get some.

Lovely said he saw five or six persons in the dark room and could tell they were all black men. He said he saw one white woman on the bed with one man on top of her. The others, he said, were standing or sitting in different parts of the room.

"When I was in the room there was not a sound," he said.

He also said no one was holding the woman down.

Lovely said the only persons he recognized in the room were Holiwell and Boykin. He said

Holiwell asked if he wanted to participate in the activity.

"He asked me if I was going to get in on the train," he said. Lovely said he declined.

A "train" is a woman willingly having sex with several men sequentially.

LOVELY said he had seen three or four trains but never participated in any.

Lovely denied he told the police who questioned him about his activities that he never got up after going to bed that night.

Bryce Romaine, K-State security and traffic patrol officer, recalled to the stand by Sauter, said Lovely testified to him that he never got up after going to bed on the night of the rape.

Sauter also recalled the victim to the stand.

She said she had a meeting with Ellis Rainsberger, former K-State football coach, three days after the incident.

She said he already had a list with the names of seven or eight persons who may have been involved in the incident.

Rainsberger testified Thursday that he had no list of names prior to his meeting with the victim.

Both lawyers will present final arguments Tuesday before the case goes to the jury.

Derailment forces evacuation of town as gas leaves eight dead on highway stumbling along the highway, vomiting and screaming for help.

"I didn't really feel it too much, but it had a punch to it," Loftin said. "It was like smelling Clorox, maybe a thousand times worse."

About 2,500 residents of an 80-square-mile area of rural North Florida were evacuated and told it would not be safe to return before Monday. The Florida Highway Patrol blocked U.S. 231 where it parallels the short railroad line between Dothan, Ala., and the popular Gulf of Mexico resorts at Panama City.

THE HIGHWAY was blanketed for hours after the 1:30 a.m. CST derailment by the cloud that escaped from the ruptured tank car about 200 yards away.

About 47 cars and five locomotives of the 140-car freight were derailed, police said.

Russell Gober of the National Transportation Safety Board said it appeared the derailment was caused by a broken rail, but he added that was a tentative conclusion.

The dead were apparently all young adults or teen-agers, said officials at the three hospitals where victims were taken. An admitting officer at one hospital said some of the youths had been raccoon hunting in swamps near the track when the choking cloud swept over them.

THE EIGHTH victim was not located until late Sunday afternoon, when searchers in a helicopter spotted a lifeless form in a swampy field across the highway from the wreckage.

Florida Highway Patrol Lt. O.J. Gilbert said discovery of the dead girl meant all missing persons had been accounted for.

It was the second Southern disaster involving a derailed freight train in less than 48 hours. In Waverly, Tenn., nine persons died and scores were injured when a propane-loaded railroad car exploded Friday, one day after the train had derailed.

A third derailment occurred later Sunday near Milan, Tenn., and authorities evacuated persons from an area about a mile around the wrecked freight after a tank car began leaking caustic fumes.

Leukemia Radiothon falls short in attempt to reach $10,000 goal

Fund raising attempts by the Leukemia Society of America fell short of their expected goal during their 30-hour Radiothon Saturday and Sunday at Pottsdorf Auditorium at Cico Park.

According to Larry Brunner, chairman of the Leukemia Society's Radiothon, the original goal was to raise $10,000 for Leukemia victims in Riley County.

Brunner said that by Sunday afternoon, with donations totaling only $4,200, he realized the goal would not be reached. However, he did expect the donations to reach the $6,000 mark.

The Leukemia Society was aided in their fund raising by the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity. Kevin Dwyer, chairman of the fraternity's social committee said donations were taken in the form of pledges and cash at the K-State Union and at Cico Park.

Dwyer said the fraternity raised money by selling pairs of hermit crabs from Florida and T-shirts at the Union.

The fraternity raised $900 for the Leukemia Society through those sales.

Twenty-five local groups, ranging from solo guitarists to rock groups, provided the entertainment for the Radiothon.

Proposal goes to miners

WASHINGTON—United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller, President Carter and Labor Secretary Ray Marshall remained cautiously optimistic Sunday as a new proposal to end the nation's coal strike was being sent to the miners for ratification.

But a number of union officials in West Virginia, a key state in the ratification process, were not optimistic about the chances for adoption of the contract. Hopes of ending the 83-day-old strike dimmed even more when UMW members rejected a similar contract with the independent Pittsburgh & Midway Mining Co. on Saturday.

Miners in four of the five UMW locals affected by the P&M agreement voted 357-to-163 against the proposed contract. Several of the men said they voted against the contract because they wanted to see whether the national agreement was better.

Park arrives in capital

WASHINGTON—Tongsun Park, vowing to tell the "complete truth" to Congress about alleged South Korean influence buying, arrived in Washington Sunday afternoon after a 1½-year absence.

Park, accompanied by Justice Department attorneys and surrounded by 20 U.S. and Korean security agents, arrived in the capital from Seattle. The trip marked the culmination of a painstaking U.S. effort to return the millionaire rice dealer to this country.

He had been scheduled to fly from Honolulu to Chicago and on to Washington. Authorities did not announce the change in flight plans until shortly before he left Honolulu for Seattle.

"I hope as a result of my giving my side of the story as well as I can recollect how things did happen, I hope things will come to a happy ending," Park said when he arrived.

Some surgery unnecessary

NEW YORK—A study of elective surgery patients found that in one of four cases where a second opinion was sought, the first doctor's recommendation for surgery was not upheld. The findings seem to bolster fears that many operations are performed unnecessarily.

The preliminary results were released Sunday by Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Greater New York and were based on 1,500 cases in which subscribers obtained consultation from a second physician.

Of 353 obstetrical-gynecological cases studied, 28.6 percent of the initial recommendations were not confirmed by the consultant. Of 253 orthopedic cases, the need for surgery was not confirmed in 33.2 percent of the cases. Of 229 ear, nose and throat cases, 26.6 percent of the recommendations were not confirmed.

Alabama official investigated

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The arrest of a financial adviser to state Treasurer Melba Till Allen has added a bizarre link to a chain of woes besetting the beleaguered state official, whose far-flung business dealings are under investigation by a grand jury.

The Montgomery County jury is investigating a report by the State Ethics Commission that there is "probable cause to believe" the 44-year-old treasurer violated Alabama's ethics law in her personal dealings with banks holding state deposits.

It is Mrs. Allen who decides where state funds are deposited in low interest paying accounts.

No one has ever been prosecuted under the state's 1973 ethics act, which as amended two years later carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

China leader urges military readiness

TOKYO (AP)—Standing beneath huge portraits of himself and Mao Tse-tung, Communist Party Chairman Hua Kuo-feng opened China's fifth National People's Congress on Sunday by urging military readiness for a takeover of Taiwan.

Hua said the 3.5-million-member People's Liberation Army "must make all the preparations necessary for the liberation of Taiwan," Peking's official Hsinhua news agency reported in a dispatch received here.

Hsinhua's excerpts from Hua's three and one-half hour speech did not amplify on the reference to Taiwan. He and other Peking leaders have called repeatedly for the "liberation" of the island from the Nationalist Chinese who fled there after the Communist Chinese victory in 1949. But they generally have played down the potential military character of such a takeover.

Chinese insistence that Washington withdraw its recognition and defense pact with Taiwan has been the main obstacle to establishment of U.S.-Chinese diplomatic relations.

Hua said the struggle against "the two hegemonist powers, the Soviet Union and the United States, and in particular against Soviet social-imperialism, is on an upsurge higher than ever before."

But he indicated indirectly that China would continue its policy of improving relations with America and the West.

A television broadcast seen here of the congress' opening showed the 3,456 delegates and their guests applauding while the smiling Hua entered Peking's Great Hall of the People.

Workers' Comp defective

The Kansas legislature is enacting "special legislation" to compensate the parents of two park rangerettes who were slain while on the job in two separate incidents.

If the bill (SB 499) is passed, each set of parents will receive $25,000 plus funeral expenses.

SB 499 has been passed by the Senate and is now in the House Ways and Means Committee awaiting action.

The bill should be passed. Although money can not bring back the dead, it can lessen some of the personal hardship which accompanies such a tragedy.

SPECIAL legislation is necessary, in this case, because of defective law. The Senate Ways and Means Committee sought to apply the Workers' Compensation rule to the rangerette cases, noting that they were killed while on the job.

This "rule" would have meant that a maximum death benefit of $1,000 be paid to the parents of the slain girls. This "writing off" of human life could only be taken as an insult, and not as compensation.

But this is what many families must face in Kansas upon the job-related death of a son or daughter. Because this is Kansas law.

NOT ALL families are provided with special legislation to help out.

In July of 1977, the Workers' Compensation death benefit for unmarried workers (with no dependents) was raised to $2,000. It is still an unrealistic sum.

Especially when you consider that upon the death of the worker, the insurance company handling the claim sends the next of kin $2,000, and then turns around and sends a check for $5,000 to the State Workers' Compensation Fund. This is required by law.

This $5,000 payment has the appearance of a "bounty." This law is unfair and barbaric.

It must and will be changed.

Sprinklings of absurdity

It's been a long time coming and if it (warm weather) doesn't come fast, I'm going to lose my sanity. I speak for anyone who has survived this winter and has sought the solace in America's mind-raper—television.

The sacred box is the subject of many studies, stories and analyses by learned and unlearned alike. But the topic usually centers around the television shows and movies.

I'm not anti-TV. There have been many days when the temperature outside has persuaded me it would be healthier to watch reruns of The Lucy Show than to venture outside.

And television has provided America with many informative and entertaining shows of whose content is ideal for small talk with strangers and people you wish were strangers.

But this is not the place to criticize TV Guide.

MY COMPLAINT with the video box is the disease which afflicts the airwaves every 11.2 minutes, otherwise known as the dreaded commercial.

Commercials can be lumped into two obvious categories—national and local. Money is the main factor which determines what seems to be a national spot, when in reality it is intended for a local audience.

The national commercials have a certain air of affluence. The professional actors are all upwardly mobile, good-looking and depicted as ulcer-free as they stand by over-priced automobiles with UFOs flying about.

If anything, the national commercials are creative. There is the youth crowd which appears to eat amphetamines for breakfast and catch a buzz from colas. And who can forget the couple who sits around without cracking a smile, and smelling onions doused in mouthwash? Like I say, national commercials are creative.

NOT HAVING the budgets to pay for good-looking actors in order to depict youth and sex, the local commercials resort to the more extreme measures; the worse the commercial, the greater the product recognition.

Take the car commercials. Grown men flying around in pajamas, lispng salesmen burning money, ladies chasing car dealers around a stock pen and off-key troubadours singing about dogs and Fords leads one to believe that car dealers would be good candidates for a strong dose of marijuana.

The furniture commercials for local audiences are another prime example of local lunacy. In the Midwest, the honest approach is used to sell a couch. The camera unsteadily pans across the plastic divans while the owner barks about easy credit terms which he fails to mention will double the price.

THE LOCAL commercials are now trying to emulate their national brothers by the incorporation of sex. Even this hallowed diversion is sprinkled with absurdity. This is obvious in a wig commercial which promises bald men that petroleum protein will make women with monstrous mammeries go into heat.

Not all local advertisers are hurting for money. There is one religious establishment which uses the slogan "A church with a place for you." This is not surprising because the nine-year-old building has had two additions built. Who says money isn't sacred?

Everyone knows commercials are an essential part of television revenues, be they local or national propaganda. Everyone except public TV.

Letters to the editor

Be a hero, give blood

Editor,

An open letter to all K-State students, faculty and staff.

Once again, as in past semesters, we all have the opportunity to become heroes.

Donating blood makes you special!

The Wichita Regional Red Cross Bloodmobile visits Derby Food

Center's library on Feb. 28, March 1, 2 and 3.

K-State fee cards entitle students and their immediate families to receive blood without obligation for replacement for one calendar year beginning with the date of fee payment.

A guarantee like that makes you feel pretty secure, right? K-State Circle K and the other campus service organizations that work with the Bloodmobile think so.

But in order for the guarantee to work, K-State must meet its goal of 1000 pints donated each semester.

If you have not donated blood before, do so this semester.

If you have been a hero in the past, we will look forward to seeing you donate blood again this time.

Remember, giving blood is giving the gift of life.

Students not 'rude' to Ford; just trying to make class

Editor,

Mr. Todd Killian observed that people who left early from Gerald Ford's speech were rude.

I, after questioning several of the people who were leaving, would like to observe that Mr. Killian does not know all the facts.

Regardless of official University policy, some classes and tests were not cancelled or rescheduled to allow for Ford's Lecture.

A protest against those who left the fieldhouse in a quiet and orderly manner is unfounded.

I only hope President Ford was told beforehand about the inevitable exodus at 11:20 a.m.

The students were not at fault and did not deserve criticism from Mr. Todd Killian.

Firefighters taught life-saving means to assist victims of coronary attacks

By CLIFF BERNATH

Heart attacks kill 650,000 persons every year and 350,000 of those deaths occur away from medical assistance.

The K-State fire department student firefighters completed a 12-hour course Saturday on how to save the lives of heart attack victims.

Cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) is a combination of artificial respiration and artificial circulation which should be started immediately as an emergency procedure when cardiac arrest occurs. The procedure should be administered by those properly trained to do so, according to the American National Red Cross pamphlet on CPR.

Frank Duncan, head of the fire department, requested the course to insure that his firefighters, both men and women, were properly trained to do so.

"CPR is most effective in the first few minutes (after the occurrence of a heart attack)," Duncan said. "That's one reason why it's important for firemen and police to have this training. You just can't wait for the ambulance."

THE CLASS, which began Feb. 11, was taught by two Red Cross authorized volunteer CPR instructors.

One of the instructors, Brenda Merryman, is a clerk-typist I at Farrell Library. She has been a CPR instructor since September 1977.

The other instructor, Jim Green, sophomore in medical technology, has been an instructor for two years.

CPR is used when cardiac arrest occurs. Cardiac arrest is characterized by stoppage of circulation and breathing and the disappearance of the pulse.

Recognition of the symptoms of heart attack is an essential part of the training.

"Pain may be the most prominent symptom of heart attack," the American Heart Association pamphlet said. "This particular pain, usually in the center of the chest behind the breastbone, may be accompanied by pallor, weakness, nausea, sweating, shortness of breath and often a feeling of impending disaster. The pain may radiate to the arm, neck or jaw."

CPR TRAINING emphasizes immediate action once cardiac arrest occurs. There is a 98 percent success rate if CPR is administered within the first minute after the attack. The success rate drops to 87 percent within two minutes, 74 percent within three minutes, and 25 percent within six minutes.

Between six and ten minutes, brain damage is probable. After 10 minutes, it is almost certain.

CPR involves some risk to the victim, even if properly administered.

Some complications which can occur include fracture of the breastbone, lung contusions (bruises), separation of the rib cartilage, collapse of the lung, lacerations of the liver, and blood clots caused by fatty particles carried in the bloodstream.

"CPR should only be applied by a trained person," Merryman said. An untrained person "could cause more problems."

Spring Bloodmobile drives for donation of 1,000 pints

The average human adult's body contains 10 to 12 pints of blood. All the Red Cross wants is one pint — one pint may save someone's life.

The spring blood drive for the American Red Cross, will begin Tuesday. Anyone in the K-State area may donate blood from 9 a.m. to 2:45 p.m. daily until March 3 at the Derby Food Center Library.

Last November, 1,367 pints of blood were donated during the K-State drive, setting a new donation record in Kansas. The goal set for the spring blood drive is 1,000 pints. The blood is given to the American Red Cross blood bank in Wichita.

Students and their families, and K-State employees and their families earn the privilege of receiving blood from the Wichita bank without obligation for replacement because of the annual campus donation of more than 2,000 pints.

The drive is sponsored by the K-State Circle K Club, a Kiwanis student service organization.

The two Manhattan Kiwanis clubs will award plaques to the fraternity, sorority, residence hall and cooperative house with the highest percentage of their members giving blood, said Carolyn Lipscomb, sophomore in nuclear engineering and blood drive chairman. A display board in the Union will show the day-to-day progress of living group donations.

LAST year's winner was Marlatt Hall. Smith Scholarship house and Phi Gamma Delta fraternity tied for second place.

Lipscomb said some donors last fall were delayed waiting in long lines because of a shortage of volunteer workers.

"There weren't enough people to record donor histories. The Red Cross nurses have trained several more volunteers this time to speed things up," Lipscomb said.

Donors may sign up for appointments from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the K-State Union, and in Kramer or Derby Food Center from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. today.

Donors without appointments will be welcome at the Derby Library, but priority will be given to those with appointments, Lipscomb said.

Blood donors should weigh at least 110 pounds. If individuals are under the age of 17, they will need a letter from their parents consenting to the donation; donors over 65 years should present a letter from their physician.

Before giving blood, each donor will have his temperature, hemoglobin and blood pressure checked. The donation procedure takes about an hour.

UFM launches fund-raising for house remodeling project

The University for Man (UFM) has received approximately $1,500 in donations since its fund-raising drive began two weeks ago.

UFM needs $20,000 to pay the costs of renovating the former Straube Scholarship house, the organization's home since October, said Joe Rippetoe, director of the drive.

Renovations include designing a new kitchen and pottery studio and altering the house to comply with fire codes, he said.

Rippetoe said UFM received fewer donations than expected during spring course registration because of the weather.

He said he hopes the remaining funds can be raised in one year, but the drive will continue until all debts are paid.

"We don't want to spend the next 10 years trying to raise funds," he said.

The rest of the money will have to be obtained through fund-raising events and requests mailed to businesses and individuals in the community.

Rippetoe said all contributions to UFM are tax-deductable because it is a non-profit organization.

Handicapped awareness goal

New group to request Senate funds

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

Students for Handicapped Concerns (SHC), a new organization on campus, will request $2,695 in tentative allocations from Student Senate this spring for operating and activity expenses.

Representatives of SHC will go before senate to request funds for the first time March 9 during senate hearings for tentative allocations for funded groups.

Shah's attempts to 'Westernize' Iran cause of rioting

TABRIZ, Iran (AP)—Riots a week ago in this city near the Soviet frontier have brought to the surface deeply-rooted animosity among Moslem leaders toward the Shah of Iran. Disorders could erupt again soon, informants say.

Government officials say the rioting Feb. 18 here in Iran's second largest city left nine persons dead and 125 injured. The cause of the deaths and injuries was not officially reported.

Moslem leaders claim, however, that security forces killed about 300 men, a figure that could not be confirmed by independent observers.

DAMAGE to government buildings, banks and businesses amounted to $2.5 million, government officials said. About 350 persons, mostly young men, were reported arrested.

"The total damage may not amount to much, but the ferocity in which the rioters aimed their vengeance at government buildings, decorated with emblems of Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's reign, was frightening," said one resident of this city of almost one million population.

Believed to be at the root of the troubles is the opposition of conservative religious leaders to the shah's efforts to Westernize and modernize this traditional Moslem society.

Hardest hit in the rioting was the government's Rastakhiz Party headquarters building. Every window in the building was broken and rioters attempted to set it afire until police, backed by army troops, arrived.

A rock was thrown through the first-floor window of the Iran-American Cultural Society.

Informed sources said demonstrators shouted "Death to the shah!" as they marched up and down Reza Pahlavi Avenue smashing bank windows and attacking moviehouses, hotels and shops.

Donna Gore, president of SHC, said the organization needed the money for various operating expenses and for expenses for activities and projects the group plans to sponsor.

Gore said the goal of the group's activities and projects is to create a public awareness of the problems encountered by handicapped persons on campus.

"That's a very big one. If we can get people to realize it, then half the battle is won," she said.

SOME of the activities SHC plans to sponsor include an awareness rally and a wheelchair marathon, Gore said.

The organization would also serve as a communication link between University administrators and handicapped students and would have social and recreational activities for handicapped students.

"As of now, there's nothing especially geared for handicapped students," Gore said.

Gore said the group has relied on private donations and money from members to operate, but said senate funding would be necessary for activities and projects.

"If we really want something bad enough, it will have to come from our own pockets," she said.

GORE said she is confident senate will allocate SHC some money to use for their program.

Susan Angle, financial advisor for Student Governing Association (SGA), said funding for new organizations is a senate decision but other funded groups will be affected by a new group's funding.

"If they want to fund some new groups, they can't continue to fund the groups they are funding now in the same amount."

In first indoor match

Tennis team loses opener to NU

By JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

The K-State tennis team lost its first meet of the season to Nebraska in Ahearn Field House Saturday afternoon, 31-13, before a crowd of 200 people.

The match was the first indoor team tennis meet in the history of K-State tennis, combining the men's and women's teams. Scoring was based on total games won and not on the traditional system of sets won. The first player to score four points in a game won the game.

After trailing three games to one, K-State's men's doubles team of Jeff Hall and John Cope battled back to take a 6-5 lead against Nebraska's Jeff Schmahl and Dan Sloboth.

THE NEBRASKA duo then tied the score at 6-6 forcing a nine-point tiebreaker. In the tiebreaker Hall and Cope took a 3-1 lead, but they couldn't hold it and lost the set 7-6, despite the excellent play of Hall.

"I felt the men's doubles would be our closest match," Steve Snodgrass, head tennis coach, said. "Jeff (Hall) and John (Cope) have been playing especially well lately."

Nebraska's Schmahl utilized a powerful serve to defeat John Mathies, 6-3, in the men's singles.

Joyce McVicker of Nebraska overwhelmed freshman Candie Gwin, 6-1, in the women's singles.

K-State's women's doubles team of Pam Boggs and Mary Lou Kultgen was shut out, 6-0, by McVicker and Sue Sloboth.

The mixed doubles team of K-Staters Greg Last and Laurie Friesenborg lost, 6-3, to Nebraska's brother-sister Sloboth team, despite fine play by Last.

"I felt it was a success and we'll definitely have more team tennis events next year," Snodgrass said.

'Cats boom Sooners

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

There must be something about playing the Oklahoma Sooners in a big game that sparks the K-State basketball team.

One year ago the 'Cats defeated the Sooners in the final game of the Big Eight regular season, 68-55, in Ahearn Field House to claim the Big Eight title.

Saturday afternoon the 'Cats once again beat the Sooners, 65-54, in Norman, but this time it was for a home court berth in the first round of the Big Eight post-season tournament.

With the victory the 'Cats moved their overall record to 16-10, but more importantly, they moved their conference record to 7-7, into a tie for fourth place with the Sooners. Since the 'Cats have prevailed over Oklahoma twice during the regular season they will receive the home court berth.

K-STATE WAS in control for most of the game, giving the Sooners something to worry about in preparation for the next meeting Tuesday night in Ahearn.

Wildcat head coach Jack Harman, who has shuffled his starting line-up several times this season, started Dean Danner at forward and moved Rolando Blackman to guard in place of Scott Langton.

After starting sluggishly, the 'Cats moved to a 28-21 halftime lead.

The 'Cats had Curtis Redding to thank for their early first half lead, as Redding, who finished the game with 15 points, connected on some aerial bombs to finish the first half with 10 points.

The Sooners cut the 'Cats seven point lead to three early in the second half, but that's when Mike Evans took over the Wildcat's attack.

EVANS, HELD to only four points in the first half, ripped the nets in the second half for 14 points and finished as K-State's leading scorer with 18.

The 'Cats, who have been out rebounded repeatedly this season by opponents, beat the taller Sooners on the boards, 35-22.

John McCullough, the game's leading scorer, pumped in 21 points and Al Beal added 14 to lead the Sooners attack.

The loss dropped the Sooners overall record to 14-12.

Arm wrestlers take championship

Amid bursts of breath, gritting of teeth and the thrust of legs, the intramural arm wrestling championship took place Sunday afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

Though none of the participants had seriously trained for the event, the excitement of competition was present.

The method used for the competition was not the usual wrist-to-wrist style. Instead the International Arm Wrestling Table was used. The device consists of a board with bars on each side to grip and a peg for the opposite hand to grasp.

"That machine is no fair. It hinders you," said Brian Glotzbach, winner of the men's 151-to-190 pound right-handed division.

Other winners were Sandy Keltz in the women's right-hand, Ann King in the women's left-hand, Brent Adams in the men's 150-pound and below, right-hand; Kelly Campbell in the men's 190-pound and above, right-hand; John Couchman in the men's 150-pound and below, left-hand; and Dennis Bever in the men's 151-to-191 pound, left-hand.

TURN IT UP.

If you're thinking about buying a loudspeaker, think about this:

You can't make an intelligent choice unless you test a lot of different ones. You've got to challenge a speaker. Ask it to do difficult things. For instance: Turn it up. Way up. Do you like the sound? Is it clean? Is it clear? Does it hum or splatter? Loudness magnifies the imperfections that will scar your subconscious at regular listening levels. Now:

TURN IT DOWN.

Way down—to the edge of silence. Are all the sounds of the music still there, or does it sound like half the band went out for a smoke?

Now think about this: Warner Brothers, Capitol, Elektra and MGM use JBL speakers to mix, master and play back their music. You know why? Now you're thinking.

'Cats fifth in Big Eight track meet

By FRANK GARDNER
Contributing Writer

The K-State men's track team finished fifth in the Big Eight Indoor Track Championships in Lincoln, Neb. last weekend.

The standing room only crowd at Nebraska's Sports Complex witnessed several great performances, including a world record in the 300-yard dash by Oklahoma's William Snoddy. Snoddy beat out former record holder Clifford Wiley by one one-hundredth of a second in 29.47 seconds as Wiley fell at the finish line and broke his left arm. K-State's Willie Major, a freshman, was fourth in the race with a 30.82.

KU finished first with 93.6 points. Nebraska was second with 87.2. Missouri had 82.6 for third. Oklahoma scored 77 for fourth and K-State was fifth with 64 points.

A TREMENDOUS roar went up from the crowd as K-State's Ed DeLashmutter passed Nebraska's Harold Stelzer with three laps to go in the mile run. The runners continued to duel each until DeLashmutter pulled away with an all-out sprint on the final lap to finish in 4:06.31 for K-State's only victory of the meet.

Freshman K-Stater Bill Tanner appeared to have won the 440 over Missouri's Dele Udo, but Udo was awarded first place after examination of the finish photograph. Tanner was given a time of 48.15, one one-hundredth of a second behind Udo, and .42 seconds faster than the old Big Eight record in the event.

Tanner qualified for the NCAA championship indoor meet to be held at Detroit in two weeks, as did the K-State mile relay.

The team of Ray Hanf, Willie Major, Isaac Marks and Tanner ran 3:14.78 for fifth place, without senior Darnell Washington, who was injured in the preliminaries of the 600-yard run.

"Ike (Marks) ran a good race on short notice," Coach Mike Ross said.

DELASHMUTT also qualified for the NCAA meet in the 1,000-yard run with a 2:10.2 in Friday night's preliminaries.

In preliminary action Willie Major was disqualified in the 60-yard high hurdles. Favorite Jeff Lee of Nebraska flinched in the set position, drawing Major out of the starting blocks, Major said.

Doug Rnauss finished second and Ron Nofsinger third in the pole vault behind KU's Tad Scales. Scales had a vault of 16-feet, six inches, while Knauss and Nofsinger each cleared 16-feet.

Vince Parrette finished second in the triple jump, fifth in the long jump and sixth in the 60-yard low hurdles, despite a pulled muscle in his right thigh. Parrette hopped most of the 60-yard hurdle race on one foot to pick up one point for sixth place.

Senior Doug Weber, running with a broken knuckle on his right hand, managed fifth place in the two-mile with an 8:58.7.

Jumping with an injured back, Kevin Sloan was third in the long jump at 24-feet, eight inches. Keith Linck finished sixth in the triple jump with a leap of 47-feet, six inches, jumping with a sore ankle and a bruised heel.

Hoover wins in Mexico

Aggeville tavern owner Jim Hoover, despite a severe cold, scored a first round knockout over Carlos Hernandez of Mexico Saturday night in Matamoros, Mex.

Hoover, who raised his professional boxing record to 5-0, scored the knockout after only 51 seconds had elapsed after flooring Hernandez three times. Hernandez record fell to 33-13.

"I came out smoking," Hoover said. "I started throwing punches at his manager even before Hernandez came into the ring."

"I needed a psych job because I knew I couldn't go six rounds with this cold."

Hoover said he used an overhand right to knock the Mexican down the first two times and scored the knockout with a left hook to the temple.

"I felt good," Hoover said. "I punched him hard. The second time I hit him I ripped my glove. I was surprised he got up after that."

Hoover said he will now begin preparations for a fight with Bob Young of Denver. The fight is scheduled to be held in Las Vegas, but no date has been set.

'Cats maul WSU

WICHITA — The K-State women's basketball team finished undefeated in conference play Saturday night in Wichita, by defeating the Wichita State Shockers, 78-33.

Brenda Mauck, 6-1 center, scored 16 points and led the 'Cats in rebounding with eight. Mauck went four-for-six from the field and eight-for-10 at the line.

Gayla Williams was the game's leading scorer with 17 points, while Eileen Feeney added 12.

Scoring six points apiece were Tami Johnson, Margo Jones, Kristi Short and Nancy Nibarger.

K-State's pressure defense forced the Shockers into 39 turnovers.

The 'Cats shot 33-for-62 from the field for a 53 percent shooting average and 12-for-16 at the line. Wichita hit 28 percent from the field and 33 percent from the free throw line.

Singer Kenny Starr, native Kansan, entertains Block and Bridle crowd

By BECKY DOUDICAN
Collegian Reporter

Life in the music business began at an early age for country western singer Kenny Starr, who performed at the K-State Block and

Kenny Starr

Bridle Horseshow Friday and Saturday.

Starr, who grew up in Burlingame, said he started singing in nightclubs when he was nine years old.

"Our group was called 'Little Kenny and the Imperials,'" Starr said. "You sure learn a lot when you start at that age."

Starr's big break came in 1971 when he won a talent contest sponsored by a Wichita radio station.

"After I performed, I got a standing ovation," he said. "I think that every aunt, uncle and cousin I had was there."

AFTER the contest, Starr was asked if he was interested in doing a show with Conway Twitty and Loretta Lynn.

Starr traveled with Lynn's road show for four and one half years. On one of these trips he met his wife Bonnie, an airline stewardess. They now have a 2½-year-old daughter, Amanda.

Starr's first big hit was the song

"Blind Man in the Bleachers," a true story about a blindman who attended his son's football games.

Starr and his family live on a 65-acre farm 20 miles from Nashville.

"The only thing we raise is water," Starr said.

STARR said he often visits Kansas on business trips and he tries to get away and do a "little fishing" when he can.

"This is the first university function I've ever worked," Starr said, "I feel honored. Growing up in Burlingame I always heard about K-State and, excuse me, KU."

Some of the songs Starr performed during the horseshow were "Hold Tight," which has recently been on the country western chart, "Blind Man in the Bleachers," and his new single "The Rest of My Life," which will be released March 6.

HEW grant to parents of retarded

OMAHA, Neb. (AP)—The Greater Omaha Association for Retarded Citizens has received an $82,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare to set up "pilot parent" programs in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri.

Under the program, parents who have a handicapped child help other parents of children with similar handicaps, said Glenda Davis, a program staff member.

Since the program began seven years ago in Omaha, 450 families have been aided, she said. Currently there are 40 active volunteer couples.

Haldeman 'exaggerates' in book

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP)—Former CIA director George Bush says he believes allegations made by former White House aide H.R. Haldeman against the intelligence agency are probably exaggerations.

Bush, CIA director in 1976, responded to allegations in Haldeman's recently released book, "The Ends of Power," that the CIA monitored the Watergate burglars and that Watergate plumber Howard Hunt was a CIA plant in the White House.

"I have no reason to believe they are true. They didn't come out in the Watergate hearings...." Bush told a news conference.

States want more power in energy policy making

WASHINGTON (AP)—The nation's governors met with President Carter Monday to press their demands for federal action to step-up energy production and for less Washington interference with state energy development plans.

The White House meeting, second in a two-day conference on energy production, followed a speech by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance which called for promotion of domestic energy to relieve the dependence on Arab oil.

The governors expressed the same concern to Carter, saying "It is essential that we develop all possible sources of domestic oil and gas consistent with our environmental goals, to protect ourselves against future embargoes and allow us to meet our fuel needs."

THE GOVERNORS, attending the winter meeting of the National Governors Association, also demanded more aggressive pursuit of alternative energy forms such as solar and nuclear power.

The White House sessions had been demanded by the governors for the past year in an effort to focus attention on energy production needs. The legislative energy package Carter submitted last year leans heavily toward conservation.

The preliminary reports issued by the governors questioned whether the administration's oil and gas production goals can actually be achieved under the Carter plan.

"The governors expressed concern that the finding rate for oil and gas, used in making the plan's supply forecasts, was overly optimistic," they said.

THE DEMAND for a more reliable future supply of fuel has been a sensitive issue among the governors, especially those in states that had to close schools and curtail industry because of the current coal strike.

The White House discussions have drawn demands for a bigger state role in the leasing of coal and oil reserves as well as for fewer federal regulations on energy concerns.

"States should be the focal point and final decision-maker on their energy development needs," the governors' papers contended.

Vance told the governors that all the initiatives being taken toward international trade improvements cannot solve this country's economic problems unless they are matched by an effective national energy policy—including the increased domestic production the governors are demanding.

"And we must have it soon," Vance said. "Unless we curb our unchecked appetite for foreign oil ... we will not begin to reverse the $30 billion U.S. trade deficit."

Matlack makes final attack on problems facing Senate

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

Reapportioning Student Senate, yearly senate elections and minority representation in University government are some of the changes at K-State, Terry Matlack, student body president, suggested in his year-end report to senate.

Matlack, whose term in office ends in less than two weeks, listed items in student government and University administration that need to be changed.

Reapportioning senate half by college and half by living vicinity would insure greater constituent communication, according to Matlack.

"The representative can identify where his constituency is physically, and the constituent can identify where his representative is specifically," Matlack said.

MATLACK said half-college representation and half-living vicinity would help insure all students of representation in senate.

Changing senate elections from twice a year to once a year would also help senate in working to represent students, according to Matlack.

"I don't believe Student Senate has a solid 10-week period to work before they break into something," Matlack said. "Without a constant work period, we have to constantly reorganize."

Yearly elections would allow senate committees a greater time period to work on problems and legislation, Matlack said.

"I think that if the committee system is ever going to be effective, they're going to have to have a longer work period," he said.

SENATE defeated a yearly elections bill Feb. 16, but Matlack said he hopes the issue returns to senate.

Greater efforts should be made to insure minority representation in all facets of student government, according to Matlack.

"As University administrative positions come open, we've got to keep an eye on getting minorities and women in those offices," Matlack said. "We have all white male vice-presidents and they've done a good job, but we need a balance there."

Senate funding of campus organizations should move away from the line-item system to a system of allocation that considers the cost of a service and not student enrollment figures, according to Matlack.

"What we argue about in senate is how much it is going to cost per head, not the total dollar cost of a service," Matlack said.

"I don't see any real function in the line-item system except it is easier for senators to understand and for administrators to understand," he said.

UNDER THE line-item system of funding, groups such as the K-State Union receive a certain amount of money from each student for operating expenses. Other groups which are non-line items, such as social services, are allocated money by senate.

Matlack said senate should be involved in the funding of line-item groups as well as non-line-item groups that receive smaller amounts of money from student fees.

"They always debate at great length on the small things," he said. "I think those dollars are just as important."

Cuban troops aid Ethiopians in battle with northern rebels

ROME (AP)—Cuban soldiers have entered combat for the first time against rebels in Ethiopia's northern Eritrea province, the insurgents said Monday. Cubans already had been reported fighting alongside Ethiopian troops in their Ogaden war against Somali secessionists at the other end of the country.

Amde Michael Kahsai, spokesman for the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, said in Rome that 1,000 Cubans joined Ethiopian defenders in the Eritrean capital of Asmara for an unsuccessful attempt to crack the five-month rebel siege of the city.

Kahsai said EPLF intelligence in Asmara reported that Cuban troops fired heavy artillery and rocket launchers as the Ethiopians tried to break out to the south, suffering heavy losses.

The rebels claimed earlier that Cuban advisers were present on the Eritrean front. Western intelligence sources in Kenya reported earlier in February that 500 Cubans had been dispatched to Eritrea.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Hodding Carter III said he had no immediate knowledge that Cuban troops were fighting in Eritrea.

Jury to deliberate on trial evidence

The jury is expected to deliberate today on the evidence presented in the trial of three men charged with raping a coed in K-State's athletic dormitory last March 30.

The defendants, Nate Jones, Chicago, and Ken Lovely, Dallas, were members of K-State's football team during the 1977 season. Mike Woodfin, Topeka, left the squad last spring after he suffered an injury.

Before the case goes to the jury County Attorney Dennis Sauter (the prosecutor) and defense attorney Charles Scott will present final arguments.

Today's proceedings climax three days of evidence presentation in which both sides gave conflicting stories as to the events leading to and during the rape.

Railroad track consolidation may get Manhattan funding

By CINDY IZZO
Collegian Reporter

The Union Pacific and the Rock Island railroads will ask the City Commission to consider the consolidation of both railroads' tracklines through the city.

Les Rieger, acting city manager, said the proposal, which will be brought up at tonight's city commission work session, would eliminate the Rock Island's track.

"The city staff met with both railroads about two weeks ago and discussed the possibility of this issue," Rieger said.

He said it is possible this proposal will be adopted by the commission.

"The railroads don't want to bear the cost of the consolidation," Rieger said.

"We (the city) will have to fund the costs of removing the unused tracks, signal and switching equipment," he said.

"It will cost somewhere in the area of $225,000, which is why we will ask the Community Development (CD) department for the money," Rieger said.

RIEGER SAID this track consolidation will provide the right of way to the new southern arterial bypass.

The appointment of a municipal airport and air service study committee also will be considered by the commission at the work session.

The purpose of the committee is to "keep abreast of the redevelopment of the airport," Rieger said.

"There has been some talk by people who think the committee is not needed anymore," Rieger said. "The people who served on it (the committee) before felt a need to continue it."

The Downtown Redevelopment Committee (DRC) will propose to the commission a request to close the 400 block of Poyntz Avenue between fourth and fifth, on Saturday April 29th, for Military Appreciation Day.

According to Rieger, the DRC is sponsoring this event to attract people and "provide an entertainment measure."

"The city is concerned with several things," Rieger said. "One of them is the approval by the Department of Transportation (DOT) to allow the closing of Poyntz Avenue because it is a state highway."

HE SAID the department doesn't want to see the street closed off more than once a year.

"We will leave the area through the 400 block of Poyntz open for a fire lane," Rieger said.

In the regular city commission meeting will be the proposal to approve Phase II of the City Hall remodeling contract.

The commissioners will consider the second reading of the proposal to annex 36.93 acres of land north of Kimball and east of Browning.

Considered as a separate ordinance is the rezoning of that plot of land.

Of the land to be rezoned, 32.69 acres will be rezoned to R-1 (single family dwelling) and 4.24 acres to R-2 (two-family dwelling).

Double trouble strikes consumers as prices up, buying power down

WASHINGTON (AP)—Consumer prices rose sharply in January and the average worker's buying power declined by the largest amount on record, the Labor Department said Monday.

The price index for all urban consumers climbed 0.8 percent in January after rising 0.4 percent in each of the past three months. If averaged out over the entire year, the January increase would lead to an inflation rate of nearly 10 percent.

The purchasing power of the average worker declined 3 percent in January, the biggest drop since the department began keeping records in 1964.

THE DECLINE in real spend-able earnings was attributed to higher Social Security taxes, fewer hours worked, changes in the tax laws and rising consumer prices.

Two thirds of the higher prices were caused by increases of 1.2 percent for food and beverages and 0.8 percent for housing, the department said. Transportation was up 0.6 percent, medical care 0.8 percent and clothing 0.3 percent.

WHITE HOUSE officials said, however, two of the increases were only one-time contributors to inflation. They were rises in the minimum wage, which drove up some prices for services and Social Security taxes.

"It is not seen as a basic change in the underlying 6 to 6.5 percent inflation rate that we felt was accurate even when the monthly increases were lower," said White House Press Secretary Jody Powell.

Corrections — Clarification

Due to a typesetting error some information was omitted from Monday's Collegian article concerning the A-dorm rape trial.

The second paragraph said a 19-year-old K-State student from Beloit said she was forced to have sex in the A-dorm with Nate Jones, a defendant in the trial, and another man two or three weeks before March 30.

The following paragraphs were omitted:

The woman said she and her boyfriend (Jones' roommate) were lying in his bed when Jones and another man entered the room.

She said she looked up in the dark a few minutes later and saw two men, one she identified as Jones, sitting naked on Jones' bed.

"What do you want?" she asked. "You know what we want... you," the woman said Jones replied.

She testified that when he refused, Jones said: "If you don't give it to us, we're going to get every other guy down the hall."

She then said both men had intercourse with her. She said she was not physically harmed.

Then under cross examination from defense attorney Charles Scott, the woman admitted she willingly had intercourse with Jones two or three weeks ago.

Chlorine gas cloud drifting

NEW YORK—Deadly chlorine gas drifted toward another town in the Florida Panhandle Monday, forcing a general evacuation, and the delicate job of removing the ruptured railroad car carrying the chlorine was postponed.

In Waverly, Tenn., meanwhile, townspeople began burying the dozen victims of an explosion at another train derailment site.

About 250 residents of Fountain, Fla., about 20 miles north of Youngstown, Fla., were evacuated Monday when wind shifted and carried a lethal yellowish cloud toward their town. Eight persons died Sunday near Youngstown when chlorine gas began escaping from the tanker, which was cracked in the derailment.

Cleanup operations were put off until Tuesday so the crew could obtain special equipment. Workers were planning to neutralize the remaining chlorine in the fractured rail car with caustic soda, also harmful if touched or inhaled.

Train safety increase asked

WASHINGTON—Transportation Secretary Brock Adams said Monday he might propose a task force of railroad and tank car officials and gas manufacturers to recommend safety rules that would reduce the chance of derailments which spew hazardous materials into the air.

Three such accidents in recent days killed 19 persons, injured scores and forced evacuation of hundreds.

Adams also predicted the condition of the nation's rail beds will improve if administration budget officials approve his request for an additional 100 federal track inspectors, raising the total to more than 400.

Adams said there were between 7,000 and 8,000 train derailments a year in this country. He said he could not estimate how many might be avoided if he gets his extra 100 inspectors, "but it stands that more inspectors make for safer railroads, so I'm trying to get more."

No federal aid for busing

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court, denying an appeal from Kentucky, said in effect Monday that the federal government does not have to help pay the costs of court-ordered busing to achieve racially desegregated public schools.

The justices rejected without comment an approval by Kentucky Gov. Julian Carroll seeking permission to ask for federal help in paying for busing in the Louisville area, one of hundreds of school districts across the nation carrying out court-ordered busing.

The court's action bars, at least for now, any hope other state and local school districts may have had to get such federal help.

A racial desegregation plan in effect since 1975 for schools in Louisville and surrounding Jefferson County, Ky., has made necessary the daily busing of some 23,000 students.

Mimists insult military

BARCELONA, Spain—The Spanish army will put five pantomimists on trial Tuesday for allegedly insulting the military in one of their mime plays. The troupe's director was to have stood trial, too, but he eluded his guards with a ruse Monday and escaped.

Leftists threatened street protests and moderates condemned the prosecution as a throwback to the days of the old Franco dictatorship.

Military officials rejected an appeal from the defendants Monday for a civilian trial and ordered them to face a Barcelona court martial of four military judges.

Disruption or discrimination?

The New York City public school system is in trouble.

It is falling on its face and the reasons are controversial. It does not fall alone.

The problem is that a large percentage of the children in attendance can neither write nor read English as well as they should.

The fact that many of these children are black or Hispanic is of no surprise. New York City is one of the largest Spanish-speaking cities in the world and has a large black population.

Many say the learning deficiencies are because of racial differences; because Hispanic or black children learn more easily if their teachers are non-white, or at least sensitive to their needs.

Howard Hurwitz, principal of Long Island High School until his June, 1977, retirement, told CBS that the deficiencies are solely engendered by disruptive children.

According to Hurwitz, one disruptive child in the classroom—no matter what his color—slows down the learning process for other children.

His theory goes so far as to suggest that a disruptive child should be ousted permanently from a school system.

The New York City school board disagrees with Hurwitz and had a tough time getting him to let a "disruptive" black student re-enter his school.

A PROBLEM in many integrated school systems is there are many officials like Hurwitz, all possessing different definitions of "disruptive" with different reasons for defining certain actions as such.

Many times, and damagingly so, disruptive equals Hispanic or black.

Up to a certain age, children are required to attend school. Thus, society takes it upon itself to educate the masses.

Qualified teachers are needed to fulfill this task. Quality, however, has many dimensions.

NOT ONLY must academic quality be considered in the hiring process, but also the long-overlooked quality of racial sensitization, the ability to interact and be sensitive to the needs of students of all colors.

"Disruptive" children should not be ousted from public schools. The use of such a label is too vulnerable to personal prejudice and ignorance.

Disruption does not just happen. Something causes it. The racial atmosphere of a classroom is more influential than many may choose to admit.

Barefoot and pregnant

In a time of changing sex roles in American society, it is difficult to accept the fact that there are still so many die-hards. But believe me, the die-hards live and there's a few right on campus.

Die-hards are present in every kind of social change and resisting change in women's sex roles seems to be a top priority right now. The ironic thing is that the resistance comes from women as well as men.

One would be inclined to think that a married woman getting a college degree is not such a dramatic or radical move. I never have. But the notion that it is a radical move was pointed out to me by an open-minded man about a year ago.

He was about number 500 on my list of disbelievers of the fact that I was a married college student. The fact that I was a married student wasn't as shocking as the fact that my husband was putting me through school. After all, he told me, usually it's the other way around.

Since that awakening, I began to closely study the next few hundred people who reacted in a similar fashion. There are various degrees of disbelief and I would argue that the degree says a lot about the person's social mentality.

THE RHETORIC ranges from "you should be home baking bread and cleaning the toilet" or "but you're not pregnant, your husband must be impotent" to less insulting reactions of "it must bother your husband that you're not home much" or "you must have an open-minded husband to put you through school."

After talking with several other married women who are students, I have found that I am not alone in this situation.

Coping with such reactions is really no problem once you realize it's just a reflection of the attitudes toward women's roles.

What's disgusting is the number of people who maintain this archaic philosophy. To believe that women should not pursue some kind of skill or career is total ignorance.

If the women's movement has done anything, it is to make women aware that they cannot consider a husband their sole security for the duration of their lives. I have seen too many women wiped out financially after the deaths of their husbands. They have no way to provide for themselves because they have no skill.

EDUCATING women is healthy for the economy. If women are working, they are making money, which they spend in the marketplace. And even with my meager knowledge of economics, I know that cash-flow makes our system tick.

I would argue that the resistance stems from a single entity which is deep-rooted in our society. The same entity is the basis for racial discrimination, I would say. When women and blacks are educated, they look for a job. And when one is threatened with losing a job to a black or a woman, that hits home. It is considered degrading both emotionally and economically.

As I see it, the only method that will begin to alleviate the resistance to changing sex roles is instituting that change. Of course, I have to be realistic. Some die-hards will always exist to resist any type of social change. But once they are outnumbered, their rhetoric will be drowned out by the fresh, sparkling awareness that too much talent is being wasted by keeping it in the kitchen.

Letters to the editor

Apathy deadens black awareness

Editor

I would like to echo Bernard Norman's comments that appeared in the Collegian on February 23, 1978. Apathy has definitely deadened this year's Black Awareness Week activities, and if everybody isn't thinking about themselves, they certainly should be. But this is nothing new to us. It has happened before and will undoubtedly happen again.

Black Awareness Week has always been an important part of most black students' identity.

Lack of involvement has always been an effective deterrent in our attempts to accomplish our goals.

Can this possibly mean that we, as black students, are suffering from an acute case of identity crisis? This is a definite possibility in our mind. Could it be that Black Awareness Week is no longer a part of our black identity? If so, we should consider dropping the event entirely, along with our other objectives. You do know what they are, don't you? Or do you?

THE THING that concerns me the most is that some of the leaders of black organizations should be included among the ranks of the apathetic students they criticize! And at first, I had the impression that the author was writing about himself, in this particular area.

Finally, I would just like to say that it is very easy to sit back and criticize after everything is said and done.

It is much harder to be involved and work toward a goal. Before you criticize, get involved. Then you will have a RIGHT to criticize.

If you were involved, get involved again.

We'll all be better for it.

Mideast involvement raises objections from Americans

WASHINGTON (AP)—The American people say they want less U.S. involvement in the Middle East, whether in selling warplanes or in pressuring Israel or Egypt to make concessions, an Associated Press-NBC News poll shows.

And the survey found indications that the public is growing disenchanted with the Israeli negotiating stance in the current series of peace moves.

About 57 percent of those questioned opposed the proposed U.S. sale of warplanes to all three countries—Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

Only one part of a $4.8 billion package proposed by President Carter earlier this month—planes for Israel—is supported by as many as 24 percent of the 1,600 adults questioned by telephone last week.

Opinions about the sales to each country were asked as separate questions.

ON THE SALE of 90 highly sophisticated F-15 and F-16 fighters to Israel, 63 percent of the American people were opposed. Only 24 percent said they favored the deal. Thirteen percent were undecided.

Selling 50 less advanced F-5E fighters to Israel's neighbor and sometime opponent, Egypt, drew support from 21 percent of those questioned. Sixty-six percent opposed the sale, with 13 percent again undecided.

And 17 percent were in favor of the sale of 60 F-15 fighters to Saudi Arabia with 69 percent opposed. Fourteen percent were not sure.

Those who opposed sales to one nation were likely to oppose sales to all of the countries. Those who answered no to each of the three questions on plane sales totaled 57 percent of those interviewed.

Only 14 percent were in favor of all the sales.

The desire for less involvement in the Middle East was also shown by the answers to a question on whether the United States should pressure Israel or Egypt into concessions in the current round of peace talks.

ONLY 6 percent said the United States should pressure Israel and only 2 percent agreed with pressure on Egypt.

Twenty-one percent said both countries should feel the weight of U.S. influence, while 62 percent thought the United States should avoid leaning on either side.

Disenchantment with the Israelis was found in three questions.

First, 55 percent said President Anwar Sadat of Egypt had made more concessions than Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Only 15 percent felt Begin had made more concessions. Eight percent thought both sides had yielded, while 22 percent were not sure.

This perception of Begin's lack of concessions has had a negative effect on his standing with the American people. Only 29 percent now give him "excellent" or "good" ratings for his role as a Mideast peace negotiator, down 20 points from the 49 percent found in a January AP-NBC News poll.

IN CONTRAST, Sadat received excellent or good marks from 56 percent of the American public, down about nine points from his January rating.

As with any sample survey, the results of the AP-NBC News poll can vary from the exact opinions of all Americans with telephones solely because of chance variations in the sample.

For a poll of 1,600 adults, the variation due to sampling error is no more than three percentage points either way.

Students combine study and travel by going to Europe

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

About 150 K-Staters will "expand horizons" and "broaden experiences" this summer through study or tourism programs overseas.

Walter Kolonosky, assistant professor of modern languages and director of the Office of Study Abroad in Eisenhower Hall, assists students who are interested in studying or traveling abroad. Traveling, he says, is becoming more common today.

"In just five years, the number of students going abroad has doubled," he said, attributing the rise to increased affluence and a realization by students that the world is not limited to the United States.

"We are right back in the 19th century in a period when education and study abroad went hand in hand. To many, getting an education now means not only completing a certain number of hours, but going abroad," Kolonosky said.

"Europe is the big target," he said, ranking Germany, France, England, Spain and the Soviet Union as the top five countries K-State students visit.

One of the older established student exchange programs at K-State is one in conjunction with universities in Giessen and Munich, Germany.

EACH YEAR six students from K-State attend Justus Liebig University in Giessen while six of its students study here. One K-Stater attends the University of Munich every year, according to John Noonan, associate dean of the graduate school and coordinator of the Giessen program.

Students recently selected for the Giessen program, in which they will stay in Germany for the entire '78-'79 academic year, include Lisa Rempel, junior in pre-vet; Randall Herron, senior in modern language; Ann Atkinson, sophomore in mechanical engineering; Ronald Kelp, junior in pre-vet and Jo Koehn, junior in physical education.

Applicants for the Giessen program, which has existed for 15 years, must have taken at least 12 hours of German.

Noonan said that the benefits of this program, like other foreign exchange programs, are not all academic.

"Some maturation has to go on," he said. "All of a sudden you find yourself in the airport at Frankfurt, trying to find out how to get to Giessen, and you can't call home for a few bucks."

STUDENTS WHO study abroad usually live in dorms, apartments or host homes. Kolonosky said that living with a native family is an interesting experience in which the student observes the culture through the "nitty gritty" of everyday living.

The American student is "on his own" according to Kolonosky. He usually studies an area until he thinks he's ready to be tested, then appears before a board which tests him at the end of the term. Schools in Germany rarely give a series of tests or finals such as at K-State.

During the summer, American students usually receive what amounts to a certificate of attendance from the European university.

Although some of the programs available are more like tourist trips, all of them carry credit that is transferable to K-State.

"Most valuable are the academic programs where it is possible to continue your education," Kolonosky said. "You're not just lying in the sun and drinking beer."

The tourist-type trips do have their place, however, he said.

ROBERT LINDER, professor of history, leads a trip to Europe visiting historical points of interest, such as the site of Anne Boleyn's (wife of Henry VIII) beheading.

"In western civ (civilization) or humanities, you hear about these places, and (through these trips), behold! You're there. It's very thrilling," Linder said.

The cost of studying abroad depends on the place of study and the length of the stay. Kolonosky said that a student can go abroad for a summer, a semester or an entire academic year.

The average cost of a summer trip is from $1,200 to $2,000. Kolonosky said the year-long programs are more economical. The total cost for an academic year of study in Great Britain, for example, would be about $3,500—not a great deal more than a year at K-State.

Kolonosky said he became familiar with study abroad while studying language at the University of Leningrad in 1969. He will return to Moscow to study this summer.

KOLONOSKY, who teaches Russian at K-State, put his knowledge to use by introducing the Russian players at the K-State-U.S.S.R. basketball game in January.

He sees the Office of Study Abroad, which opened last August, as a liaison between the schools and organizations offering study abroad programs and the K-State students.

"The idea behind it is to make someone responsible for study-travel information," he said. "This is a way of gathering the information and having responsibility for it."

"I had one student who went to Madrid, not really to study, but to live, with no interest of returning," he said. "He came to me asking about visas, what problems there would be, how they view Americans coming over for an extended stay, and so forth."

He said that this student went to Spain to study architecture and to set up residency. The student is still in Madrid.

One of the main reasons for Americans studying in Europe is simply that certain European schools offer something special. Kolonosky said that if one seriously wants to study music or art, he would recommend they study in Rome or Vienna. Architecture students may find it advantageous to study in Scandinavian countries, he said.

'Streetcar': Brando, Leigh keep it moving for 27 years

EDITOR'S NOTE: "A Streetcar Named Desire" will be shown today in the Union Little Theatre at 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. in the Forum Hall. Admission is $1.25 with a student ID.

By KEVIN ROCHAT
Contributing Writer

"A Streetcar Named Desire" is the classic film adaptation of Tennessee Williams' award winning play. Directed by Elia Kazan, it stars Vivien Leigh, Marlon Brando, Kim Hunter, and Karl Malden.

As the film begins, Blanche Du Bois (Vivien Leigh) arrives in New Orleans to stay with her sister,

Collegian Review

Stella (Kim Hunter). Blanche has come upon hard times and, though it is not clear what circumstances have caused her misfortune, Stella welcomes her with open arms into the stark, dingy two room apartment in which she and her husband, Stanley (Marlon Brando) live.

Blanche considers herself to be a sensitive, cultured person and it is a rude shock for her to find her sister living in the harsh, unpleasant environment that she does. This shock is compounded when she meets Stanley and finds that her sister's husband is a loud, vulgar, common brute who makes no pretense about his animalistic tendencies.

Though Blanche is repelled by Stanley's crude manners, she is also strongly attracted to him. At first, she attempts to coerce him into more civilized behavior by charming him with sweet feminine platitudes, but finds that her petty vanities only anger him. Stanley Kowalski is not a man to be controlled.

Blanche Du Bois is a lonely and frightened woman who often retreats into a world of dreams and illusion to protect herself from an ugly reality. The essence of her personality is captured when she pleads, "I don't want realism . . . I want magic!"

Stanley Kowalski is the embodiment of the realism she fears. His every move threatens to shatter her frail defenses and leave her naked before the world and herself. It is this violent conflict between Blanche's fragile, dreamy ideals and Stanley's blunt, passionate reality that creates the powerful psycho-drama at the heart of "A Streetcar Named Desire".

Vivien Leigh gives a brilliant and moving performance as Blanche and won the academy award in 1951 for her portrayal. Twenty-seven years later, her performance is no less magnificent.

Marlon Brando's portrayal of Stanley Kowalski has such powerful authenticity it is frightening. As an actor, he seems to be in his natural element here, and this may be one of the finest performances of his career.

Tiny Tim ready to 'Tiptoe' again

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Tiny Tim says he'll make a comeback soon—"It's just a matter of when and how"—but there won't be a second time around in the marriage game.

"I'm married until death do us part. I cannot get married again," the stringy-haired, falsetto-voiced, ukelele-strumming entertainer of "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" fame, says.

Tim, who married the then-17-year-old Victoria Buddinger in 1969, was divorced several months ago, but he still maintains marriage is a "sacred institution."

Tim bills his new image, seen mostly at supper clubs and not-so-famous nightclubs, as "King of Nostalgia."

Kim Hunter portrays the patient, loving Stella and Karl Malden the shy, dull, momma's boy who courts Blanche. Both won academy awards for their performances.

"A Streetcar Named Desire" is a powerful, poignant and important film. Amid it's consistent excellence, there are moments of brilliance seldom equalled in film.

Women may receive $48,000

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

The K-State Athletic Department will receive approximately $48,000 for women's athletics next year if all goes well in this session of the Kansas legislature.

The money K-State would receive is part of a $311,000 recommendation from the governor and the Board of Regents for women's athletic programs at state universities.

Though the University of Kansas could receive $85,000 compared to K-State's $48,000, there was no attempt by the Regents to be biased in their appropriations.

"The Regents approved what the institutions requested," said Phil Arnold, budget officer of the Board of Regents, "to help the institutions do what they could about meeting their requirements for Title IX."

The universities must comply with the provisions of Title IX by July 21 or risk the loss of federal funding.

STATE-WIDE, The Regents cut the funding requests by only $5,000. Wichita State will receive $43,000, Emporia State—$15,000, Pittsburg State—$68,000, and Fort Hays State—$56,000.

"It was an attempt to meet the needs of each campus on an individual basis," said John Conard, executive officer of the Board of Regents.

Sports

Conard said the Regents showed equality of funding by giving each institution what it requested. He said the Regents made no conscious effort to fund athletics equally.

"When you start looking at equality all sorts of elements have to be taken into consideration," Conard said.

The Regents have given more than a million dollars over the past three years to women's athletics, compared to $500,000 for men's athletics, Arnold said.

THE K-STATE budget request includes $18,000 for coaches' salaries and $29,000 for operating expenses.

"We did that almost a year ago," K-State's Assistant Athletic Director Conrad Colbert said of the request. "We requested those things we felt were necessary at the time."

Colbert said he requested what the department needed, rather than have the Regents throw out an outlandish request.

The mood of the Regents has shown that "maybe if we'd asked for a hundred thousand we might have gotten it," Colbert said.

KU'S REQUEST is greater than K-State's partially because the KU Student Senate has withdrawn an anticipated $54,000 in funding for the women's program, according to KU's Vice Chancellor William Hogan.

"This is being considered as offsetting the money we will not be getting from Student Senate," said Pat Collinson, administrative assistant to KU's women's athletic director.

The $311,000 request is part of the appropriations bill for state universities that has been introduced into the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

No action has been taken yet, but considerations will begin this week, according to Marlin Rein, chief legislative fiscal analyst.

Penalty costs Clydesdales

A handoff exchange outside the passing zone in the 880-yard relay cost the K-State Clydesdales a shot at victory Saturday morning in the Budweiser College Superstars competition in Ahearn Field House.

The Clydesdales received a five second penalty for the errant exchange, thus losing the race they had won by 4.9 seconds over their competition from Pittsburg State.

The K-Staters won the frisbee throw and the obstacle course. Pittsburg State won the volleyball match, tug-of-war and the six-pack-pitch, in which a beer can is tossed 25-feet into a trash can.

As far as eating goes, Wall helped pick the menu for the post-game meal held at Assistant Athletic Director Bones Nay's house. The Russians chowed down on hamburgers, coke and lots of ice cream.

The K-State appearance will be the final outing for the Chinese National Team of a 13 game tour of the United States that began Valentine's day. Wall said he likes being with the Chinese because of their friendliness.

"They are such delightful people. After the game, win or lose, they leave with smiles on their faces."

The purpose of the trips to and from other countries is to expose players and fans to good basketball in preparation for the 1980 Olympics.

"So we can see what we'll be up against," he said. "It's a mutual scouting expedition."

Record now meaningless as tournament opens

Throw out K-State's 26 basketball games this season because the 1977-78 season boils down to how the Wildcats perform from here on out.

There are no mathematics involved in how they will finish. If K-State wins their next three games they will be the Big Eight post-season champions.

The 'Cats open the first round of the Big Eight post season tournament tonight at 7:30 in Ahearn Field House when they take on the Oklahoma Sooners for the third time this season.

The 'Cats and the Sooners tied for fourth place in Big Eight regular season play with 7-7 records, but since K-State defeated Oklahoma twice they received the home court berth.

The 'Cats come into tonight's game with a 16-10 overall record, while Oklahoma posts a 14-12 mark.

Tickets are still available for tonight's game at the K-State ticket office.

A 'Clockwork Haymaker'; timeless problem for dorm

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Haymaker Hall residents don't seem to have enough time these days.

Since last fall, six clocks have been stolen from Haymaker lobbies.

James Putnam, director of Haymaker, said he thinks people stole the clocks as pranks. He said the clocks have no great monetary value and it would be difficult to sell them.

Two of the three clocks stolen last fall were tracked down by Security and Traffic investigators, Putnam said. Haymaker is still missing three clocks stolen this year, all of which were taken within the last two weeks.

THE THEFTS of these clocks are felonies and is being investigated by Security and Traffic.

"This is not a new problem to resident halls," Putnam said. "The residents miss the clocks because they used them frequently."

Hopefully, something will be done to secure them so we can avoid future thefts," he said. "It's very sad that everything has to be chained or bolted down to prevent stealing."

Putnam said the chance of replacing stolen property, such as the clocks, is small.

Mark Rauth, president of Haymaker Hall, said maintenance was asked to put a lock and chain on the clocks to prevent them from being stolen but nothing was done. Rauth said residents are signing a petition to get maintenance to secure the clocks.

Lloyd Davenport, physical plant supervisor for housing, said the clocks cost $55 each, however with the cost of installation the clocks are worth $70 each.

THE INSTALLATION cost is expensive because the clocks have to be tuned into the system, Davenport said. All the clocks are on a single system operated by remote control.

Davenport said maintenance is not going to secure the clocks to the walls.

"They are pretty well secure and I don't know what else to do. It's very difficult to make anything thief-proof," he said.

Women's commission recommends changes, examines needs of campus

By KAREN EWING
Collegian Reporter

Examining the roles, needs and opportunities of women at K-State and recommending changes where necessary is the purpose of Commission on the Status of Women.

"The commission was set up in 1973 by President James McCain to provide a group responsible to women's needs on campus and it continues to be a presidential recommending committee," said Diane Rausch, director of Affirmative Action and ex-officio chairman of the committee.

The commission is composed of seven students, seven faculty members, seven classified staff members, Pat Greene, who is assistant director of Affirmative Action, Margaret Nordin, who is an ex-officio member, and Rausch.

"This is a very important group. They have provided us with good advice. They are quite attentive and are concerned with the problems women have and will have," President Duane Acker said.

According to Rausch, the group meets twice a semester and more if necessary. Each subcommittee tries to meet monthly. The executive committee, which includes the three heads and subcommittee chairpersons, meets biweekly.

SOME OF the concerns of the group include rape, childcare, women's athletics and classified pay plans.

"We never get a flat refusal to our recommendations. They are responsive to our needs. Change at a University is a long and tedious process," Rausch said.

Acker said the reason for slow process of change is because the decision making process is dispersed. Then implementation of the decision depends on the department heads.

"Last spring the chairperson for one of the subcommittees worked on the rape concern on campus and it was done under the umbrella of the commission," Rausch said.

The commission voted that the overriding concern of the commission this year should be rape prevention. The emergency phones, maps and two information packets for men and women were products of the commission's recommendations.

"We help the group to the best of our abilities. The group exists to make recommendations," Acker said.

THE WORKING part of the commission is the three subcommittees. The amount of activity within the subcommittees varies from year to year and from subcommittee to subcommittee, according to Rausch.

"Right now the faculty subcommittee is concerned with the number of women on faculty. They're putting out a recruitment booklet about the mythologies of women faculty," she said.

Rausch said that the classified subcommittee is currently working with the civil service commission in Topeka. This committee has had a series of brown-bag luncheons to discuss various topics concerning women.

IT'S HARD for the student committee to get together because of classes, she said.

According to Rausch, the Commission on the Status of Women grew out of the '60s and the Kennedy era. Kennedy formed a National Committee on the Status of Women and each state soon formed committees, too.

"It's not as atypical now. Many states and cities have these commissions which are very active. It is a common procedural thing," she said.

School offers alternatives in learning

By SCOTT STUCKEY
Collegian Reporter
SALINA—There are no grades, tests or classroom lectures at this school, yet students say they learn things that couldn't be taught elsewhere.

"I see the purpose of education as the transmission of values...I don't believe that knowledge is value free."

The Land Institute near Salina, which recently began its fourth semester, offers students an alternative to the traditional university.

The institute is devoted to the exploration of alternatives in agriculture, energy, shelter and waste. It was built in 1976 on 28 acres of farmland by Wes Jackson, the school's only teacher.

"We're searching for a way of life on the planet in which we can be a part of the cycles of nature rather than a species that consumes the earth's dowry," Jackson said.

"In our search, we are not only interested in alternatives in technology, but alternatives in thinking too."

THE INSTITUTE'S eight students divide their time between reading, discussion and project work related to the goals of the institute. Students choose their semester projects and work at their own pace, Jackson said.

"I think it's important for students to work with their hands. We want to avoid becoming just a verbal place."

Since one the interests of the institute is "regional semi-self sufficiency," students try to construct projects out of locally available materials, including junk.

Russ Brehm, a K-State junior in biology education, attended the institute during one of its first semesters. One project he worked on was building a solar-heated shelter with newspapers, chicken wire and concrete. He also helped build an adobe house with a tamped-earth Indian dwelling.

"Working on those structures gave us a chance to tackle the problems of building a house on our own," Brehm said.

OTHER STUDENT projects include the study of food co-ops and organic gardening, and the construction of wind generators and solar collectors.

"When the institute's main building, including the library, burned down in the fall of '76, discarded powerline poles and bridge planks were used in its reconstruction. The new building is lighted by student built wind generators and will soon be heated by solar collectors.

"The structure was rebuilt with all kinds of scraps," Brehm said.

Jackson said he is not an expert in all areas students choose to study.

"It's a matter of me being their cheerleader and being as helpful as I can," he said. "We're all willing to learn together."

THIS SEMESTER'S students, all of which have attended other universities, say they are enjoying the institute so far.

Tom Moore who was a senior in social work before coming to the institute, said:

"The land institute is a pause in my K-State education which is giving me back my ability to be excited about learning. At K-State I mostly learned how to manipulate the system for my own benefit. It was easy for me to get good grades without learning a damn thing," Moore said.

"I think it harkens back to a time when learning wasn't a matter of filling out computer cards and trying to get credit hours to fulfill a certain major," said Jeff Brown, a K-State graduate in social science. "The things we study at the institute are important to the common man."

JACKSON works with students individually to help them decide how best to approach their educational needs. Although he encourages them to complete their college educations, he said the institute offers students an integrated, inter-disciplinary education unavailable at universities.

"The faculty at most universities are restricted to rigid departmental lines," he said. "When a student goes through a university picking random courses, integration does not occur."

"If I see a gap in a student's knowledge, I can assign a paper to fill that gap."

"We introduced new things to us as we were able to handle them," Brehm said. "I saw a gradual strengthening of the students as the semester progressed."

Jackson, who has degrees in biology, botany and genetics, was a professor at Kansas Wesleyan and California State University before starting the institute. He decided that what he wanted to teach couldn't be taught in a big lecture class.

"I see the purpose of education as the transmission of values," Jackson said. "I don't believe that knowledge is value free. This is one of the big myths of the day."

"Your education and credentials are not for the purpose of giving you a passport to privilege, but a passport to responsibility."

WHEN STUDENTS leave the institute they carry with them an ideology and a set of values, Jackson said.

"Those students in the right places will make differences in this society," he said.

Jackson, who likes the low student-teacher ratio, said he doesn't necessarily want to see the institute grow. Although he could hire other professors if he had more money, Jackson said he doesn't like the strings attached to big grants.

"We have a philosophy that nothing fails like success," he said. "We are not called to success but only to obedience to our vision. It's not necessary for us to be chasing around trying to build an empire."

Students at the institute pay $475 tuition and earn up to 15 credit hours at Marymount College which can be transferred to other schools. Jackson said credit has been given in sociology, psychology and biology.

TO AVOID the "guru effect" students are not allowed to stay at the institute more than two semesters, Jackson said.

The institute is supported by private donations as well as grants from the National Center for Appropriate Technology. A statewide group of supporters, known as the Friends of the Land, match the tuition paid by students, Jackson said.

The institute's board of directors includes State Senator John Simpson and K-State's Dena of Architecture and Design Bernd Foerster.

"I am supportive of the idea of people in the state exploring alternatives," Foerster said. "The land grant universities like K-State have emphasized the technological advances and I am grateful that someone is looking at other ways of doing things.

"The students at the institute are learning from experience instead of from an entirely academic approach."

Legislator at 81 will try it again

HELENA, Mont. (AP)—Yes, state Sen. Dave Manning will run again, he said to no one's surprise Monday as he observed his 81st birthday.

Manning, a Democrat, has been a familiar face—some say he's served longer in a legislature than anyone in any state—in the statehouse for some time.

First elected to the House in 1933, he has been House Speaker, later interim president of the state Senate and acting governor under three chief executives.

His district includes all or part of six counties and contains much of Montana's strappable coal.

Appeal expected

Three convicted in A-dorm rape

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

Ken Lovely, Mike Woodfin and Nate Jones were convicted Tuesday in Riley County District Court of raping a coed in K-State's athletic dormitory last March 30.

Lovely and Jones played for K-State's football team in the 1977 season. Woodfin left the squad because of an injury.

In a hushed courtroom the clerk read the verdict, separately convicting each defendant. The convicted men sat calmly, showing no emotion, as the verdicts were read.

The victim shook slightly as she wept into a tissue.

The unanimous verdict was reached by the seven-woman, five-man jury after three and one-half hours of deliberation.

"I didn't think the all white jury could reach a fair decision with the black defendants," said defense attorney Charles Scott.

SCOTT said he had filed a motion for a change of venue last November but District Court Judge Ronald Innes denied the request.

The motion was filed because of pre-trial publicity which proved to be the "motivating factor for the prosecution," Scott said.

County Attorney Dennis Sauter said he was a little surprised by the verdict.

"But I think the jury saw the case as it really was," he said.

Lovely, Jones and Woodfin are free on continuing bond.

Scott asked Innes for 10 days to prepare post-trial motions to appeal the decision.

"You (the jury) have one duty and only one duty, that's to decide if this young lady was raped," Sauter said in his final argument. "This young lady is not on trial and I'm not on trial for racism and God knows these defendants aren't on trial (for racism)."

SAUTER based his final argument on two points: did the defendants commit the act and did the victim give consent to the act.

He recounted the testimony of the victim, the accounts of eyewitnesses Holiwell and Kirk

Boykin and told the jury it must reach its decision based on those testimonies.

"You (the jury) are the ultimate judges of the facts in this case," he said.

In his closing remarks Scott said his clients were the victims of racist prosecution.

He said Holiwell gave at least three or four stories of what happened on the night of the rape.

"Now when did he start changing these stories? What did they do to him; they put him in jail," he said.

SCOTT then disputed the guilt of his clients saying there were 14 blacks on C-wing which held 15 at the time of the rape.

"I'm not sure the right persons are on trial down here," he said.

He also referred to the 24-hour visitation privileges in effect at the athletic dormitory at the time of the rape calling the dorm a "boarding house" and a "house of ill-repute."

Promiscuity at the A-dorm was rampant at the time of the incident, Scott said.

"The defendants suffer for a policy that is corrupt within itself," he said. "This is a racist crime of the worst kind."

"You have two options: you can vote guilty and condone this racism; or you can vote not-guilty and be a part of this justice we hear and talk about," he said.

Carter pushes education in record budget request

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter asked Congress Tuesday for a record $12.9 billion federal budget for education and promised that some of the aid will go toward reviving the three R's—reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic.

If adopted by Congress, the hike would be the biggest increase in federal aid to education since Lyndon Johnson's administration.

Carter's message to Congress

restated his fiscal 1979 budget request for a 24 percent increase in spending on education. It also revealed his proposals for reshaping the Elementary and Secondary Education Act in order to channel federal money more directly to "those so often short-changed in our educational system because of social problems or poverty."

Addition annexation brings 27 acres into the city limits

By PERYN COMINSKY
and KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporters

The second reading of an ordinance annexing 36.93 acres north of Kimball and east of Browning (Snowbird addition) to the city was approved by Manhattan city commissioners at last night's special meeting.

The motion to annex the land had been tabled at least twice since November because the commissioners weren't ready to act on the annexation.

In debating on whether to annex the land, the commissioners were concerned about the development of the sewer and drainage system.

Gary Stith, Manhattan city planner, pointed out the drainage system could be linked into the city's system without overloading the system.

HE SAID, however, that if the land surrounding the Snowbird addition were annexed to the city there would be some problems in hooking Snowbird to the city's sewage system.

Both Manhattan Mayor Russell Reitz and Commissioner Robert Smith opposed the annexation of the land because they said they believed annexing those portions would expand the city in a disorderly fashion.

Reitz said that in order to build any kind of sewer system on the western edge of the Snowbird addition the approval of the county commissioners would be needed.

IN THE commissioners' work session last night, Les Rieger, acting city manager, asked the commission to approve the purchase of the Amy Meister property for the airport expansion. The airport will use the 5.02 acres to extend the clear-zone of the runways 2,000 to 7,000 feet beyond the present length.

The purchase was approved.

The Meister's have 90 days to move off the land.

"If they are informed of the purchase March 1, then they will be off by June 1 and construction can begin shortly after," Rieger said.

Dick Thieson, chairman of the Airport and Air Service Study Committee, asked the commission to change the committee's capacity as communication between the commissioners and airport management to an advisory capacity.

He asked that the advisory committee be set up within the next 30 days.

The issue was tabled until the March 21 meeting.

Carter wants schools to go 'back to basics'

The president, whose first public office was as a school board member in Sumter County, Ga., said his proposals "will focus our nation's resources on helping our children master the basic skills—reading, writing and arithmetic—which remain critical to their ability to function in a complex society."

He also reaffirmed his intention to ask Congress to set up a separate Department of Education.

Carter asked for $6.9 billion for elementary and secondary education, up from $6 billion this year. This includes nearly $3.4 billion in aid for compensatory education for poor children, which funnels money to 14,000 of the nation's 16,000 school districts.

He proposed targeting $400 million in extra aid to 3,500 districts with large concentrations of poor students. Two-thirds of this money will go to hardpressed center-city schools, while one-third "will flow to rural and suburban school systems which have similar needs," he said.

The extra money will increase from 5.6 million to 6.5 million the number of poor students who get remedial education.

In his effort to improve steadily declining basic educational skills such as reading and writing, Carter said the government will fund more research and demonstration programs in these areas.

Soft music, candlelight, wine and sign on the dotted line

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma House members Tuesday rejected an amendment that would have required males to secure written permission from females before engaging in sexual intercourse, and then delayed final action on a bill to place restrictions on abortions.

Rep. Clea Deatherage unsuccessfully tried to amend a Rep. Bill Wiseman measure that would require physicians to secure consent slips from pregnant women informing them of several circumstances involved in an abortion.

Under the bill, a woman would have to sign a consent form stating she was aware of the condition of the fetus during various stages of pregnancy and that an abortion could result in the mother suffering several medical and emotional complications, including death and severe mental disturbances.

Rep. Deatherage, (D-Norman), maintained her amendment requiring males to secure written permission from females before sexual intercourse was no more frivolous than Wiseman's bill.

She said it stipulated the consequences of intercourse, including pregnancy and the complications of pregnancy.

Treaty support fades

NEW YORK—Support for amended Panama Canal treaties has eroded in recent weeks as the Senate has waded through the first days of debate on the pact, an Associated Press-NBC poll found.

Despite the shrinkage, a majority of Americans familiar with the pacts still express support for Senate ratification.

Of those familiar with the treaties, 54 percent favor Senate ratification if amendments are added guaranteeing U.S. defense rights and the right to speedy passage through the waterway in time of crisis after Panama takes over the canal at the end of the century.

Forty percent said they opposed ratification with the amendments similar to those proposed by the Senate leadership.

Park testifies

WASHINGTON—Tongsun Park was interrogated for five hours Tuesday about alleged South Korean schemes to buy influence in Congress, saying the atmosphere of the secret session was "very cordial and cooperative."

"I did my best to answer all the questions that were raised," Park said of the session marked by tight security.

One committee member, declining to be identified, described Park's opening testimony as "tedious (with) no surprises."

Chief committee counsel Leon Jaworski told reporters that "things went off according to plan today. We're making the type of progress we had anticipated."

Artists' signature phony

MIAMI—The C.J. Fox signature—found on portraits of John Kennedy and other celebrities—is a mark of prestige in some circles. But the man known as Fox says it is a phony.

A federal tax court here is trying to determine who painted the portraits—an art dealer who says he has no qualifications as an artist, or an 81-year-old man in a Manhattan apartment.

The dealer is Leo Fox of Miami and Long Island, N.Y. He startled the court Monday by claiming that "C.J. Fox" was not a fashionable artist but only a corporation.

The court had the puzzle because the Internal Revenue Service wants to collect $40,000 in "personal services" taxes from Leo Fox. He says he doesn't owe it because he and his wife, Janice, operate as a corporation, Charles J. Fox Inc., and pay at a lower rate.

Army delays mimists' trial

BARCELONA, Spain—Under obvious pressure from an embarrassed government, the Spanish army Tuesday postponed the trial of six pantomime actors accused of insulting military officers by portraying them as prejudiced drunks.

A lieutenant colonel announced in the courtroom at military headquarters that the trial of the mimes-members of a Catalan group called the Jugglers-would be delayed because all the defendants were not present to answer the charges. A new trial date was not given.

One day earlier, 34-year-old troupe director Albert Boadella escaped from police custody and the army said it would try him and any others who did not show up in absentia. Friends said he had fled to an undisclosed place in France.

Still, four of the six accused were in court Tuesday, and defense attorney Jose Maria Loperena shouted at the lieutenant colonel that they were ready to stand trial.

Topeka club faces liquor violation

TOPEKA (AP)—The state Alcoholic Beverage Control Board (ABC) has formally cited a Topeka Private club for alleged violations of state liquor laws during a fund-raising party to promote reduction of marijuana possession penalties in Kansas.

Paul Muxlow, owner of the club, Mr. Magoo's, is ordered to appear at a hearing before the ABC on March 22 to answer the charges. The ABC director then will decide validity of the allegations and the appropriate penalty if he upholds the allegations. Usually the penalty is a license suspension for a number of days.

The citation alleges the club sold liquor by the drink, and violated membership regulations during the Feb. 12 party sponsored by the Kansas chapter of the National Organization for Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

W. W. STRUKEL, chief of enforcement for the ABC, detailed the allegations in the citation, which was issued last Friday but not made public until this week because of ABC policy. He declined to discuss in detail activities leading to the allegations about the party.

The club has operated in Topeka about two and one-half years. This is the second violation issued against the club.

The Feb. 12 party was intended as a fund-raising event to finance NORML's lobbying effort on behalf of a bill in the Legislature which would reduce to a maximum $100 fine the penalty for first conviction of possession of one ounce or less of marijuana.

It's different in Iran

The right to protest is something Americans sometimes take for granted—but when we become really angered with an injustice, we exercise that right to its fullest degree.

Although there have been some scenes of violence and brutality associated with demonstrations in this country, it is still the policy of this land to respect the right to protest.

If a U.S. citizen finds it necessary to destroy property or in some other way break the law during a protest, he is processed through the legal system in a civilized manner.

In Iran, it is different.

News from Iran is sketchy, since the country does not have the equivalent of our First Amendment and our news services have to rely on government "reports" and information transferred through Moslem leaders and observers.

THERE are differences between the Iranian government's reports of "riots" and reports received through underground sources. According to Associated Press, when the Iranian government reports "nine protesters killed," Moslem leaders report massacres of 300 people.

If the reports of mass killings of protesters are finally verified by independent, unbiased news sources, countries of the free world should exert maximum diplomatic and economic pressure on the Iranian government to halt this desecration of human rights and freedom.

The metaphysical cram

I smoothly avoided reading the assignment the night before by opting instead to watch the furry wallpaper on my living room walls grow. The text's author was probably an expert on the subject, but I just couldn't trust someone with a name like S. Terry Agnew.

Time watched as I painstakingly traced a pattern with my pen. As I hunched forward in my chair, the muscles in my finger screamed for rest, but I relentlessly pressed forward.

"And Mr. Rhodes, what do YOU think?" The words melted my self-imposed reality shield. Dr. H. Ardbhind, the instructor, stood ahead and to the left of me—waiting.

Oh ship. I instinctively looked down at my desk for an answer. Unfortunately for me, my notebook was still in my backpack.

"Always store beer in a dark place," I blurted, reading the first thing my eyes focused on. I quickly intelligently followed with "you can't spell turkey without TKE."

"Cute, Mr. Rhodes, real cute," the instructor said as the laughter and barage of AFF (allied Frat Forces) paper wads slowed to a sputter. "Now, if you don't mind me asking, could you please relate that to the present class topic?"

The fourteen other attentive class members of "Long and Meaningless Quotes," an upper-level journalism course designed for would-be political reporters, slumped on the edges of their chairs, eagerly watching me for another sign of life.

JUST AS I was about to disappoint them all by pretending I was a rock, the skinny girl with the melted chocolate bar smile and more oral silver than the Denver mint saved me.

"I heard the news today, oh boy," she said, quoting perfectly from J. Lennon, a song writer and long-time friend of the text's author. According to the instructor, Lennon greatly influenced the author during his years as a public figure.

"Very good, Miss Mouth, Dr. Ardbhind said with a sigh, the words escaping his mouth like a bubble of trapped gas.

"For the eleventh time this morning you're absolutely right," he said, smiling at her as she smiled at the ceiling. "Now suppose we try to get Mr. Rhodes or someone else to say something, hum?"

Aided by Miss Mouth's zippered lips, the instructor managed to wring out of my rank, cereal number (Corn Chex 103), and one bit of useless information from the text before the bell rang. As I got up to leave, the good doctor cursed my name under his breath—I could tell he wasn't exactly pleased with my performance.

I tried my best to keep Miss Mouth between me and the instructor as she made her way to the door, but it didn't work. There just wasn't enough of her to hide behind.

"DO YOU have a minute Mr. Rhodes?" Dr. Ardbhind called to me as I was about to break into a quiet sprint. I thought about telling him I didn't, but decided I'd already done enough to upset him for one week.

"I realize it's a lot to ask, but I was wondering if you could possibly start reading the assignments before coming to class," he said as he packed his briefcase. "You know, class participation DOES count one third of your grade.

"It's the first of March Mr. Rhodes—only 24 more shopping days before you'll have to take a WP or WF to drop the class," he said, smiling authoritatively as he reached for the doorknob. "Do have a good day."

I had considered groveling at his feet for effect, but that last remark was too much. It was now a matter of principle that I get in the last word.

"You're absolutely right, Dr. Ardbhind, the semester's almost half over—it is about time I get busy," I said as we walked out the door. "Say, by the way, do you know what shelf in the bookstore the text books are on?"

Letters to the editor

Ford lectured students—not press

Editor,

What's going on in the Collegian staff? Ford's visit really stirred up a hornet's nest of hostility. First Bill Nadon was begrudging him an hour break before the Landon Lecture, then Nancy Horst was startled to discover the Secret Service is actually protecting Ford (a target of at least two assassins). To top it off, there was Alan Montgomery moaning because only students were allowed to question Ford in the mass media class. Just who was the class for, the press or the students?

In more moderate weather, he would be on thin ice for complaining about the absence of a question period after the lecture. I always thought these periods were a joke unless held in much smaller groups when there is the opportunity to exchange ideas. Montgomery obviously has not attended a giant lecture class in Weber Hall auditorium where crowds of 200, not 7,500, never ask the professor a single question. Or is this part of the same conspiracy?

Mass killing of protestors in Iran

Editor,

This letter to the editor reflects the opinions and ideas of the Islamic Association (Persian Group) of Kansas State University and is a reply to the Associated Press article entitled "Shah's attempts to 'Westernize' Iran cause of rioting," (Collegian, Feb. 27).

We assert that the Associated Press obtained this information through a propagandized report from the Iranian government and is biased in support of the Shah's regime, since all independent news sources are rigidly censored.

Thus, the article was a narrow and prejudiced viewpoint of the recent Iranian conflicts and the Associated Press report actually is from an extremely unreliable source.

It is the purpose of our organization to enlighten the American people about the true Iranian situation and to dispell the impoverished vision of Moslems as a fanatically conservative religious faction opposed to change.

Moslems in fact strongly support economic, industrial, educational, political and social modernization based upon a religious format.

However, Moslems oppose the Medieval dictatorship of a fascist regime.

Koranic scripture directs the Moslems to resist dangerous influences and forces which may weaken the Islamic society, prevent the religion from expanding or which deny the human freedoms that are provided to all Moslems through the Koran.

Let A-dorm recover

Editor,

Is there no end to the articles equating "rape equals football equals A-Dorm"?

I wonder what would have happened if the students involved in the rape had been members of the agricultural school. Would Collegian headlines have read, "Farmers stand trial for rape"?

YES, THE whole incident was very unfortunate, but is it necessary to continue the crucifixion of an entire football team and Edwards Hall?

Please, for the sake of the many fine men who live in Edwards who do not deserve to have a major part of their talent and lives equated with a crime; please, for the sake of the new programs in Edwards Hall; give us a chance to recover from the events of last year.

Paula Cooney
Director of Edwards Hall

A PROMINENT Islamic religious leader "Imam" Khomani, who is now exiled from Iran to Iraq because of his adamant opposition to the cruel, fascist regime, once said, "It is a shame on you (Shah) that the machine-guns, tanks, cannons and guns were purchased with the property of the poor people; and then used against those Moslems who strive for freedom from your control."

This statement was made after Imam Khomani was imprisoned in one of Tehran's infamous torture houses (called prisons by the Shah) in early June, 1963, because of his religious convictions.

The alarmed Moslem citizens from all areas of Iran protested the seizure of their religious leader and organized demonstrations in many of the major cities, particularly in Tehran.

Tehran was the center of a contemptible and perfidious attack upon defenseless Moslem demonstrators by the Shah's military forces. In various cities involved, approximately 15,000 citizens became victims of the military actions on June 5, 1963.

After Imam Khomani was exiled to Iraq, he was labeled a regressive reactionary by the Shah, and Khomani's name became synonymous with "troublemaker."

On January 7, 1978, in defense of Imam Khomani's reputation and in an attempt to influence the government to remove the sentence of permanent exile from Imam Khomani, an demonstration was held in Quom, a religious center about 80 miles from Tehran.

During this demonstration, the fascist despot again called for the aid of his secret police agency known as SAVAK and his "modern" army—and more than 200 defenseless Moslem people were annihilated.

THE CORPSES of the demonstrators were dumped in a lake near Quom by the army, and families were not allowed to retrieve their relatives' bodies for burial.

On Feb. 17, 1978, in the city of Tabriz, during an official Moslem day of mourning for those people who were killed in the Quom incident, another demonstration arose supporting the liberation of Imam Khomani from exile and a conversion of the government system.

Demonstrators shouted slogans epitomizing their sentiments toward the Shah: "Down with the Shah! Long live Khomani!" and in the desperation of making the government listen to the people's voice, the unarmed Moslems broke windows in several government buildings.

Again the government answered the voice of the people with machine-gun fire and 500 people were assassinated. Other outbursts of demonstrations were answered in the same manner.

Therefore it is obvious that the fascist regime of the Shah is attempting to oppress the Moslems and to destroy the roots of Islam in Iran. The Moslem demonstrators' push towards human rights also proves that Islam is a dynamic religion in support of liberal, progressive modernization and of freedom for the people within the contexts of the Koranic scripture.

We as a Moslem organization in the United States give total support to the religious revolutionary movement of the Moslem people of Iran. We also encourage Americans to seek out the realities of the Islamic movement in Iran and to be more aware of harmful propaganda concerning the affairs of other countries.

Down with the fascist regime of Iran! Long live Khomani, our religious leader! Islam against monarchy! May the Islamic movement encompass all of Iran!

K-State Iranian students join national protest of 500 demonstrators' deaths

By NORMAN PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

K-State Iranian students will take part Thursday in a national day of protest against the Shah of Iran.

The K-State Iranian Student Association (ISA) said the protest is being held primarily to commemorate the deaths of more than 500 demonstrators in Tabriz, Iran.

The demonstration in Tabriz was to protest the deaths of more than 200 people in Quom, not far from the Iranian capital of Tehran.

The ISA representatives asked not to be identified because, "we all have to go home."

According to an ISA spokesman, the Iranian government has acted further to prevent individual burials of the protesters by relatives, requiring anyone claiming a body to pay about $500 for the body and an additional $50 for each bullet in the body.

THURSDAY was chosen for the K-State demonstration because March 2 is the anniversary of the founding of the Shah's Rastakhiz party.

Iranians are unable to get passports or enroll in school unless they are members of the party, one spokesman said.

Fraudulent tribute recalls Humphrey

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP)—State Attorney General Warren Spannaus has sued a California concern promoting a memorial to the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey on grounds the fund-raising effort is a fraud.

Defendants in the lawsuit are the Historical Monument Foundation, Beverly Hills, Calif.; Richard Cousins, owner and operator of the foundation; Paramount Agency, Los Angeles, a fund-raising firm, and its president, Robert Goldsmith.

Spannaus says the Humphrey family has not authorized the memorial, that the Californians misled the public in newspaper advertisements soliciting funds and that the foundation failed to register as a charitable organization.

Spannaus also alleges that the advertisements failed to disclose that a monument would not be built unless sufficient contributions were received.

'Twin' to tour for Elvis museum

NEW YORK (AP)—Dennis Wise, the 24-year-old fan who underwent surgery to look more like singer Elvis Presley, is making plans for a tour to raise funds for a museum he wants to fill with Elvis memorabilia.

Wise, of Ocala, Fla., still wearing sunglasses to conceal lingering effects of the facial surgery, made his first post-operative public appearance here Monday on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" show.

In his brief visit here, Wise created competition for Rick Saucedo, starring as Presley in "Elvis: The Legend Lives," now in its fifth week on Broadway.

The live performance at the Palace Theater is drawing near-capacity attendance. The show is to go on road tour in May to Los Angeles, Atlantic City, Chicago and Detroit, according to Larry Marshad, the producer.

The ISA representatives said that the demonstration will also be used to inform the American people of their situation.

"We're trying to make the American people realize what is going on in Iran," a spokesman said.

"We expect Iran to be the next Vietnam. We want them (the American people) to know if their government sends them to fight in the area, that they won't be fighting for the American people or for justice."

"The Shah has said that he expects the United States to protect him if there is an uprising—and we expect it to happen."

THE ISA is also protesting the sale of U.S. arms to Iran.

"Most of the weapons are used offensively, after the propaganda on human rights by Carter," another spokesman said.

"The Oman government is being supported by the Shah who is using American weapons against the people revolting against the government there."

The ISA representatives said the weapons were also being used to keep order in parts of Iran.

More than 90 percent of the schools in Iran were closed after the beginning of the semester, and most are still closed an ISA spokesman said.

"If you are going to write about it you need to be there," one ISA representative said. "The people are massacred in the streets every day."

"The Shah is not attempting to westernize Iran, he is just trying to make his government more stable today. He's not worried about next year."

Radicals deny end to police standoff

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—A group of about 17 armed anarchists holed up for nine months in a rat-infested brick dwelling have refused the city's latest proposal for ending a standoff with police, who have kept them under constant watch at a cost of $1.2 million.

"The point is to get this thing resolved without any bloodshed," District Attorney Edward Rendell said Tuesday. "It's a dangerous situation."

On Monday, the group of men, women and children who belong to the back-to-nature group called MOVE tore up an ultimatum from the city to peacefully vacate the dilapidated three-story building.

The latest proposal was made Feb. 21 in an effort to end the standoff, begun May 20, 1977, when MOVE members waved firearms and shouted threats to police from their front porch.

"There's no way in the world we're going to surrender to those sadistic bastards," MOVE member Delbert Africa screamed through a microphone on Monday. "There's no way in the world we're going to hand over our guns."

Dorm directors have access to grades to help students

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

Directors and staff members of K-State residence halls are allowed access to student grade reports during the school year to help students who may be having academic trouble.

According to E.M. Gerritz, dean of admissions and records, grade reports are not provided directly to residence hall personnel. The Office of Admissions and Records does, however, provide reports to other University agencies.

"It's customary to provide records to deans' offices and students' advisors to help the student," Gerritz said.

Grade reports are also sent to the Center for Student Development, where residence hall directors and designated staff members can obtain certain reports.

"They (grade reports) go to the Center for Student Development and we must certify who we are and what our purpose is in obtaining the grades," said Thomas Frith, director of housing.

"Hall directors must give me a written statement to get access to grades and a list of all the persons they want grades for," said Earl Nolting, director of the Center for Student Development and dean of students. "Hall directors are the persons who request grades from me. We have had some hall directors who ask their staff to assist in this."

"If the staff person comes to get the grades, we have to have a list from the hall director saying who will pick them up," Nolting said. "Then we check the ID's against this list."

FRITH SAID staff members do not have access to all students' grades. Only those grades in the staff member's particular area of the hall he or she works in are released to them, according to Frith.

Chet Peters, vice-president for student affairs, said only responsible persons at the University are allowed to see certain grades in their particular area of concern.

"We have checked with the University attorney and it is his opinion that (residence hall) staff people have University responsibility," Frith said.

He said checking grades is done primarily for helping people who need assistance or if people are doing well in a subject they might be asked to help someone who needs assistance in a class.

"Normally we check grades when down slips come out and at the end of the semester when final grades are available," Frith said.

If they find out a student is having a problem in a class they may or may not check to see if he or she would like some help, he said.

He said study skills programs can be set up in a hall for several people or a tutoring program might be arranged on an individual basis.

THE STUDENT'S privacy is considered when dealing with the grade reports, Frith said. In the 13 years he has been director of housing, he hasn't received any complaints from students about the procedure.

"I know we have done it (checked grades) since I have been here," Frith said. "They (grades) are treated very discretely. It's usually handled in a very low-key way."

City crews plug street potholes

Three city crews have been busy since Monday temporarily filling the innumerable potholes in Manhattan's streets.

According to Harlen Kleiner, a foreman at Manhattan's street department, three trucks and nine men have been working steadily to fill the potholes.

Bruce McCallum, Manhattan's city engineer, said the potholes are caused by the freezing and thawing of moisture trapped in the asphalt. McCallum said there is no way to prevent potholes.

"Some of the potholes are quite big. For example, the one at the corner of 17th and Anderson is big enough to swallow a Volkswagen," McCallum said.

When the weather warms up in April or May, the city will remove the temporary plugs and refill the potholes with hot asphalt, which should serve as a permanent plug, McCallum said.

The result of the potholes has been an increase in the amount of damage to cars. Mike Maring, owner of Soupen's Alignment Center, said that since the beginning of the bad weather, he has repaired between twenty and twenty-five percent more broken shocks and bent wheels as well as front end alignments.

"PORNOGRAPHY AND OBSCENITY: THE FIRST AMENDMENT ISSUES"

The American Civil Liberties Union of KSU Students is pleased to present a forum on freedom of expression. We hope to explore such issues as:

the relevance of "community standards" for determining "protected speech" and what constitutes

"prior restraint"

"appeal to the prurient interest"

"serious artistic, literary or scientific value"

constitutionally permissible and impermissible "vagueness" in criminal law

There will be 4 sessions, all in the K-State Union's Forum Hall—at 7:30 p.m. and 10:30 p.m. on Wednesday (March 1) and at 2:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. on Thursday (March 2). These discussions are open to all who wish to attend.

Each forum will be immediately preceded by a showing of the motion picture Deep Throat. We hope that the showing of this film will encourage people in the K-State community to think about the issues involved, including whether adults like themselves ought to have access to such material, for whatever reason. Proceeds will be used to defer general expenses incurred and public education projects undertaken by the ACLU of KSU Students; a portion will be donated to the ACLU of Kansas, for lobbying, litigation and public education.

We are pleased to have the forums led by the following people:

Lyman Baker, President of the ACLU of Kansas

New classrooms to be built; campus center large enough

By MIKE NASS
Collegian Reporter

Areas near the center of campus should provide adequate building sites in the next 10 years, eliminating the need to expand the K-State campus.

"There should be no expansion of the academic campus," said Vincent Cool, vice president for university development. "There are numerous sites for building."

One such center campus project is the new general classroom and office building to be located between Dickens and Justin Halls. The building will house the College of Education and the Department of Psychology.

There are two reasons for the construction of a general classroom building, according to Paul Young, vice president for university facilities: the need for a quantity of space, and the need for a quality of space.

A study conducted in the fall of 1976 showed that K-State lacked 900,000 square feet of space needed for all its programs.

"We are always short of space," Young said. "We teach classes at night because space is short during the day."

THE GENERAL classroom building will provide 100,000 additional square feet of space and replace unsatisfactory space.

It would also allow a chance to renovate Holton, Fairchild, and Dickens Halls, which now house most of the College of Education and the psychology department.

Construction for the general classroom and office building is scheduled to begin this May.

All new buildings on campus develop from a priority list of needs for the University.

"Priorities and projects in capital improvement are determined in response to a need," Young said. "These projects arise from the colleges and the University as a whole."

A list of priorities to be presented to the 1979 state legislature is being put together now, Young said.

This list will be reviewed by the other vice presidents, the administrative council and finally President Duane Acker, who has the final say about projects.

"He decides on the projects that he thinks the University can get money for," Young said.

"It involves tough decisions. There are strong arguments on the order in which projects should be done."

THE BOARD of Regents must also be supplied with a list, Cool said.

"Every year, by statute, we must supply the regents a 10-year building program."

The list is obtained from the department heads, the deans of the colleges, the vice presidents and the academic council, but the "needs are ultimately decided by the president," Cool said.

"We must recognize that the list has to change from year-to-year," he said.

A stabilization and eventual drop in enrollment should have very little effect on the progress of the building projects, Young said.

"The enrollment is not much of a factor. We are so far behind on space, we haven't worried much about it."

However, Cool said he believes the enrollment may have some effect, but it will "depend on the programs developed and the people attracted to the University."

One major program will be in the engineering department.

"The Board of Regents has committed K-State to a strong engineering program," Cool said. "It is number one on our priority list."

EXPANSION of this program includes an addition on the north side of Durland Hall. The addition will house the Department of Mechanical Engineering, the Department of Electrical Engineering and also administrative offices.

Renovation of Burt and Dykstra Halls is scheduled this summer after all facilities for veterinary medicine have been moved to the veterinary medicine complex, Young said.

Plans for Phase II of the plant science complex are in the "dimmer" future, while plans for a new bio-chemistry building to replace Willard are in the "talk stage," Young said.

Currently, there are no plans to tear down any of the older structures on campus, Cool said.

"If there was a strong candidate for razing, it would be the engineering shops, which are predominately used by architecture students," Cool said. "It is an inefficient use of center-campus space, being a one-story structure."

THERE WILL be increasing emphasis for renovation of the older structures in the future, according to Young.

"As we vacate (the older buildings) it will be the first time we will have the opportunity to renovate," Young said.

No major construction would be needed in the renovation of the buildings, Cool said.

"The structures are all structurally sound," he said. "The renovations would be of the kind that would be of major concern."

Dorms may alter campaign policy

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

Revision of regulations of campaign activity in K-State residence halls by student government political candidates may be included in residence hall policies.

Fred Works, president of K-State Association of Residence Halls (ARH), said the ARH is considering updating the present sales and solicitation policy and writing a separate policy pertaining specifically to campaign activity.

"Right now all we have to relate to is a sales and solicitation policy and all we can do is extrapolate a campaign activities policy out of that one," Works said.

Works said the recent student body presidential campaign was the first time there was any difficulty interpreting the sales and solicitation policy.

JEFF STAFFORD, advisor to the ARH, said there were problems in interpreting the sales and solicitation policy in the last campaign because the policy was not specific enough.

"There was confusion and complaints about the last campaign. It was just fuzzy—what could be done and what couldn't be done," Stafford said.

Stafford said the policy should better define what solicitation is because there was a question as to whether campaigning in the residence halls was solicitation.

"Nobody really knew because it wasn't really stated. It was inferred in the present (sales and solicitation) policy but wasn't really stated," Stafford said.

"There was a question as to whether or not people should go door-to-door attempting to get votes," he said.

WORKS SAID the campaign policy would probably prohibit door-to-door solicitation of votes by candidates, but wouldn't necessarily prohibit all types of campaign activity.

"We may try and make a provision where a campaign activity may be allowed—say, a flyer under the door during a campaign, that might be all right," Works said.

Works said members of ARH have been discussing the new policy but probably won't bring it up for two or three weeks.

"We're just trying to get down on paper what we feel is good for our residents and also at the same time protect them from... constant bombardment," Works said.

"We aren't out to seclude the residence halls from any type of campaigning or solicitations of any kind, what we want to do is set down certain guidelines for when things get out of hand," he said.

FDA approves drug to help epilepsy victims

WASHINGTON (AP)—The government Tuesday approved an anti-convulsive drug that experts predict will help more than a half-million victims of epilepsy, some of whom are incapacitated by hundreds of seizures a day.

The drug, valproic acid, is chemically similar to sodium valproate, a drug that has been available in Europe for a decade and that has been the subject of a campaign in recent months by the Epilepsy Foundation of America to win U.S. approval for its use.

Valproic acid will be marketed in this country by Abbott Laboratories of Chicago under the brand name Depakene.

Julius Richmond, assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, called the Food and Drug Administration's unusually quick approval of Abbott's new drug application "an excellent example of the FDA's scientific regulatory process working efficiently and objectively in the face of strong emotions and partisan pressures."

BUT THE Epilepsy Foundation, while saying it was "relieved and gratified" by the decision, said the time lag between the drug's availability here and elsewhere in the world dramatized the need for special government treatment of drugs with little commercial value.

The FDA said it found valproic acid to be effective treatment for petit mal epilepsy, a form of brain disorder that causes momentary loss of consciousness. The agency said the drug also may be effective when used with other drugs to control other types of epileptic seizures.

The Epilepsy Foundation predicts at least 560,000 epilepsy patients who suffer more than one seizure a year and who are not controlled by other drugs can benefit from valproic acid.

And because it appears to be the safest of the various anti-convulsive drugs, foundation director Jack McAllister said, "It offers the prospect of vastly improved therapy for people who are suffering from serious side effects of other drugs."

Blood donors amass 316 pints

The Red Cross Bloodmobile collected 316 pints of blood Monday in the Derby Food Center.

Alpha Kappa Lambda and Phi Gamma Delta are tied in the fraternity-sorority scholarship house competition with 25 percent of each group's membership donating blood Monday.

In the Residence Hall competition, Marlatt and Putnam Halls are tied with five percent each.

The bloodmobile station is open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. today, Thursday and Friday. Students with appointments are given preference but the station will take walk-ins.

Strange study centers on pyramid as alternative architectural form

By MICHELLE COCHRAN
Collegian Reporter

Strange studies are taking place at K-State. Jo-Anna MRoss, assistant professor of architecture, has been studying ancient Egyptian pyramids for two years.

"I became curious about the architectural form (of the pyramid)," she said.

"After I found it (the pyramid) to be compatible with nature, I wondered if there were any justifiable reasons to pursue the pyramid as an architectural form," MRoss said. "I believe, certainly there is."

The pyramid is a semi-octahedron based on the phi proportion, with a side-to-base relationship of 1 to 1.618, she said.

In studies done by Leonardo DaVinci and LeCorbusier (20th century French architect), the phi proportion was shown to exist in nature. It is characteristic of living organisms.

"Four tetrahedrons can be symmetrically arranged to clearly define a pyramid," MRoss said.

THIS IS geometrically stable because it is triangulated, she said.

It can be used for buildings and can be modified to be consistent to the phi proportion.

"I expect to find an architecture extremely compatible with nature," she said.

Geometrically it (tetrahedron) conveys a sense of spontaneity and excitement, MRoss said.

"The system of an arrangement of octahedrons lends itself to mass-produced building component systems which are economically feasible," she said.

"This is an area of architecture other architects aren't concerned with at this point," MRoss said, "They are more concerned with energy conservation."

Students in MRoss's Architecture Design Studio I experimented a year and a half ago with a strange phenomenon of the pyramid, known as pyramid power.

"We constructed out of cardboard, pyramids in the same proportion as the pyramids of King Khufu (Cheops)," she said.

THE BASE measured 15 inches and the height from the center of the base to the apex was the square root of 1,168, she said.

"We followed the suggested orientation of a north, south, east and west axis orientation," MRoss said. "Proportionally, we had a so-called 'correct' pyramid."

Control cubes were set up that had the same volume as the pyramids.

The centroid of the pyramid was located one third up from the base, she said. This was where the students located what they wanted to experiment with.

Fish, milk, and honey were used in the experiment. These were placed in the pyramids for 45 days and checked periodically, MRoss said.

"There seemed to be no noticeable change between the elements in the pyramids and those in the cubes," she said.

There was the same rate of deterioration of the elements in the cubes and those in the pyramids.

THE RESULTS (of the experiment) did not substantiate the theory of pyramid power, she said.

In studies done at other universities, facts were found consistent to those in the experiment at K-State's.

"It appears there is no magic and no scientific evidence of any significant energy phenomenon," she said.

"I've observed from readings of other scientists, who would have a more controlled approach, that there is no clear evidence of pyramid power, and, that the claims attributed to pyramid power are grossly exaggerated," MRoss said.

Senate considers separating funds for veterinary college

By LYNN BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

A bill in the Kansas Senate Ways and Means Committee, if passed, would make it easier for the College of Veterinary Medicine to request more money to maintain a low student-teacher ratio by funding it separately from the University.

Daniel Beatty, vice-president for business affairs, said by separating the budgets, the legislature would compare the budget for the college to budgets for veterinary colleges in other states.

THE COLLEGE is considered along with other colleges that require fewer teachers per student when it is funded with the University, he said.

If the bill is passed by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, it must also be passed on the Senate floor, the House Ways and Means Committee and the House before it is signed by the governor, Beatty said.

"If the budget is separated, the school of veterinary medicine can be provided enough teachers to meet their need for a lower ratio without requiring that staff be diverted from the budget for the entire University," Beatty said.

"The separate budget will reflect the higher cost necessary for the veterinary program and provide a basis for the legislature to provide funds to continue the specialized training necessary for this program," he said.

THE SEPARATE budget will only affect the education, staff and utility services, Beatty said.

Veterinary medicine students will maintain advantages of being part of the University such as living in residence halls. Veterinary students will also pay fees to support such things as the student health center and the K-State Union.

The veterinary college will not be a completely separate school if the separate funding is passed, Beatty said. It will still be answerable to the president of the University.

"This can be done because the separate budget involves only the salary and wages involved in the ratio of students to teachers," Beatty said. "The administrative services will still be under the University so no extra expenses are incurred for administration."

The FONE

Members of the FONE look on as Paul and Liz role play at the training session held to initiate volunteers.

'I feel the capacity to care gives life it's deepest significance.'

Volunteers use various methods to help the time between phone calls pass more quickly.

Story and photos by Susan Pfannmuller

The hometown goodbyes are still fresh in the memory. And often, a student at K-State may feel the cold and unfamiliar faces reflect no understanding.

But there is one place a student can go for understanding.

Above the couch in the FONE room hangs the sign, "I feel the capacity to care gives life its deepest significance."

The ability to care is what FONE is all about. It's for people who need to talk.

FONE is a volunteer telephone crisis center located at 1221 Thurston, in what is now the University For Man (UFM) building.

Liz is the assistant director of the FONE. (She requested her last name be kept confidential.)

People volunteer for FONE, Liz said, because they want to be of service to people.

"The FONE offers the opportunity to take this abstract idea (of helping people) and put it to practical use," she said.

Oftentimes, Liz said, the most important aspect to FONE is listening.

"THE REASONS for volunteering are relatively unimportant, however. What matters is that they are there to listen and to be a anonymous friend," she said.

The FONE conducts training sessions each semester informing volunteers how to handle various situations. This includes role-playing, lectures and counseling techniques.

Anonymity is stressed at the FONE, for both workers and callers.

"It may be difficult to believe a person, who doesn't know you, is willing to accept you, with all your faults, and care what happens to you," one volunteer said.

"THE ANSWER lies in the fact that various members accept, on faith, that everyone is worthwhile; everyone is worth caring about," she said.

According to those interviewed, a caller need not have a serious problem to talk with a FONE volunteer. Approximately one-third of the calls FONE receives are about loneliness, Liz said.

The volunteers at FONE say they are not professionals. They are, though, people who are willing to listen.

"We are a concerned group of individuals who profess to care and who have the resources to direct you to the person who might have the answer you need," a volunteer said.

"Small problems can be overwhelming. School has a tendency to make one lose his perspective. We are here to help put that perspective back," Liz said.

Cramped quarters force volunteers to talk to callers underneath the bed provided for the late night shifts.

NO STOPPING THEM...Timeouts by Oklahoma Coach Dave Bliss and the reaching hand of Oklahoma's Drew Head couldn't stop Steve Soldner (40) and his K-State Wildcat teammates as they rolled over the Sooners last night Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats win; Bring on the 'Hawks

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst Sports Editor

More points have been scored during K-State-Oklahoma football games than were scored last night in Ahearn Field House.

But the only thing that matters to the 'Cats and the 6,700 fans on hand is that K-State won the basketball game, 52-44, and advanced to the second round of the Big Eight post-season tournament in Kansas City this weekend.

The Sooners and the Wildcats showed signs of playing under the strain of 'win or stay at home for the rest of the year' in the first half as each team could not break through the other's defense and the tally at halftime read only 24-20, with Oklahoma leading.

"Wanting to get to Kansas City showed in the first half," said Wildcat head coach Jack Hartman.

"In the first half we were somewhat cautious and too deliberate. We tried too hard to be affective and we lost some of our aggressiveness," Hartman said.

THE TOTALS of the first half reflected the slow pace of the game. Oklahoma was 11-of-28 from the field for 39 percent and the 'Cats were 8-for-19 for 42 percent.

The Sooner defense held K-State to only six points in the final 10 minutes of the first half, with all six of those being tallied by senior guard Mike Evans.

In the second half the 'Cats were a team fighting to stay alive.

Led by the outside scoring of Curtis Redding, the inside play of Steve Soldner, the aggressive defense of Scott Langton and the ball control of Evans, the 'Cats opened up offensively and spelled d-o-o-m for the Sooners.

WITH THE SCORE tied at 34-34 and 12:48 left, the 'Cats, sparked by two steals by Langton, tossed in eight unanswered points for a 42-34 lead with 10:04 to play.

"I like to get in the way of as many (passes) as I can," Langton said about the steals. "I was just doing a better job of anticipating.

"I just made some good plays at the right time. If I wouldn't have done it, somebody else would have."

With the 'Cats in the lead, 46-42, and 6:12 remaining, K-State spread its offense and began working for the good shot.

This strategy worked, because in the next six minutes the 'Cats outscored the Sooners 6-2 to put the game away and bring a sigh of relief to the loyal fans that had anticipated the 'Cats victory and purchased tickets for Friday night's game.

"In the second half we played with strong determination," Hartman said. "We were more aggressive on offense."

HARTMAN SAID the 'Cats made no big adjustment at halftime.

"We discussed being too methodical and working a little harder to get open," Hartman said.

The 'Cats hit 62 percent from the field in the second half and 54 percent of their shots for the game.

Evans led all scorers with 14 points, followed by Steve Soldner and Curtis Redding with 12 apiece. Redding was held to two points in the first half while putting up only two shots from the field.

For the second game in a row, the 'Cats, going with the taller lineup of Rolando Blackman at guard, outrebounded the Sooners, 27-26.

HARTMAN admitted the game was hard fought.

"Oklahoma came to play," Hartman said. "They played tough and they played well."

With 17 seconds remaining, the crowd began to chant "Bring on the 'Hawks," in reference to Friday night's game against KU in Kansas City's Kemper Arena as K-State defends its Big Eight post-season tournament crown of a year ago.

It's still not too late to take Army ROTC.

Because there's a two-year Army ROTC program, in case you missed taking ROTC in your first two years of college.

You'll have to work to catch up, during the summer before your Junior year. At the summer make-up you will earn approximately $500.00 and four semester hours of credit. In two years you'll earn about $2,900 . . . more than half of which is tax free, and 16 semester hours of credit. Then you'll earn an officer's commission at the same time you earn a college degree. For more details, call CPT John Jones at 532-6754.

All-Big Eighters: Mike-first, Curt-second, Ro mentioned

Kansas City, Mo. (AP)—K-State's Mike Evans, who scored his first field goal three seconds into his college career and four years later became his conference's all-time point producer, heads the Associated Press 1977-78 All-Big Eight basketball team.

Evans, a 6-1 senior guard who was named Newcomer-of-the-Year after his freshman cam-pan guard sensation Darnell Valentine, a 6-1 guard, who topped the league in steals and assists while averaging 14 points per game.

From Iowa State, the panel chose Andrew Parker, a 6-5 junior who led the league this year with a 22.6 scoring average, and massive sophomore 6-11 center Dean Uthoff, one of the top rebounders in the nation who is being compared with former all-American Kent Benson.

Four years ago K-State coach Jack Hartman picked Evans to start in the first game of his freshman year. Three seconds had ticked off the clock when he poured in his first bucket, and he wound up scoring 30 points that night.

This year, although the team slumped to a 7-7 conference mark, Evans has retained his consistency, averaging 19.4 points per game, second in the league to Parker.

Second-team selections were Nebraska's Brian Banks, Missouri's Clay Johnson, Oklahoma State's Olus Holder, K-State's Curtis Redding and Nebraska's Carl McPipe.

K-State's Rolando Blackman was named to the honorable mention list along with Donnie Von Moore, Clint Johnson, Paul Mokeski and John Douglas from Kansas University.

paigh, landed on the first-team of the all-conference squad for the third straight year.

Heading into last night's post-season game with Oklahoma, the Goldsboro, N.C. native had pumped home 2,066 points.

Joining Evans on the elite squad are two members of the conference champions Kansas Jayhawks and two players most responsible for Iowa State achieving its finest league record since 1944.

LAWRENCE (AP)—Clint Johnson scored 16 points and Paul Mokeski added 16 rebounds last night to pace fifth-ranked Kansas to an easy 82-66 victory over Colorado in the first round of the Big Eight post-season tournament.

Kansas bolted to a 12-3 lead after three minutes and a rout seemed ordained until ragged play and a rash of turnovers turned the tempo back to the Buffs, who managed only to creep within 10 points.

Mizzou upsets ISU Cyclones

AMES, Iowa (AP)—Four clutch free throws by Curtis Berry, a key tip-in by Stan Ray and a 20-foot jumper by Clay Johnson with five seconds left let Missouri salvage a 65-64 victory over Iowa State in a first round game of the Big Eight post-season tournament last night.

The Tigers, 12-15 for the season, led 39-28 after a sluggish first half in which both teams combined for 21 turnovers.

Nebraska tops Oklahoma State

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Brian Banks scored 22 points and Carl McPipe added 18 to lead Nebraska to a 71-63 college basketball victory over Oklahoma State in the first round of the Big Eight Conference post-season Tournament Tuesday.

Banks, a 6-0 guard, consistently came up with key baskets that thwarted Cowboy comeback efforts.

The Huskers led by as many as 11 in the first half with Banks setting the pace with 12 points.

Nationalist Chinese women to bring basketball show against 'Cats tonight

Ahearn Field House will take on the festive international air for the second time this year when the K-State women's basketball team hosts the women's team from the Republic of China (Taiwan).

The K-State appearance marks the final outing for the Chinese National team on a 12 game tour of the U.S. that started in mid-February.

The Taiwanese, who were scheduled to play Drake there last night before coming to Manhattan, boast a perfect 10-0 mark against the U.S. teams they have played to date.

They've beaten the Western New England All-Stars, 81-74; Providence, 95-71; St. Louis Mermac Community College, 101-65; Snitz Manufacturing of Milwaukee, 94-70 and 92-71; Central Missouri State, 81-79; Oakland University, 105-78 and 98-73; Tennessee-Chattanooga, 78-70; and Slippery Rock, 97-80.

K-STATE carries an 18-13 overall record into tonight's game after wrapping up its regular season schedule with a 78-33, win over Wichita State Saturday night.

The Chinese National team, comprised mainly of members of that country's top three club teams, features many of the same players that competed on the Chinese National team that posted a 15-6 record during a 1976 visit to the U.S.

Wildcat head coach Judy Akers said her squad welcomes the opportunity to play the Chinese ball club.

"We are happy to have a chance to compete against a team from outside the United States," Akers said. "Undoubtedly this will be as close to international competition as some of our players will ever get and they are very thrilled."

"We at K-State are certainly looking forward to our second international event of the year," said Jersey Jermier, director of athletics.

JERMIER noted that fans not only would find the game entertaining, but certainly would enjoy the post-game show of native folk songs and dances performed by the Chinese National team members.

Wildcat women receive top seed for regional tournament

The K-State women's basketball team has received the top seed in the AIAW Region VI tournament to be held March 9-11 in Ahearn Field House. K-State will play Minnesota at 8:30 p.m. Thursday, March 9 in opening round action.

Second-seeded Missouri will play Iowa State at 3:30 p.m.. Third-seeded Kansas will play Northwest Missouri State at 6:30 p.m. Nebraska at Omaha will play Drake at 1:30 p.m..

Kansas, 20-7, Northwest Missouri State, 20-7, and Iowa State, 13-14, received at-large bids to the tournament.

K-STATE, 18-13, has defeated Iowa State and Northwest Missouri State once and Kansas twice this year. K-State has won two regional championships and has appeared in four-of-the-six national tournaments.

Last year the Wildcats finished with a 23-12 record and made it to the quarterfinals of the national tournament.

K-State Ambassadors help with alumni and recruiting

By JANE WINGER
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Ambassadors, selected to provide student representation at alumni functions, also play a vital role in recruiting students.

"I view the ambassadors as providing a service to the University," Amy Button, coordinator of student alumni relations, said.

She said the ambassadors will also assist the student body president in attending University functions.

Ambassador Stan Watt, senior in agricultural economics and business administration, said while attending alumni functions, the ambassadors will speak in-

Grants awarded to plant pathology

The K-State plant pathology department has been awarded two federal grants for plant cell culture research.

The first grant is a $50,000 grant over three years from the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) to research the plant regenerations of potatoes. This project is a joint effort between K-State plant pathologists and USDA scientists at an experiment station at Aberdeen, Idaho.

The research effort will be to evaluate, under laboratory and field conditions, potatoes which have been genetically altered in an attempt to secure improved disease resistance.

The second grant of $99,600 from the National Science Foundation supports the first year of research of a projected three-year program.

The project is aimed at improving technology for recovering mutations in plant cells and, through regeneration processes, using them for improving plant varieties.

formally on some aspect of K-State in which alumni would be interested.

AMBASSADOR Shari Hildebrand, junior in home economics, said it is going to take time to get a strong ambassador program set up, but believes its function is worthwhile.

"It is important as an ambassador to let K-State alumni know that there are concerned student interested in academics and in developing their leadership abilities," Hildebrand said.

In March, the ambassadors will attend an Alumni Association music festival at Washburn University in Topeka. The K-State symphony orchestra, concert jazz ensemble and concert choral groups will also perform.

The ambassadors will represent K-State at alumni functions across the state this spring and summer.

THE ALUMNI Association provides transportation and pays expenses for the ambassadors during these trips, Button said.

In conjunction with admissions and records, the ambassadors will also talk with students visiting the K-State campus.

"Students have a big influence in talking students into coming to K-State," Button said.

"We want to give visiting students an idea of K-State's friendly atmosphere," Watt said.

Button said she would also like to see the ambassadors take part in a citizens forum program started by President Acker.

In this program, representatives of the University go to communities and inform them about alumni concerns. It also lets community members offer suggestions and discuss programs and problems, Button said.

UPON completion of their duties, the two ambassadors will receive a $100 scholarship from Blue Key, the senior honorary which sponsors Homecoming, Hildebrand said.

The Homecoming royalty in the past have only been active the week of Homecoming but this is a year-long project, Button said.

The ambassadors were selected through a series of interviews and a campus-wide vote in which students saw pictures of the finalists and information about each candidate's activities.
